Editorial

"Man may not see thee do an impious deed;
But God thy very inmost thought can read."

There is a tolerance that is due to indifference. Of that Christians need to beware.

The surrendered life is the spiritually fruitful life. This is true because it is directed by the Holy Spirit, who is all-wise and all-powerful.

Enthusiasm is not less valuable in Christian work than it is in other undertakings. More of it would be helpful to many in the Church who have important interests committed to their hands.

It is said that wireless telegraphy saved twenty-six American vessels during the past year. We wonder how many disasters were averted by "wireless" messages from Christians on bended knees to the Heavenly Father's throne?

Courtesy—considerateness of others—is a virtue well worth striving to attain. It is one of the finer manifestations of that trait of character termed "brotherly kindness" by St. Peter in his memorable enumeration of the Christian graces.

The death notices in the secular papers have lately been very numerous. How fast those about us are marching to eternity! Are we faithfully endeavoring to help them to prepare for the summons to the tomb and to the judgment? Ere we are aware they may seem to be gazing at us reproachfully from the narrow coffin. Let us make the most of present opportunities to impress for good our fellow-pilgrims. None of us can remain on earth long. What we are to do either for others or for ourselves must be done quickly. A profound and ever-conscious realization that the chief and abiding sphere of humanity is somewhere in the realm invisible is a prerequisite to the highest living and noblest doing.

The world needs a religion of power—one that can regenerate the soul and impart to it strength to resist the temptations of Satan. It is not the doctrines of Christianity that save men, but its dynamics—the vital forces into touch with which its teachings bring them. The supreme function of the Gospel is to instruct human spirits how to find the triune God and to become the recipients of the spiritual life and vigor that he stands ready to bestow. If a person stops short of being thus directed by the Divine Revelation, he will eternally perish, though he may often read the precious volume and be intellectually familiar with its contents from cover to cover. It is not KNOWING the Word, but DOING it that leads to pardon, peace, conscious communion with the risen Christ, and finally to the heavenly home.

RICH IN QUALITY, IF NOT IN QUANTITY.

The best evidence of the worth of Christianity is found in the men and women that it makes. Paul called the Philippian disciples his "joy and crown." Even in heathen lands the achievements of Christianity in this respect are accorded recognition. An illustration of this was recently given in the Empire of Japan, as is shown by the following quotation from The Outlook:

"It is said that only a quarter of one per cent of the fifty million people in Japan believe in Christianity. Hence the news is all the more surprising that half of the decorations to educators bestowed at the coronation of the new Emperor have gone to Christians.

"Writing from Kyoto, where the crowning took place, the Rev. Otis Cary, Secretary of the American Board's (Congregational) Japan mission, points out the contrast between this event and the coronation of the late Emperor. Then Christianity was strictly prohibited. Now among those honored, posthumous Court rank is given to Neesima (the Japanese lad who ran away from Japan, was educated in America, and returned to work for his country) and to Yamamoto, who united with him in founding the Doshisha University. Other educators who were honored include President Harada, of the Doshisha; Dr. Motoda, of St. Paul's College (Episcopal); President Naruse, of the Congregational Woman's College; Mr. Ebara, a Methodist; and two women, one at the head of a large Presbyterian institution, and the other connected with a Methodist school—all Japanese, of course. Some Christians were also included among the business men who received decorations.

"Thus, though the numerical percentage of Christians in Japan is very small, it contains material evidently precious to the Japanese Government."

NONE OF THEM SHOULD BE NEGLECTED.

The Sunday school is a great institution, but there is no need of trying to claim for it more than it is entitled to. When it is said that approximately 90 per cent of the members received into the Church come from it, it should not be inferred that the credit for this belongs to it alone. These are largely the children of the Christian homes of the Church, and other spiritual agencies are co-operating with the Sunday school in effecting their religious development. From among these same children no doubt the Church would chiefly secure its membership if the Sunday school did not exist, though the increase we dare say would be considerably less. We write this not to disparage the magnificent work that our Sunday schools are doing, but in the interest of truth and justice. Let us not overlook the value of the other forces that are contributing largely to the upbuilding of the Kingdom—the prayer meeting, the Epworth League, the Woman's Missionary Society, personal evangelism, and the work of the pastor in and out of the pulpit. The ideal Church is one in which all arms of service are given due attention and are brought to the highest possible state of efficiency. The wise minister will neglect none of them.

PERIL IN THE PASSION FOR NUMBERS.

Nearly all the Churches are growing in numbers, but too much store should not be set by that. Some of the heathen faiths also are increasing in numerical strength. So are the Mormons and Spiritualists, and none in this respect is outstripping Roman Catholicism. The more important question is, Whether our Churches are growing in Christlikeness—in holiness? And when one observes the extent to which their members are indulging in dancing, card-playing, and theater-going, and notes how much money they are spending upon themselves and how little they are giving to the cause of Christ, along with the lack of a devotional spirit among them, one who is given to thoughtful reflection can scarcely keep from feeling some uneasiness as to the situation and final outcome. There is little value in a name to live without the life—in a mere outward profession of Christianity without its transforming powers at work in the soul. There have been great Churches in the course of human history, with vast numbers of adherents, that were well-nigh destitute of the true spiritual religion. Oh! let us not only bring people into the Church, but let us also bring them to Christ. If we stop short of this, nothing of vital importance will have been accomplished, either in the way of saving souls or of really strengthening Zion. We doubt if it would be putting it too strongly if we were to affirm that the indiscriminate haste with which all sorts of persons are now rushed into the Church has become one of the perils of Christianity.

LAYMEN'S MISSIONARY MEETING.

A series of meetings in the interest of the work of the Laymen's Missionary Movement will be held in New Orleans, January 23-26. A number of distinguished speakers will be present, our Church being represented by Bishop W. R. Lambuth, Dr. W. W. Pinson, and Dr. E. H. Rawlings. The meetings will begin on Sunday, the 23d inst., and will be continued through the following Wednesday. A rally of the Methodist forces will be held on Wednesday afternoon. The Protestant Christians of the city should seek to make the presence of these widely known missionary leaders count for the utmost possible. Immediately following the work done here, a similar series of meetings will be held in Jackson, Miss.

Bishop Thoburn, who has long been noted for his spirituality, recently said: "We need a great revival of religion and I believe it is coming. The religion of the present day is not deep enough."

INSIDE.

No father's house is full,
E'en though there seem no resting place for more;
Forgiving arms and doors do open wide
If one repentant child implore
Outside.

No mother's heart is full,
Unless it be with longing, burning wild—
Heart-throbbing that no cheerful face can hide—
The wish to clasp her sinning child
Outside.

God's flock is never full;
Fear not to enter boldly at his door—
None ever were refused who there applied;
He hath abiding place for more
Inside.

EFFICIENCY.

By Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr.

This is the day of efficiency. A few years ago a certain gentleman took charge of a manufacturing establishment in New England. After making a thorough investigation of conditions in the establishment of which he had become the manager, he reorganized the whole business upon the basis of efficiency. His reorganization resulted in the reversing of the fortunes of that concern and making it to be a successful institution. This was the beginning. Since that time efficiency has become the watchword of all who are pursuing what men are pleased to term success.

This cry of efficiency has invaded the Church of Christ. In the commercial world, the manager of the establishment bends every energy for his own personal development and equipment. He leaves nothing undone in order that he may become the better prepared for the work that is before him to be done. Having done this, he secures the very best material equipment possible in order that his business may be placed in the very front ranks of commercial enterprise. Then he surrounds himself with the most capable force of assistants that the financial strength of his firm will allow him to be able to employ. Now, he demands of each one of these that every one do his share and manage his department on the most paying basis. It may not always be that the most paying basis is the most economical. Indeed, it is often true that the most paying basis is far from being the most economical. When there comes out of this organization the production of a large volume of business that pays good dividends to the stockholders, that manager and his management are said to be efficient.

Now, we baptize efficiency and take it into the Church. No Church, Christian organization, preacher of the gospel nor any Christian worker can make any sort of progress toward efficiency in the work of God without first of all being vitally connected with God. This must be taken for granted and must be set down as one of the very fundamental principles. Without this, there can be no genuine efficiency in God's great enterprise of saving a lost world from sin. However, the time has come when there is something more needed than this alone, though this is far and away the most important requisite toward efficiency in the work of the Church.

No one seeking to achieve efficiency in doing the work of God can hope to reach the highest point without having the necessary assistance and equipment. This equipment does not refer merely to an education, though this is much needed. There have been some of the most efficient of God's workers that the world has ever seen who have had very little of education. Dwight L. Moody is an example. Moody had with him Ira Sankey; and who will say that the singing of Sankey and his direction of the music in Moody's meetings did not make Moody a more efficient worker for the cause of God in the world? In this present time Billy Sunday is one of God's most efficient workers. Before he will ever agree to come into a city to enter upon a campaign there are certain very definite requirements that he demands shall be met. These have to do with the sympathetic co-operation of the people of God in that city and also with the taking care of certain definite material needs for carrying on the meeting. He demands that there shall be built a tabernacle according to the plans and specifications that he himself shall give. Why is this? It is because he knows that he can be a more efficient workman for the Lord when he has the sympathetic co-operation of the Christian people of the city and when he has the necessary material needs supplied.

This is true in all our strivings after efficiency in the work of God. One man, all alone, cannot by himself run a great manufacturing establishment and make it the most efficient possible. Neither can he do this without having certain very definitely needed material equipment. This takes money. It is the same in the work of our Lord, having at first granted the vital connection that men must have with God. For a Sunday school superintendent, a preacher in charge, or anyone else in the work of God to believe that he can achieve the greatest efficiency alone through his own efforts and without the help of others and without certain needed material equipment means the perpetuation of an enterprise paying but small returns, if any, in immortal souls saved from sin. In order to escape this result of non-efficiency two things are needed aside from the great fundamental principle already mentioned. These are sympathetic human co-operation and money to secure the needed material equipment. The Church can supply these. The Church must supply these. When this is done, we see an efficient establishment. When it is not done, then we see an inefficient work being carried on in the name of the God who supplies abundantly all the needed human sympathy and also the material equipment to his people who hold this back from his great work in the world. Shall it be that men will require his work to go on like making brick without straw? Let it come to pass that every servant of the living God rise up to render all the assistance possible for him to render, whether this be of personal efforts put forth or of money invested in the cause of the Lord. Then will it come to be that there will be far greater efficiency in the work for God in the world.

ATTACKING THE ATONEMENT.

The Continent, in a recent leading editorial, repeats its attack on the Presbytery of Alabama, because, on his own confession before it, the Presbytery informed Dr. Edmonds that he is not in harmony with the Confession of Faith and teachings of the Southern Presbyterian Church, as "He does not believe that Christ died as our vicarious Substitute, to satisfy divine justice and deliver us from the judicial penalty of the law." The Continent, in an introductory disquisition on theology and philosophy, admits the right of the Church to erect creeds as a means of defense. The Southern Church has a creed, and in the very heart of that creed, which Dr. Edmonds formally vowed to accept and teach as truth, there stands the statement: "Christ executeth the office of a Priest in his once offering up of himself a sacrifice to satisfy divine justice, and reconcile us to God, and in making continual intercession for us." In his recent confession he declared he did not believe this, and without formal process, the Presbytery, on his own confession, declared he was not in harmony with the Presbyterian Church (South), and according to our information he withdrew and formed an independent church, with 250 members of his former church. This fact of withdrawal making judicial process on his own confession unnecessary was to his credit. It would be well if more of his kind did the same thing. The Continent might say that the vicarious atonement is a peculiar doctrine of the Presbyterian Church, but consultation of the Standards of both the Catholic and Protestant Churches will show that this doctrine of Christ's death as a ransom, as a satisfaction of God's justice, and therefore a reconciliation to God, is contained in every one of these creeds, and is therefore the universal testimony of the Church. Not only so, but it will be found that remission through blood, ransom by giving of life, and vicarious suffering and death is an inseparable fact of the Bible Atonement. Therefore, the session of the South Highland Church, and the Presbytery of North Alabama, were faithful to their vows, and did their duty as men and as Christians, in showing Dr. Edmonds his errors. The Continent, on the other hand, in condemning the Presbytery, throws its influence not only against Presbyterianism, but against the faith of the Church, as taught in the Holy Scriptures, and it puts itself squarely on the side of modern liberalism. The Continent did not right and truly try the case, because it omitted weighty evidence. According to Dr. Edmonds' statement before his Session, this was not the only doctrine he denied, but he frankly said he did not agree with the teachings of the Church, and specified several places with which he disagreed and declared that he had been thinking it was his duty to resign the Presbyterian Church and join the Congregationalists. The Continent says the test of a minister's soundness is his ability to preach the atonement in such a way as to cause men "to repent of their sins in sorrow for the sufferings of Christ." How can a man do this who denies the facts of the Atonement? Dr. Edmonds, tested by his standard, certainly failed. He grieved the hearts of five hundred people, because he denied the real power and purpose of their Lord's sufferings, and made them of none effect, and by the same teaching he split this church, and he poisoned the hearts of 250 people, and led them out of the Church. Surely this is a warning to all Sessions to be watchful and to protect their flocks faithfully.

The Continent indulges in the hackneyed statement of modern liberals, and says that such actions as that of the Presbytery of North Alabama denies to the present-day Church the presence of the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit is with the Church to-day as in all ages. But the work he does to-day is not that which he did at other times. Then he inspired men to speak and record the Revelation. This is completed, and this work is no longer needed. He gave to men the gifts of tongues and of prophecy. These, too, are no longer needed, and are not now given. Men still need to be regenerated and sanctified and empowered to do the work of to-day, and this he is accomplishing in them. Whatever the Spirit does, let it be surely known that he does nothing contrary to the Scriptures which he formerly inspired. —The Presbyterian.

RELIGION REGENERATIVE.

The aim of a true religion is not to gloss over sin, or to offer a sop to the conscience; but to regenerate the hearts of men, and to put them into moral sympathy with the purposes of their Maker. A clergyman, after several unavailing attempts to reform a profligate, received this curt reply: "It is all in vain! You can't get me to change my religion!" "I do not want to do that," rejoined the minister; "I want religion to change you!" If the kind of faith a man professes is having no regenerative effect whatever upon his life, he would better transfer his regard to some other form of belief, for his religion has no real worth. Only the religion that changes us is the kind of religion from which we should never change.—Zion's Herald.

CHINA'S VITAL QUESTION.

The monarchist movement in China is the subject of an article in the North American Review, by Prof. J. W. Jenks, who has given much thought to the problems of modern China's government, and is an enthusiastic admirer of President Yuan Shih-k'ai (who, since this article was written, has become Emperor). Like other observers of China's present situation, Prof. Jenks identifies the monarchistic movement with the militaristic. He quotes the words of a distinguished English newspaper correspondent at Peking, Mr. William H. Donald

"The military party have been at the bottom of the movement for the re-establishment of the monarchical system of government from the outset. Even since the establishment of the republic the President has been periodically approached by high military officials and urged to change the system of government. Invariably he replied that as a republic had been definitely established, it would be gravely improper for him even to discuss such a step. But, while their personal loyalty to the President has in no way diminished, the military officials have of late become more and more insistent, and as they were practically unanimous, it was impossible for the President, with the solemn duty of preserving internal peace and concord always before him, to dismiss them with a blank refusal. He was faced by a powerful body holding very emphatic views, and if he had persisted in an irreconcilable attitude, the result would probably have been the inception of intrigues and the formation of secret societies to bring about by force what he refused to grant. The President, therefore, was faced by a very difficult problem. The most despotic and autocratic ruler, if all his most powerful supporters were united in a desire to compel him to take a certain course, would not be able forcibly to resist them. That was exactly the position in which President Yuan Shih-k'ai found himself. He could not openly resist the demand made by the military party, the most powerful force in the State, but he could, and did, divert its activities into a proper and constitutional channel."

As to President Yuan's intentions, Prof. Jenks claims no prophetic gift, but thinks that we may reasonably judge a man's intentions from his past. He reminds us that Yuan saved his ruler, the Empress Dowager, from her own kinsman by marriage, the Emperor Kwang-Shu. He saved the Imperial son of his inveterate enemy, Ch-un, the regent. Furthermore, it is frequently forgotten that when the republic began four years ago in China, the little Manchu Emperor was retained in his title and his civil list. He is a pensioner of the Chinese Republic.

"The wisdom and patriotism of Yuan Shih-k'ai have not as yet failed China. Is there any real reason for thinking that he will fail now? Thrice during the Manchu crisis he declined a marquisate, and twice when the late Empress Lung Yu invited him to ascend the throne he refused. The elections seem to show that a crown will be offered to Yuan Shih-k'ai; it may be that real public opinion ascertained for him in other ways will declare to the contrary. In either case it may well be that Yuan Shih-k'ai will confound those who, throughout his career, have accused him of plotting and planning for his own ambition; that he will consolidate at his back the growing strength of southern Chinese progressive opinion; and so at last find himself free to carry into effect, with the certainty of popular approval, those great practical reforms which are vitally necessary in China, in order that she may stand upon her own feet and be no longer menaced by fear of foreign aggression."

In his acceptance of the crown there is nothing fundamentally inconsistent with the conception of Yuan's character which Prof. Jenks elaborates in his article. As President of China, Yuan had already defied the military cabal and he had repeatedly refused the crown. His final acceptance of it may be taken as an indication that China merely desires to give him a longer tenure of office than the Presidency.—American Review of Reviews.

WHY CHRISTIANS ARE AGGRESSIVE.

There is sometimes a feeling that Christians are too aggressive. It is claimed that they should live sweet and wholesome and attractive lives, and then be content to depend upon such sweet living for the attractive power in the advance of Christianity. The charge of being too aggressive is especially made, by some, against missions, and especially against missions for the Jews.

The commission of Christ, in its very nature and form, is aggressive. "The King's business requireth haste." The command is to "Go ye into all the world." When missions or any other form of Christian work ceases to be aggressive, it will soon cease to exist. The following example is to the point: A Jew asked a missionary, "What makes you Christians so aggressive?" The missionary answered:

"I will tell you. We Christians have something! How is it with you? You have nothing—neither God nor idols! You have no country, you have no temple, you have no altar, you have no sacrifice, you have no priest, you have no ephod, you have nothing!

"Once God was among you. You were thus marked out from all other nations. Once the cloud, symbol of his presence, filled the tabernacle, afterwards the temple, and he gave his communications by the Urim and Thummim on the holy breastplate of God's high priest. Now your name is a by-word and a reproach in every land. Think of it; God's chosen people! Now we, who were 'dogs of the Gentiles,' 'without God and without hope in this world,' having received Jesus, the Son of God, your rejected Messiah and the Savior of the world, as our Savior and Lord—we are rich! Infinitely rich! Redeemed by Christ, all things are ours.

"We have the immediate presence of God, the holiest in heaven as our temple! We have Christ, the Holy One of God, as our altar. We have Jesus, the crucified, as our sweet-smelling Sacrifice!

"We have the risen Christ within the veil as our High Priest, in God's presence for us, and coming again as Savior into the air to change our bodies of humiliation to his likeness, and to receive us to himself.

"We have the Holy Spirit enabling us to draw nigh to the throne by the blood of Christ, and to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ, and down here on earth to show forth the praises of him who hath called us out of darkness into his marvelous light. Yes, my dear friend, we are saved through the crucified and risen Christ, and are waiting his return for us.

"This, this is why we are so aggressive, desiring that you, God's chosen people, might have your spiritual eyes opened and recognize in Jesus of Nazareth the crucified Savior, the long-looked-for Messiah, the great antitype of the rejected Joseph, the rejected Moses, and the despised and rejected One of the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah."—The Presbyterian.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

Finding myself a boarder in old Centenary College, amid scenes quite familiar when pastor at old Jackson just twenty years ago, and recalling the days of my college life at Tulane, I find myself being made the younger for the experience.

My appointment being near Shreveport, and it being more convenient to live in this city, through the courtesy of Dr. Wynn, I am enrolled as a boarder with a wee-bit more freedom of movement than the student body.

I find Shreveport a busy little city, whose growth and improvement is easily noted with each passing year. Methodism is stronger proportionately here than in any other part of the State of Louisiana, and is making itself felt throughout the city. First Church is a great plant, and one with a future. Noel Memorial has great possibilities before it, and as centers of population shift it will soon become a strong factor in the Church life of this city.

The other churches I have not had opportunity to visit, but, as heard from, they are all in excellent shape.

Centenary College, under the guidance of Dr. R. H. Wynn, is doing fine work, and I fear we do not realize over the Conference the full worth of that which is being done by Dr. Wynn and others. The student body are a well-behaved, studious set of young men. I learn from the faculty and President that there is less of disorderly conduct and more application to books this session than is usual.

When at Jackson I was much impressed with the advantage of the small college. Frequently it is overlooked by many and looked down upon by the majority. However, the work done and the quality of men which are its product compare favorably with any institution of larger size and greater fame, and to the advantage of the smaller college. In the large schools the boy is lost sight of; there is but little personal touch, and association with the professors, save in classroom, is impossible. In the small school, on the other hand, the boy is not overlooked, is easily reached by the motive thought of the morale of the school and has access to the faculty at almost any time.

It is not the size of the school which counts, or the amount of salary paid the teachers, but the contact, the touch, the association. It is not the number of volumes on the shelf, but the number read; it is not the number of teachers or the number of their degrees, but the amount of the force and uplift of contact and comradeship which really count. Here the smaller college has much the advantage; teacher and student becoming friends, the superior lifts the inferior. For is not this the force and worth of college training?

Centenary may lack in many things the large schools possess, but Centenary is prepared to do good work, and is doing it admirably. Could the Methodism of the State realize its opportunity for service in this plant, its problems would be solved.

We need more students and more equipment. Can not the pastors solve one of these needs, and the friends of Christian education solve the other?

I am personally enjoying my life in the College, and my field of labor being among old friends, I am anticipating a most delightful year.

JOHN F. FOSTER.

A REMARKABLE REPLY.

The Bible presents us with a view of a God vast enough to fill the infinite spaces, and tender and loving enough to fit down by his grace into the niches and grooves of our innermost experience. A freethinker met a plain countryman going to church. He asked him where he was going. "To church, sir!" "What to do there?" "To worship God." "Pray tell me whether your God is a great God or a little God?" "He is both, sir." "How can he be both?" "He is so great, sir, that the heavens cannot contain him, and so little that he can dwell in my heart." The freethinker declared that this simple answer from the plain peasant had more effect upon his mind than all the volumes which learned doctors had written against him. The simple are often wise, and there is no telling when the Holy Spirit may take even the utterance of a child to convict an astute thinker of sin, righteousness, and judgment to come.—Zion's Herald.

EVANGELISTIC CONFERENCE.

There was held in Nashville, December 28, 29, an Evangelistic Conference for the evangelists and other preachers and laymen of our Church interested in the great work of evangelism. It was, from every standpoint, a successful Conference, and the good influence of the meeting should be felt throughout the Church in renewed interest in our evangelistic efforts. The meeting opened on the morning of December 28, three splendid addresses being delivered at that morning session by Dr. James W. Moore, of Chattanooga, Tenn., Dr. O. E. Goddard, of Galveston, Tex., and Dr. W. J. Young, of the Candler School of Theology at Atlanta. Some of the other speakers heard during the session were: Bishop James Atkins, Dr. George R. Stuart, Dr. E. G. B. Mann, Dr. C. W. Tadlock, and Dr. P. E. Zartman, of Winona Lake, Ind. Among the evangelists who delivered addresses were: Revs. H. C. Morrison, D.D., D. L. Coale, H. W. Bromley, W. C. Swope, Raymond Browning, G. A. Klein, Bob Jones, Burke Culpepper, Thurston B. Price, L. B. Bridgers, Walt Holcomb. The officers for the Methodist Evangelists Association for 1916 are: Dr. John M. Moore, President; Dr. H. C. Morrison, Vice President; and the members of the Board of Control, Revs. H. C. Morrison, Bob Jones, Burke Culpepper, L. B. Bridgers, and D. L. Coale.

The general evangelists of our Church are: Rev. J. B. Andrews, Siloam Springs, Ark.; Rev. J. M. Bass, Macon, Ga.; Rev. L. B. Bridgers, of Gainesville, Ga.; Rev. J. E. Brown, Siloam Springs, Ark.; Rev. Raymond Browning, Lincolnton, N. C.; Rev. D. L. Coale, San Antonio, Tex.; Rev. Burke Culpepper, Memphis, Tenn.; Rev. J. E. Green, Houston, Tex.; Rev. J. O. Hanes, Birmingham, Ala.; Rev. Walt Holcomb, Nashville, Tenn.; Rev. Bob Jones, Montgomery, Ala.; Rev. G. A. Klein, Nashville, Tenn.; Rev. H. C. Morrison, D.D., Wilmore, Ky.; Rev. T. B. Price, St. Louis, Mo.; Rev. W. C. Swope, Charleston, Mo. In addition to these are some fifty Conference evangelists regularly appointed to this work. The year just closed was a most successful one from the standpoint of the evangelistic effort of the Church, and there is promise of even better results for the year before us. That, at least, is the faith of those who were so fortunate as to be able to attend the recent Conference in Nashville.

A CHRISTMAS ECHO.

Rev. Dr. Fred A Perry, pastor of the Plymouth Methodist Protestant Church, Adrian, Michigan, sent to his church members and to his friends as a Christmas message this year the following beautiful and helpful lines:

How good it is to be alive, and each new day
Enjoy the light of sun; and then at night to say,
God's stars are shining.
How great to find in each allotted task a joy,
And trust—tho' storm-clouds rage, and cherised fruits destroy—
God's silver lining.
How glad to greet each new-found friend with love sincere;
And wounded sore, with bleeding heart through many a tear.
God's love divining.
How sweet it is at close of day, when lights are out,
And friends are gone, to rest and trust with out a doubt:
God's arms entwining.

JAMES SIMEON HUDSON.

James S. Hudson was born and reared on a farm in Mississippi and spent practically all the fifty-seven years of his useful life in the State of his nativity, passing to his reward at Batesville, Miss., on Dec. 19, 1915, near his boyhood home. His parents were Methodists and in early life he united with their Church, remaining a consistent member to the end.

Lacking in means and delicate in health, it required a heroic struggle for him to fulfill the ambition of his youth and secure an education. Persistent effort and indomitable will, however, triumphed over adversity and obstacle and enabled him to attain his goal. Together with his wife, who was Miss Ada Kyle—herself an efficient teacher of broad culture and strong personality—he became one of the successful teachers of the State.

Even while teaching, however, his greatest work was done outside the classroom. Without neglecting his duty as an instructor, he was ever turning his eyes toward the great future when his boys and girls would be men and women. Many of us will never forget the long private walks, the inspirational conferences, during which he unfolded the possibilities of life for attainment, achievement and unselfish service. With the benediction of these personal touches upon us, we were ashamed to do less than our best.

Mr. Hudson was one of the few teachers accumulating any money. By rigid economy, he gathered a fund of ready cash, never large enough to rank him as a rich man, never too small to make a generous loan to a boy or a girl struggling for an education. In the past thirty years, some two-score young people have been the recipients of his favor in this way. I dare say these are his most enduring monument. Those of us thus favored will not forget our faithful friend, our kindly counsellor, our noble benefactor. Peace to his ashes and the blessing of heaven upon his sorrowing wife and son.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

We have been asked a number of times as to the legal status of the Bible in the public schools in the several States of the Union. In answer to this inquiry, let us say briefly that in eleven States, and in the District of Columbia, the law is expressly favorable to the use of the Bible. These States are Georgia, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Massachusetts, Mississippi, New Jersey, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, South Dakota. In Mississippi the constitution of the State expressly makes provision for the reading of the Bible in the schools. The North Dakota law declares that the Bible "shall not be deemed a sectarian book," and that "it shall not be excluded from any public school." In eleven other States the courts, or the State superintendents upheld by the courts, have decided that the use of the Bible in the schoolroom is lawful. In Maine, Michigan, Kentucky, Ohio and West Virginia, favorable decisions have been rendered by the several supreme courts of those States. There are thirteen States in which there are no laws bearing directly upon the subject; and in eight States opinions have been rendered against the use of the Bible in the schools. But there are only two States, Illinois and Wisconsin, in which the Supreme Court has so decided. On the whole, it may be said that there is a healthful reaction favorable to the use of the Bible in the schools, and a growing popular sentiment in favor of a more thorough teaching of Christian ethics as an essential part of the education of American children.—Methodist Recorder.

BILLY SUNDAY IN THE EAST.

Mr. Sunday has completed a greatly blessed labor in Syracuse, N. Y. It covered a period of five weeks. There was a notable absence of organized opposition. The failure of the opposition at Philadelphia and Paterson seemed to ruin its courage. The usual accompaniments of the tabernacle work were all vigorously pursued. The largest accession for one meeting in the history of this work occurred at Syracuse. On the third Sabbath, more than 2400 professed Christ at the tabernacle, and 200 more at an overflow meeting, making 2600, within 400 of the day of Pentecost. There were more than 10,591 professions at the tabernacle, and 4000 at meetings outside the tabernacle. Mr. Sunday has accepted appointment to conduct a four months' labor in New York City, in the forepart of 1917. The sound believers are looking forth to these meetings with great expectation, fellowship and prayer for the manifestation of the Holy Spirit.—The Presbyterian.

MRS. E. H. MOUNGER CALLED HOME.

Dear Dr. Meek: Mrs. Sallie Markham Mounger, wife of Dr. E. H. Mounger, of the Mississippi Conference, died at the Touro Infirmary in New Orleans, after a brief illness on December 27, and was buried from the Main Street Church in Hattiesburg, Miss., on the afternoon of December 29. For nearly seventeen years as the wife of an itinerant preacher she filled her place with honor to the Church, and came to the end with a submissive spirit and a joyous hope. A suitable memoir will be furnished later.

GEO. H. THOMPSON.

It is with sincere sorrow that we publish the above announcement. Sister Mounger was truly a woman of noble Christian character, and she and her beloved husband were companions in the fullest sense, being nearly always seen together on the trains, at the Annual Conference, and all other occasions upon which either of them was in attendance. Their devotion to each other was beautiful, and our heart goes out in tender sympathy to Dr. Mounger in his great bereavement. May the Heavenly Father have him and all others who mourn with him in this trying hour in his gracious keeping!

DISTRICT STEWARDS' MEETING.

The Port Gibson District stewards met in the parlor of the Port Gibson Female College on Tuesday, December 22, 1915, at 11:30 a. m. A large number of both pastors and district stewards were present. By invitation the pastors present took part in the discussions of the meeting.

Rev. M. B. Sharbrough, the new presiding elder, presided in his usual happy manner and suggested plans for a forward movement in all departments of church work in the district. The suggestions met with enthusiastic approval by all present.

The presiding elder's salary for the current Conference year was fixed at $2200 and ordered to be apportioned to the several charges in the district on the percentage basis, being based on the assessments for pastors in 1915.

Resolutions were adopted to make immediate provision for the liquidation of the debt on the old district parsonage at Port Gibson.

T. J. O'NEIL, Secretary.

THE VIEW OF A GREAT PREACHER.

There are those who appear to think that the outcry against the danger of unsound teaching in this day is due to ignorance and narrowness, and that it is an evidence of scholarship and breadth to be tolerant and fearless of it. This conception, however, lacks much of being correct. That this is true is shown by the following from a leaflet issued by the Wesley Bible Union (England), for which we are indebted to The Bible Champion (New York):

"Is Wesleyan Methodism in Peril?

From all over the Connection earnest Methodists have written to answer this question, and there can be no doubt that the peril is more grave than words can express. But throughout Methodism there is no one whose warning will carry so much weight as that of the Rev. Dr. W. L. Watkinson, whose letter to the Secretary of the Union we give below:

'December, 1914.

'Dear Mr. Morton:

You know how entirely I am with you in conviction and feeling.

Methodism seems strangely insensible to the deadly peril that besets her. Just as the nation was deaf to Lord Roberts, and would not know until the hour of fate struck, so our Church today is heedless of your warnings, blind to every disturbing sign, deaf to every awakening voice, and it appears will be, until ———. You must do your duty even when you are unto them as one that mocks.

They will not see that the worst thing 'made in Germany' was the theology.

With sincere sympathy and prayer,

Yours affectionately,

WM. L. WATKINSON.'"

It is doubtful whether any other living Methodist preacher can compare with Dr. Watkinson as a strong and suggestive pulpit man. He is possessed of an accurate and wide-reaching scholarship, and we are inclined to think that his published sermons are about the best we have seen from any minister who has wrought in the Church within recent decades. A statement from so authoritative a source cannot easily be brushed aside as not deserving consideration. When such a man speaks so earnestly, it well behooves all who love the Kingdom of Christ to ponder carefully his words.

Extra-London," counting all suburbs, 7,251,358; Greater New York, including Westchester and New Jersey suburbs, in 1914, 7,383,871. These figures show New York City 245,525 larger than the county of London, and New York environs 132,513 greater than Greater London.

THE PRESIDENT'S WORKING HABITS.

From the standpoint of office routine, punctuality is the great dominating characteristic of the present occupant of the White House, if we may trust the statements of his secretaries as embodied in an article on "The Working Habits of the President of the United States," contributed to the American Magazine for January, by James Hay, Jr.

Not only is President Wilson punctual himself, day in and day out, but he requires punctuality from others, including members of Congress and heads of departments. Senators and Representatives calling at the White House by appointment find that each conference is expected to last from three to five minutes. After each caller leaves the office, Mr. Wilson himself makes a shorthand note of the caller's business. (It is stated, by the way, that the President is himself an expert stenographer, and that a page from his notebook is "as clear and clean-cut as a piece of engraving.")

Following is the daily program of this very hard worked and very punctual man:

"His personal stenographer, C. L. Swem, who was with him in New Jersey, reports to the study in the White House proper at 8:55, at which time the President dictates replies to the important letters which have been received at the White House offices the day before. At 10 o'clock he takes his place at his desk in his private office in the White House offices. Between 10 and 10:30 he attends to whatever routine work is possible before he begins to keep the appointments he or his secretary has made several days before. Each caller usually gets five minutes, some of them three, and a few fifteen. He keeps a card on his desk showing the list of appointments, and checks off with his own hand each appointment as it is kept. (I saw one of these cards on which he had run his pencil through the name of a prominent politician and had written after the name in blue pencil, 'He did not come.' That 'He did not come' looked ominous.)

"At 12:59 the President, having concluded the appointments, leaves the office and goes to the White House for his 1 o'clock luncheon.

"At 2 o'clock he receives in the East Room delegations of tourists who want to shake his hand, and, if it is necessary, he has a long conference with some member of the Cabinet or a diplomat. After that, he plays golf, takes a walk through the shopping district of Washington, or goes for an automobile ride.

"At 7 o'clock he has dinner.

"He goes to bed between 10 o'clock and midnight, never after midnight."

The President's office methods are described as remarkable for accuracy and exactness. He files all his important papers with his own hands in a filing case just back of his chair in the White House study. His powers of concentration are great, and after devoting his mind entirely to a single subject, on dictating a speech or a state paper, or writing it out in shorthand and then reading it to his stenographer, practically no changes are required.—American Review of Reviews.

"THE GOSPEL HAS NEVER LOST ITS POWER."

By Hilary Westbrook.

We frequently hear the unjust statement that the Church is comparatively dead spiritually, and that the gospel message has well-nigh lost its power and grip upon the children of men. This is erroneous and pessimistic. They who have honored the Holy Ghost in all walks of life as an optimist have found that the old, rugged gospel will cause men to desist from sin, and come to Jesus for help right on after the camp-meeting and the protracted meeting have closed. The Holy Ghost can re-preach the truth to every one that has heard the message of hope during the revival season. We are seeing daily how the power of God transforms the people in the private walks of life in this world of mutation. We have witnessed how, at the family altar, in the preaching service, in the prayer meeting, in the field, in the shops, in the office, men and women have been converted or reclaimed.

What we like is to have God work when no eye sees, and no one can say look on us, as the soul plows through to a lasting victory. Such will stand firm unto the end. O listen with me at the beautiful sound of "Praise God from whom all blessings flow;

Praise him all creatures here below;
Praise him above, ye heavenly host;
Praise Father, Son and Holy Ghost."

THE WORDS WE SAY.

By Helen M. Richardson.

A kite can't fly without a string,
But words can, says my mother;
And you can't ever call them back,
Or make them any other.
They fly, she says, past our recall;
And so it's best to say
The kind of words we would not be Glad to recall next day.

Bobby was the very dearest, sweetest little fellow that ever lived. Everybody said so—father, mother, grandpa, grandma, Sister Lou, Uncle Bob, and Aunt Sue; that's everybody, of course.

But every now and then Bobby would have an "off day." Grandma said that he got out of the wrong side of the bed, but Bobby said that could not be, for he always got up just the same—if it was the wrong side one day, it was every day.

Whatever the trouble was, these days were rather trying, for everything went crisscross all day.

"I wish eggs grew bigger," said Bobby, complainingly, one of these mornings. "I don't any more'n get begun eating mine before it's all gone."

Then he wondered how much longer it would be before he was "growned up" enough to have doughnuts and coffee like father.

After breakfast he looked his playthings over, but could not find anything he wanted to play with. "I think I'd rather have my newest box of soldiers," he said presently.

"But," said mother, "I put that away in the closet upstairs, you know, because you have so many things around now."

"But I'd rather have that than anything else," persisted Bobby.

So mother told him when she had finished baking her cookies she would go and get it for him.

But, alas, when it came he did not care for it. He had got all over that, he said; now he wanted one of mother's cookies.

"But mother does not like for you to eat warm cookies, Bobby; they are not good for you."

"I don't know why; father has them, and I should think you'd like to have me when I want 'em so much. I'd make 'em for my little boy every day," was Bobby's reply.

So it went all the morning.

After lunch mother proposed that they go upstairs to rest, and try to get up on the right side. But Bobby would not hear to that. He wasn't a bit tired, and anyway he believed he would rather go and live with grandma.

"She's always doing something nice for me—I could have more fun there. She let's me have everything round at once, and when I don't like those things she tries to find somethin' new. I like to live with her all the time."

"Very well," said mother, "if you would like it better there than here with father and mother you had better go. We want our dear little boy to be happy if he can. I will put your nightie in your bag and you can go right over."

Bobby looked very much surprised; he had not expected to be taken at his word in that fashion.

"I—could wait until to-morrow," he said, hesitatingly.

"Oh, no; there's no need of waiting," answered mother cheerfully. "Grandma is at home, and will be glad to see you, I know. If you really think you would be happier there, I think you had better go."

So presently Bobby, with his little bag, was trudging down the street to grandma's.

But somehow it did not seem half as nice as usual there. Grandma got out all his playthings for him, and she had two cute little kittens that some one had just given her.

Usually Bobby would have been delighted with them, but he hardly looked at them to-day. "They're very nice kittens," he said, "but I don't seem to care much for 'em this afternoon."

Then grandma got him the nicest little lunch, but there was a queer little lump in his throat, so he could not swallow very well. He wondered what mother was doing now. It must be most supper time. He always helped her set the table. He didn't see how she could manage without him. And he was afraid grandma didn't know such nice little stories to tell him when he was going to sleep.

"I think I ought to go home," he said all at once. "It is most midnight and father will be home pretty soon. He and mother will be dreadfully lonesome without their little boy. It—makes me feel—all choked up—to think my mother and father are lonesome," and Bobby's big brown eyes were brimming over.

So, before mother had even started to get supper, a sturdy little figure came trudging back down the street.

"I've come home, mother!" he cried, as he rushed into her arms and kissed her over and over again. "Grandma's ever so nice, but I'd rather live with my father and mother than anybody else in the world."—Springfield Republican.

HOW DUKE EARNED HIS LICENSE.

By Helen M. Richardson.

Duke was a dog that had not belonged to any one until Robin adopted him. The dog followed Robin home from school one day, and ever after had refused to leave him.

Duke proved to be a very civil dog, kind affectionate, and possessed of more than ordinary intelligence; but, how he did eat! Robert often shared his own dinner with him in order to avoid hearing his father say: "That dog isn't worth his keep. He eats more than his neck is worth," or something of that sort.

Robin's little heart was near breaking one day, when he overheard his father telling his mother that Duke must be got rid of in some way before the time came round for licensing dogs.

His mother found him in a corner of the woodshed with his arms around Duke's neck, while the dog's eyes looked appealingly into those of his boy friend as if begging for protection. Every now and then the dog's tongue would lick the hand that drooped from his shaggy neck as if in sympathy he could not otherwise express. And altogether it was a picture hard to look upon with dry eyes.

"It really seems a pity to separate them," Mrs. Jordan confided to Robin's father when relating the circumstances to him.

"Yes, it does. But I certainly cannot afford to both feed the dog and pay his license. If Robin will agree in some way to earn Duke's license I will agree to keep on feeding the rascal," Mr. Jordan replied, as Duke, who had slipped into the room during the conversation, snuggled a cool nose coaxingly into his hand.

Robin, who was close behind Duke, heard the proposition, and joyfully acceeded to it. Earn the money for Duke's license? Of course he would! There were numberless ways in which he could do it. Why, he almost felt the money in his hand now.

In the first place, there were sodas. No more of these until Duke could boast a paid-up license. Baseball games, too, must be cut out. Why, when Robin started in enumerating the many ways in which money slipped through his fingers he was sure that in three weeks at least, Duke would find himself a respectable, licensed dog.

Duke, unmindful of the unusual interest he was exciting, still followed Robin about in faithful dog fashion, all day, and at night stretched himself contentedly upon his bed of meal bags in the woodshed.

"One dollar of your fee earned already, old fellow," Robin exclaimed, throwing his arms impulsively around Duke's neck one night, as he was settling himself down to dog slumbers.

As if half sensing the meaning of the words, Duke softly licked Robin's cheek, accompanying the caress with a low whine.

"I wonder if Duke understands what I am doing for him," Robin mused as he was undressing himself ten minutes later. "I'm quite sure he would do as much for me, if he could. Not the same thing, maybe, but I know he'd do anything he could to help me if I was in trouble," he assured himself as he jumped into bed.

A couple of hours later Robin was aroused from a dreamless sleep by something brushing his cheek. "It feels just like Duke's tongue," he murmured sleepily, and he was about to drop off again, when the touch was repeated, this time accompanied by the clawing of a paw at the bedclothes. He put out his hand, and it rested upon Duke's shaggy head. The dog was whining and acting strangely.

"What is the matter, Duke?" Robin said, by this time wide awake.

Duke's answer was a series of loud, short barks that soon woke Robin's father and mother and brought them into the room. Duke immediately rushed through the door and down the stairs, Robin and his father and mother rapidly following.

Robin had wondered how Duke had managed to gain an entrance to the house, but the open door between the shed and the kitchen reminded him that he must have forgotten to close it.

A fire smoldering in the corner of the shed told the rest of the story. The dog had smelled it and had hastened to notify the sleeping family of their danger through Robin, his little playfellow and friend. The smoldering flames were soon extinguished; but had Duke delayed five minutes longer they would have burst forth.

After the excitement was over, Robin's father stooped and laid his hand tenderly upon the head of the faithful dog who in all probability had saved all their lives.

"You have earned your license, old fellow; and if I continue to pay it as long as I live I shall still consider myself in debt to you," he said, in a husky voice.

Duke's soft brown eyes looked first at Robin, and then at Robin's father, while his wagging tail seemed asking: "Who will own me now, you or Robin?"—Waltham.

Our giant trees of California have long been supposed to be the tallest trees in existence. But naturalists from Australia are now telling us of the eucalyptus in that continent that actually surpasses our redwoods in height.

son, died on December 19, and was buried the next day in the Batesville Cemetery."

Elsewhere in this issue of the Advoeate we are carrying a brief tribute to this well known Mississippian from the pen of Rev. J. R. Countiss of Grenada, who was elose to him and who knew his worth. It was in 1893 at Vaiden, Miss., where he was the principal of the puhlie school and where we were serving our seeond eharge in the Methodist itineranсy, that we first met Prof. Hudson, and between us there soon sprang up a friendship that was never for a moment interrupted. He was a man of warm heart, of genial, kindly bearing, and of sterling eommon sense. He was never known to betray a eonfidenee, or to forget a kindness rendered him. He took deligbt in lending a helping hand to others and scattered sunshine wherever he went. He was a loyal Methodist, who was interested in the work of his Church and who rejoiced in its prosperity. The announcement that he has passed from earth has given us a sense of loss and lonliness. We shall miss him in the eoming years, and we shall not fail to cherish his memory. May the "Everlasting Arms" sustain his loved ones until they shall overtake him in the land where no farewell words are ever spoken!

MRS. LILY MEEKINS INJURED.

While alighting from a Coliseum Street ear last Sunday about 1 o'eloek p. m., the dress of Mrs. Lily Meekins, our eity missionary eonnected with the Mary Werlein Mission, was caught in some way, and she was dragged some distanee by the moving ear, being severely injured. She was first carried to the home of a frlend near-by, but at her own request was moved later to her apartments at the mission. She is at this writlng said to be resting quietly, and, tbough painfully hurt, it is thought that she will recover.

There is no Christian worker in New Orleans who is more conseerated or who has won a larger place in the affeetions of the suffering poor of the city than has Mrs. Meekins, and the aeeident which has befallen her has ealled forth a general expression of regret and anxious concern. Some weeks ago a visitor at the Advocate offiee, who was not a Methodist, pronounced her the most useful missionary belonging to any Chureh here. For years she has thought only of others and her life has been made up of beautiful and holy ministries to needy ones in the Master's name. At the time she was hurt she was on her way to the Seventh Street Orphans' Home, and had with her two presents for inmates there, one of them for a blind infant. Well has she won the title which has been given her—"the Angel of Tchoupitoulas Street."

Let all our readers remember this saintly woman at the throne of graee, praying especially that she may have a speedy and eomplete recovery, so that she may again take up her noble work.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. G. P. Fikes reports a royal reception and a heavy "pounding" at Moseow, Miss. He is hopeful of a successful year.

The Methodist News Bureau (Nashville) says that it is now evident that our Church will have this year a gain of more than 60,000 members.

The North Mississippi Conferenee Minutes are expected to be out early in this month. Seeretary Countiss does not believe in any dilly-dallying in getting out this important annual.

Bishop W. P. Thirkield, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, preaehed for Dr. Felix R. Hill, Jr., at Rayne Memorial Chureh, this eity, last Sunday morning. His discourse was a strong and scholarly one.

The Epworth Leaguers of First Chureh, Baton Rouge, held a wateh night serviee last Friday night, December 31. About 50 persons were in attendance and the new year was ushered in with prayer.

The meeting of the District Stewards of the New Orleans District, which was scheduled to be held on Monday evening, January 3, was postponed to Monday evening, January 10. The plaee is First Chureh, and the hour is 8 o'clock.

Watch night was observed by the First M. E. Church, South, of Crowley, La., on Deeember 31. Brother Townsley does not believe in passing over any good thing. A liver wire than he is would be hard to find anywhere in Methodism.

Mr. George W. Cable, the noted author, is in the Crescent City on a visit. It is stated that he is here to secure coloring for a new work of fiction dealing with life in this section, which is expected to come from the press next fall.

Rev. J. W. Dorman, pastor of our First Church at Water Valley, Miss., sends us Christmas greetings, and adds: "I have a great congregation. Come to see us." We predict a pastorate fruitful of large things for Brother Dorman in his new field.

Rev. R. H. Harper went to De Ridder, La., the latter part of last week, where he has been assisting the pastor, Rev. W. S. Henry, in a series of New Year services. Prior to his arrival, Rev. R. W. Tueker, of Shreveport, delivered there several discourses.

We have in hand the Monthly Bulletin of the New Albany (Miss.) Methodist Church, which evidences the fact that Pastor Pope and his worthy flock have taken up energetically the work of the new Conference year. We wish them a large measure of success.

Rev. F. L. Crowson orders his paper changed from Chaires, Fla., to Webster, Fla., which will hereafter be his address. After four sueeessful years in his former charge, he has been given a new field, where he hopes to accomplish much for the Master.

Rev. Walt Holcomb, the well known evangelist, closed his last year's work at Orlando, Fla., with a gracious revival at the First Methodist Church. He is now engaged in conduеting a meeting for Rev. W. V. Jarratt, pastor of the West Nashville (Tenn.) M. E. Church, South.

We take off our hat to Brother T. M. Babington, an esteemed layman of Franklinton, La., for a club of 14 subscriptions, with a check to correspond, forwarded on Dec. 30. We wish him and the church which he so worthily represents great prosperity during the year 1916.

Rev. J. W. Raper is on the ground and has taken up his work at Houston, Miss. He says: "We have been given a delightful reeeption. This is a great people. Things have started off well." Brother Raper has already begun to look after the interests of the Advoeate in his new eharge.

"This is a promising field, and I am going to labor to develop here one of the best eharges in the Conference." So writes Rev. J. H. Mitchell, of Indianola, Miss. That Brother Mitchell will achieve this worthy aim, few who know bim will doubt. It is his habit to build up things where he toils.

From a personal note from Rev. T. H. Dorsey, presiding elder of the Corinth District, we extract the following: "Cunningham, Cogdell, and Davenport, the Corinth pastors, bave made good beginnings. Reports from over the district indleate that the pastors are in plaee and that they are hopeful of a great year."

Rev. W. W. Mitchell, presiding elder of the Durant District, is, we are glad to state, much improved physically and has eommeneed his first round of appointments. His family are now domiciled in the district parsonage at Durant. Brother Mitchell was with the Sallis pastor and people last Saturday and Sunday.

"We have received an interesting eommunieation from Wm. B. Van Valkenburgh, of Kent Hill, Maine, who recently was brought South by personal engagements. Because of the Editor's absence, it was not turned in to the hands of the printer in time for this number of the Advoeate, but it will appear next week.

Major Dan Morgan Smith, of Chicago, a national representative of the Anti-Saloon League of America, will deliver an address in the First Methodist Chureh of New Orleans next Sunday at 11 o'clock a. m., and another at the Collseum Baptist Church at 7:45 p. m. He is said to be a remarkably entertaining and forceful speaker.

The Editor of the Advoeate was out of the city for about ten days, following Deeember 22, personal engagements having called him to Central Mississippi. In eonsequenee, his work has piled up considerably, but he hopes to eateh up with it in a few days. He trusts that his correspondents will hear with him patiently for a brief season.

Rev. J. F. Foster states that his work has opened up pleasantly on the Bayou La Chute charge. As will be seen in his communication whieh appears elsewhere, he will live in the dormitory at Centenary College, his room there having been fitted up delightfully for him by his parishioners. His present field of work is among old friends of earlier days.

Miss Marie C. Meek, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Meek, of Lexington, Miss., and Mr. Benjamin Galloway Hobbs, of Jackson, Miss., were married in the Methodist Church at Lexington at 9:30 a. m. on Tuesday, December 28, the Editor of the Advocate and Rev. V. C. Curtis jointly officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Hobbs will make their home in Jackson.

The following invitation was received some days ago: "Mr. and Mrs. William Wesley McNeill request your presence at the marriage of their daughter, Annie Henry, to Mr. William Duncan McLeod, on Wednesday, January 5, 1916, at six o'clock, at the First Methodist Church of Greenwood, Miss." We extend to the happy bride and groom congratulations and all good wishes.

Rev. H. G. Roberts, of Coldwater, Miss., writing on Christmas day, says: "You should have been here and have stuck your feet under the parsonage table to-day. These Coldwater people had it loaded to its utmost capacity with edibles, from turkey down." Brother Roberts is, indeed, serving a generous and thoughtful people, as the Editor knows from experience. Any preacher is fortunate to be their pastor.

From Dubach, La., Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., writes: "I am beginning to get started in my work here. The people have given us a very kind reception. We have a handsome new brick church, which is just being completed. This has been made possible through the generosity of our membership at this place and through the great service that Brother McCain, my predecessor, rendered. He did a lasting work on this charge and it was a great pity that he was not able to go on with it."

Rev. C. A. Northington writes: "We are now in the parsonage of our work, which is located in New Albany, Miss. The people have made everything pleasant for us, and the prospects are cheering." Brother Northington has called for lists of our subscribers at the several points in his charge, in order that he may see that the Advoeate circulates among his people. He has the good habit of taking care of all the interests of the Church where he has sway.

Our Church at Homer, La., of which Rev. J. G. Snelling is the popular pastor, was dedicated last Sunday, January 2, the dedicatory sermon being preached by Dr. George S. Sexton, of Shreveport. In the afternoon, at 3 o'clock, a special service in the interest of the Laymen's Missionary Movement was conducted by prominent laymen from Shreveport, and at the evening hour the pulpit was ably filled by Rev. Briscoe Carter, presiding elder of the Ruston District.

Rev. T. S. Randle writes us as follows: "I am now in San Antonio, Texas, spending Christmas with my wife, who is here with her daughter, Pauline, and her husband, for medical treatment. She has been taking this treatment for about three weeks and will continue to take it for several weeks more. The doctor says that she is doing well. We ask the prayers of all our friends who may read this note. My health has improved so much that I have accepted the pastorate of the Batesville Church."

In a personal note to the Editor, Rev. J. A. Bowen, who is one of the North Mississippi Conference evangelists, says: "Mail addressed to me either at Tupelo, Miss., or Birmingham, Ala., care of Rev. L. F. Whitten, D.D., will reach me promptly. I expect to take up my work in Mississippi and at other points about the last of January. The prospect for a sueeessful year is most encouraging. I have attended since Nov. 3 seven Annual Conferences. They have been occasions of great spiritual power and harmonious deliberations. The reports were very gratifying."

From the Daily Press of Deeember 28, published at Lafayette, La., we take the following: "The stork flew over the parsonage of the Methodist pastor Sunday morning and left a chubby little fellow to brighten the already happy household of Rev. and Mrs. William Schuhle. When the members of the congregation assembled for services the word was passed around that "there was a little stranger" in their midst. The beloved pastor was excused from holding services. Particular interest centers in the coming of the boy, as he is Rev. and Mrs. Schuhle's first baby. They have been the recipients of felicitations from the membership of their church and the other friends they have made since coming to Lafayette. Because of his long connection with the Southern Methodist Church as a minister and presiding elder, more recently of the Monroe district, the minister and his wife will be showered with congratulations. Mrs. Schuhle and "the little junior were doing excellently last night."

TAKES OFF DANDRUFF, HAIR STOPS FALLING

Save your Hair! Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine right now—Also stops itching scalp.

Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—now—any time—will surely save your hair.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store. You surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine. Save your hair! Try it!

MRS. SUSAN EMMA JENKINS.

"She sleeps, but not forever."

Mrs. Susan Emma Jenkins, beloved wife of Rev. M. G. Jenkins, passed to the home of the blest in San Antonio, Texas, on Sunday, Nov. 28, 1915, and her remains were conveyed to Mineola, Texas, for interment. She was the daughter of Malcom and Susan Monroe, and was born in Thomas County, Georgia, on March 22, 1846. She was married to Brother Jenkins on July 7, 1865, at the home of her birth. Converted in early life and becoming a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, she was trained by her godly parents to walk the ways of a pure and virtuous life. Her young, sweet life grew and developed into a lovely and symmetrical Christian womanhood, which ever afterward characterized her. We learn by letter from Brother Jenkins that his now glorified companion "suffered intense pain for two months. One daughter, Mrs. Lula Harris, and her sister, Mrs. Estelle Drennan, of Houston, Texas, were with her nearly the whole time of her illness until she breathed her last. All that the physicians and prayerful and watchful loved ones could do was unavailing. She said a short time before becoming unconscious, 'My dear Savior has heard my prayer,' doubtless referring to passing from pain to endless joy and endless bliss. Beside the casket of her triumphant spirit were assembled those who loved her, where she had lived for eight consecutive years, where she lived and where she died. Among the weeping throng was Rev. Dr. J. E. Harrison, President of West Texas Female College; also Wesley Peacock, each of whom paid beautiful and touching tribute to her memory. Truly, I am bereft, sadly bereft. In the language of President Peacock, 'I have truly walked through the valley of the shadow of death.'" Having been their presiding elder, I was often in the Jenkins' home and closely connected with them, and I learned to know her well. Sister Jenkins was with her gifted husband throughout his active itinerant life, helping and encouraging him in the work that both of them so dearly loved, and was his comfort and mainstay in the later years of his retirement from active service. In her passage, he has indeed met with the severest loss and experience he ever had. In Georgia, Texas, or Louisiana, wherever their appointment put them, this couple, "true as steel" to each other, to God and to the Master, lived lives of thorough devotion in the bonds of perfect love, in all the varied and trying happenings of Methodist itinerant life. As he has done his work well in the pulpit, so she has been the heroine of the parsonage—with cheerfulness, patience and inspired ability as wife, mother, and elect lady, she did her duty as God directed her. Many besides those of her kin and household were helped by the touch of her hand, the sweetness of her words of love and sympathy, and the resplendent living before them of the Christ-life. There is nothing I could say more than that she filled out in all with which she had to do the character of a wholly consecrated servant of God. Fallen on sleep and passed from mortal view, her ransomed spirit is happy in the Father's house on high. Separated for a while, our brother, and her daughter, and all who loved her, in God's good time will find her in glory, and all shall be at home with God forever and forever.

CHRISTMAS IN NEWTON, MISS.

Our people manifested the true Christmas spirit, seeking out the desolate and needy, and trying to give comfort and good cheer to all. In my desolate home, I was most kindly remembered, my pastor doing a large share in inspiring hope and courage. The many kind remembrances filled my heart with love for these good people, and those in other parts of the State. The many Christmas cards received mean so much to my poor, stricken heart. Those from our ministers were truly appreciated, as were the others. The dear one now resting from his labors loved his brethren truly. It helps me to feel that they have not forgotten him when so kindly remembering me.

God bless the dear Advocate and make it a blessing in many homes during the year 1916. Your friend,

Mrs S. G. WEEMS.

Be Pretty! Turn Gray Hair Dark

Try Grandmother's old Favorite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Now-a-days, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe for about 50 cents.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy.

Cured His RUPTURE.

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that quickly and completely cured me. Years have passed and the rupture has never returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell, but will give full information about how you may find a complete cure without operation, if you write to me. Eugene M. Pullen, Carpenter, 5971B Marcellus Ave., Manasquan, N. J. Better cut out this notice and show it to any others who are ruptured—you may save a life or at least stop the misery of rupture and the worry and danger of an operation.

Avoid Church Money Worries.

Here is a plan that enables your church to get a handsome new organ without financial worries or inconveniences. The R. S. Hill Co., Louisville, Ky., manufacturers of high quality reed organs, will ship the instrument without a cent's deposit, for your approval, and allow special terms of payment that save the church treasury. They also offer to make a careful study of your church building, and recommend an instrument that will exactly fill requirements. Their organs are of superior workmanship and lasting tone, and are protected by long-term guarantees. Their attractive prices mean a money saving. Write them today for full details.—Adv.

Lime Medication In Tuberculosis

In the New York Medical Record of December 5, 1914, Dr. John North, of Toledo, says: "I have come to the conclusion that one of the most prominent causes (of tuberculosis) is 'lime starvation.' • In all cases of incipient tuberculosis there is a deficiency of calcium. Many do not eat food containing enough lime. • In such cases we must resort to lime medication."

Eckman's Alterative should be given a fair trial in such cases, because one of its chief ingredients is calcium (lime), in such combination with other remedial agents as to be easily assimilated by the average person.

Where its use is combined with proper diet, fresh air and hygienic living conditions, we believe it will prove beneficial in any case of tuberculosis.

It contains no opiates, narcotics or habit-forming drugs, so is safe to try. Price $1 and $2 per bottle. Sold by leading druggists or sent direct from the Laboratory. We would like to send you a booklet containing information of value and references.

Eat Less Meat If Back Hurts

Take a glass of Salts to flush Kidneys if bladder bothers you.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, and bladder irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous Salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids so they no longer irritate, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

BRISCOE CARTER, P. E.

AMITE CITY, LA.

Dear Brother Meek: Owing to serious sickness in our family we did not reach Amite, our new appointment, until Dec. 16. But when we finally arrived, we found a very gracious welcome. We reached here on the 6 p. m. train. A large number of the officials and brethren of the church met us at the depot and carried us immediately to the parsonage. There we found a number of the good women waiting for us with everything in the parsonage in readiness and a warm supper, smoking, and ready on the table. You can imagine how inviting it looked to us after a trip of more than 300 miles, with a six hours' lay-over in New Orleans. On further inspection, we found the storeroom well stocked with groceries, and a large amount of wood in the yard to replenish the already burning fires.

Well, all these things help a preacher to feel encouraged, as you know. So now that we have preached our first sermon, which means we have "broken the ice," a large amount of stage fright, or as some nicely say, "nervousness," seems to have passed away, and we are getting down to real work.

Amite furnishes a large field for labor, and as some good and faithful workers have preceded us here, we feel like the harvest is white, and by the help of the Master of the harvest, we expect to do some reaping in this part of the vineyard.

We wish you and all the Advocate readers a happy New Year, and assure you that one of our resolutions is to try to do more for the Advocate during this coming year.—Henry T. Young, P. C.

WIGGINS, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: My work here at Wiggins opens well; all indications are favorable for a good year. I have had accessions on profession of faith every Sunday that we have had services since Conference. Last Sunday night in response to a call for penitents eight adults came forward and knelt at the altar. As a result of the service, three were reclaimed; my youngest son, James, confessed his call to preach, and two united with the Church by vows. It was a very gracious service and left a deep impression on all who were present. Our prayer-meetings have been specially helpful of late. We have had an average attendance of 50 during December. We are looking forward with great expectations for a year of revival power and gracious results. I hope that my brethren will offer earnest prayers for my work to that end. My health is steadily improving and I am hopeful of complete restoration to strength, for which I am very grateful to my Heavenly Father.—J. L. Sells, P. C.

YOUR HEART

is closely connected with your nerves, so close in fact that anything which effects your nerves must necessarily effect your heart and vice versa.

If you are troubled with palpitation, dizziness, shortness of breath, swelling of ankles, pain on either side of the chest, or weak and irregular pulse, symtoms of a nervous breakdown, the best way to remedy the trouble is by giving your heart and nerves the proper tonic. Renovine for the heart and nerves is the best tonic for soothing and restoring a shattered nervous system. For sale by all reliable dealers, 50c and $1.00. Manufactured by The Van Vleet-Mansfield Drug Co., Memphis, Tenn.—Adv.

THE REAL DEFINITION OF LIFE IS NERVE-FORCE

People often wonder what the difference really is between the living and dead body. Apparently nothing has been taken away, but still the complicated machinery of the body has stopped and cannot be started again. What is missing is "life" and the modern definition of life is "nerve-force."

This nerve-force must be distributed regularly all over the body. Directly it does not run smoothly ill-health will follow.

Dr. Miles' Nervine benefits the health by evening up the distribution of this vital force of life, and by taking all the "jars and jolts" out of the system.

In this conjunction the Rev. C. H. Cox, of Mason City, W. Va., has stated:

"I have found Dr. Miles' Nervine to be unexcelled in all nervous disorders and I have always recommended it to anyone whom I hear is suffering in this way. We also always keep Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills on hand as we feel they are invaluable. No words can truly express the real merit of Dr. Miles' Restorative Remedies."

Dr. Miles' Nervine can be used with advantage in all ailments which have a nervous origin or which have affected the nervous system. It is particularly beneficial in case of sleeplessness, nervousness, epilepsy, hysteria, chronic headache and neuralgia.

Dr. Miles' Nervine is on sale at all drug stores and is strictly guaranteed to benefit you or your money will be refunded by the druggist.

GET RID OF HUMORS AND AVOID SICKNESS

Humors in the blood cause internal derangements that affect the whole system, as well as pimples, boils and other eruptions, and are responsible for the readiness with which many people contract disease.

For forty years Hood's Sarsaparilla has been more successful than any other medicine in expelling humors and removing their inward and outward effects. Get Hood's. No other medicine acts like it.

When the Baby is Fretful, out of sorts and restless, you may know the stomach and liver are out of shape and a tonic is needed. Unless the organs are kept healthy you provoke sickness and possibly further complications. AN IMPORTANT CONFERENCE.

The writer has just returned from Chicago, where he spent three days in a Joint Conference of the Teacher-Training Committees of the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations and of the International Sunday School Association. The Conference was made up of representative Teacher-tralning leaders of North America. The time of this conference was spent in an effort to outline a course of teacher-training for the Sunday schools of America that might be in harmony with the present needs of the Sunday school and in keeping with the greatly enlarged conception of the Sunday school's opportunity and responsibility.

The general plan as agreed upon at Chicago calls for one Standard Course, which is to supersede the two courses now being offered by the denominations and by the International Association, known as First and Advanced Courses. The Standard Course will be of three years' length, the last year being specialized work in some particular department of the Sunday school.

Inasmuch as by the action of our own General Sunday School Board a new Teacher-training course had to be prepared at this time, it has seemed very important that as far as possible it should be arranged in harmony with the new standards in process of preparation, as indicated above. In order to avoid fixing our own course and rules before these general standards had been worked out, it has been necessary to leave a number of things undetermined until after the meeting of the Sunday School Council in Richmond, on January 25-27, when these standards for the denominations will be authoritatively fixed.

This much may be said, however, at this time, that "The Pupil, the Teacher, and the School" is the finest book in the new course of the Southern Methodist Church, and this course will be known as the Standard Course. It will conform to the three-year plan as laid down above, and will take the place of all other courses. It will be in harmony with the standards fixed just as far as text books already written make it possible. Diplomas will be issued only for the completion of three years' work, but certificates of other forms of recognition will be given for the completion of any one year's work in the course. After January 1, 1916, classes will not be enrolled in any other than the new, or standard, course.

Thousands of schools ought to start teacher-training classes in this new course. Fifteen hundred students are already enrolled in the first book. The second book will be announced immediately following the Richmond meeting.

Write to Smith & Lamar for the first book (35 cents, or 42 cents postpaid), and send enrollment of your class and inquiries to the Department of Teacher-training, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

CHINA CONFERENCE.

Interesting reports have come from the recent session of the China Mission Conference held in October, 1915. Bishop Hoss presided at the meeting, and the missionaries were delighted with the opportunity of having him there. The new appointments have been received, and the following changes were made among our workers: Miss Emma Lester, Laura Haygood School; Miss Edith Hays, Changchow, with Miss Leverett; Miss Bertha Attaway, Davidson Memorial; Miss Nina Stallings, Mo Ka Embroidery Mission. Our new missionaries were appointed to language study—Miss Olive Lipscomb to Soochow, and Miss Ruth Brittain to Nanking.

A CALL.

Six weeks ago the Japanese portion of Walnut Grove, Cal., was burned. The only religious organization in the city was that of our Japanese Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The building and furnishings used were demolished in this fire. We now need to erect a room where these religious services may be conducted. There is no land for sale, but by contract a certain portion may be rented for a period of years. Five hundred dollars is needed to erect this temporary building. There is no money in our treasury and no available funds in sight. Walnut Grove is in Sacramento County, where there are more than four thousand Japanese engaged in farming. What a wonderful opportunity to bring the gospel to these people! An appeal comes from these farmers to our Japanese pastor, Rev. Imai, to provide some place where they may send their children to a boarding school. The pastor feels that with a donation of $2000 this building may be erected. It is an opportunity to do real missionary work. Can we say nay to these people? Who will make it possible? Start the new year right, and make some sacrifice for the Master.

THE CONVERSION OF A DISTINGUISHED JAPANESE PHYSICIAN.

A distinguished physician, professor in the medical department of a Japanese university, was urged by a friend to become a Christian; but his seven years' training in the universities of Germany had made him a skeptic. He admitted, however, that the life of his assistant, an earnest and consistent Christian, had greatly impressed him. After much urging, the friend was given a reluctant promise that every day he would read a portion of St. John's Gospel and pray. He had objected to giving this promise on the ground that, neither knowing nor believing in God, it seemed to him both absurd and impossible to pray. His friend, however, insisted that the promise be given, saying that in praying he should tell God that very thing, that he neither knew nor believed in him, and ask that he might know him. Some months passed, and the doctor's little boy died. As the grief-stricken father stood weeping by the body of his child, his soul was flooded with the thought: "Why, this is just the way God loves me, as I love my child!" And the joy of finding his Father for a time blotted out his great sorrow. He called to his wife and told her of his discovery of God, and soon she, too, was rejoicing in the realization of her Heavenly Father's love. At the grave next day, when all the members of the university faculty gathered with other friends, the doctor told in simple manner and language how he had found his Heavenly Father and how gladly he could give back his child to Him who had sent that child to lead him to himself; and so clearly did he see his child's mission that he could not grieve at his death, but rejoiced at his life, which, although short, had done such a wonderful work.—Miss Nellie Bennett, in The Epworth Era.

SOME FACTS ABOUT MOHAMMEDANISM.

Every eighth person in the world is a Mohammedan.

From one to five times a day two hundred million of the human race turn their faces toward Mecca. Their prayer is: "There is but one God; and Mohammed is his prophet."

The slogan of the Moslem is "Africa for Islam, and to carry out this slogan every trader is a missionary of his faith and penetrates every nook and corner of the Dark Continent. New adherents are being enlisted by the hundred thousand.

Mohammedanism is spreading three times more rapidly in Africa than is Christianity. For every thirty-three natives who become Christians, one hundred become Mohammedans.

Slavery, polygamy, and the demoralization of character have resulted from Moslem control of Africa during the past twelve centuries.

Lying is a fine art in Moslem lands. Mohammed declares: "A lie is allowable in three cases—to women, to reconcile friends, and in war."

GREAT THOUGHTS OF MASTER MISSIONARIES.

"Every man, woman and child in heathen darkness is a challenge to the Church."—S. Earl Taylor.

"I tell you, fellow-Christians, your love has a broken wing if it cannot fly across the ocean."—J. W. Conklin.

"That land is henceforth my country which needs most the gospel."—Count Zinzendorf.

"China has no sorrow that Christ's message cannot cure; India has no problem it cannot solve; Japan has no question it cannot answer; Africa has no darkness it cannot dispel."—John Smith.

"Nowhere have I appeared as anything else but a servant of God who has simply followed the leadings of his hand."—David Livingstone.

"With all my heart, after these fifteen years of service, I want to say to you to-day that it is the loveliest thing in the world to be a missionary. More and more, I feel that it has been a high and holy privilege to come at his call to China. I feel to-day that if I had a hundred other lives to give, so great seems the need of his witnesses now in China and so wonderful the opportunity to serve him here, I would count it all joy to give them every one to Him for China."—Miss Laura Haygood.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and 1-4 oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

INSTALLATION OF CHURCH OFFICERS.

It was the great and gifted Bishop H. N. McTyeire who said, "The best way to avoid dead formality is to have a good ritual, and to use it," or words to that effect. Our Church has suffered much through some ministers, who feared they might become "too formal," and frequently they have discarded our classic Ritual for marriages, baptisms, etc., and have extemporized their own ritual. No matter how gifted and happy the minister in felicitous phrase, we doubt if he is ever justified in abandoning our prescribed Ritual for extempore ceremony. We once heard a great leader in our Church, in addressing a class of young ministers, say: "Young men, you will be tempted to improve on, or perhaps ignore, our Church Ritual; let me urge you at all times to stick to the Book."

Our last General Conference of 1914 accordingly amended Paragraph 126 so as to ask the pastor to publicly install all the elective officers of the Church with suitable and fitting ceremonies. The reasons for this are obvious. We venture to enumerate a few of them here:

1. It puts into effect the will of the General Conference—the only legislative body of our Church.

2. It emphasizes the sacred and important duties of the Church officers.

3. It develops a spirit of loyalty and co-operation among the congregation.

4. Other branches of the Church of Christ have been accustomed to "install pastors, deacons, elders," and have profited by it.

5. It has a fine effect on the officers to be installed, in impressing them with the sacred obligations of their office, and in encouraging them to be more spiritual.

We have only mentioned a few of the many benefits accruing from the public installation of Church officers. Only those who have been used to this fitting custom can realize the profit derived from it. By a little thought and care each pastor can prepare a simple and impressive form of installation, or, if he prefers, he can obtain a form from the writer by addressing him at Crowley, La.

From the Field

Shannon, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: We arrived at our new field of work last week, and were given sueh a warm reception that it makes our heart glad. We were met at the depot by a party of friends of preachers, and were escorted to the parsonage in a handsome car. At the parsonage we found another lot of friends, with a nice, warm dinner for us, all of which we appreciated very much, indeed. I find here a very high type and choice class of people.

—W. V. Shearer.

Many, La.

Dear Dr. Meek: I have been returned to the Many charge for the year 1916. I have met with a warm reception, and the outlook is bright for a prosperous year. We received a splendid "pounding" last Friday, consisting of good things to eat, and some other articles, all of which we appreciated very much indeed. The "pounding" was given by the Woman's Missionary Society, but all the members of the church and many other friends assisted. They also sent a large rocker to be used by this scribe. We are praying that this may be the best year in the history of the Many charge; and to this end I desire the Editor and all of the Advocate's readers to pray for me. I have received four members into the Church since Conference. May the Lord bless the Advocate and all of its readers.

—S. D. Howard.

Barlow, Miss.

Dear Editor: On our return, we have been heartily received by the good people of Barlow. As an expression of their good wishes and our welcome in their midst, they gave the parsonage a linen shower, and the preacher a good "pounding." Besides, they gave to our family many nice Christmas presents. We greatly appreciate all these nice things; but above all do we appreciate the good spirit and interest manifested. We are brought under great obligations to our people, and we never felt more like trying to do our best to make this the most prosperous year of our ministry. We dearly love the Advocate and expect to send in some new subscriptions and renewals soon.

—S. N. Young.

Itta Bena, Miss.

Dear Advocate: I reached Itta Bena Saturday afternoon, Dec. 11. Dr. Holloman and my old friend, Brother H. H. Nabors, met me at the train. I ate turkey dinner with Dr. Holloman Sunday, and Sister Nabors made me feel very comfortable in her beautiful home until my household goods arrived. The J. E. Thomas folks are mighty fine people to follow; this parsonage, yard and garden were indeed swept and garnished, and it was a real joy to come into a place so clean and inviting. They had even left a fire burning in the grate and a scuttle of coal setting near by. Things were in like order in the church, everything organized and at work, and the girls crying for Sister Thomas. This church building is a beauty, and would do credit to a congregation and town four or five times the size. Brother Randolph, the new superintendent of our Orphans' Home, was with us last night, and told us the story of the Home. He told us how many they have down there, what they do, and how they do it, and what it costs to do it, and how he gets the money to pay the bills. He did not take a collection, but wanted us to send one Sunday's incidental collection, and he was informed that this was already being done. Our people seemed to enjoy Brother Randolph's story of the Home. I am of the opinion, if the Lord sees fit to continue this man's health and strength, that he will make a great success of this work. He is young, vigorous, cultured, and a good business man, and with a heart as big as the needs of his interesting family. Open the way for him, brethren, and give him an opportunity to tell the story of the Home, and the people will do the rest.—W. S. Shipman.

A GREAT OCCASION.

Dear Mr. Editor: On Dec. 12, 1915, we celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of the third Annual Conference held at Adams' Campground, in Lincoln County, Mississippi, in the year 1815. Drs. A. F. Watkins and I. W. Cooper were the speakers of the hour. After a song by the choir, the congregation was led in prayer by Brother W. T. Griffin, of Gulfport, Miss. A beautiful solo was rendered by Miss Ella Godbold. A paper was read by Brother Enoch Carruth, giving a history of the country and the organization of the first Methodist Church in this neighborhood in the year 1812, which was listened to with intense interest by the entire audience. He was followed by Dr. A. F. Watkins, who chose for his subject the history of Methodism in South Mississippi. It is needless to say that he was master of his subject. At times he swayed his audience with flights of eloquence as he outlined the history of our great Church. At the conclusion of his address, a sumptuous dinner was served. At 2 p. m., the congregation re-assembled in the church. A beautiful quartette was rendered, after which the congregation was led in prayer by Brother Edward Coker, of the Mississippi Conference. Dr. Cooper addressed the audience on the doctrine and polity of the Methodist Church, and it goes without saying that he gave one of the finest expositions of the doctrine and polity of the Methodist Church that it has been my privilege to listen to. Drs. Cooper and Watkins are two of our strongest and most useful men, both in Church and school work. The church was beautifully decorated. An arch of evergreens was suspended over the rostrum with a beautiful motto underneath, taken from First Samuel, seventh chapter and twelfth verse: "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." The occasion will linger through the coming years in memory's storehouse, and I trust that it will be an inspiration to all who were present to undertake greater things for the Church founded by our fathers and mothers in South Mississippi, from whose pales they have been translated to the beautiful beyond.

BATESVILLE, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: Rev. R. H. B. Gladney was with us last night and the result of the great message he delivered and the good work he wrought in our midst will abide for years to come. The officers and teachers of our Sunday school and others met with him for the purpose of studying the needs of the Sunday school. He made it very clear to us that knowledge was the basis of all real power and enthusiasm—knowledge of the child and child life, of the Word of God, and the true method of teaching the Word of God. He said it made no matter how anxious the teacher might be to make an effective teacher or to do the work of our Lord in the Sabbath school; it could not be done unless the teacher knows something definite to teach, unless he or she has made careful preparation for the work they are undertaking. This great truth he drove home to every heart present. As a result of his labor among us, a teacher-training class was organized—a class composed of twelve members; a fire for greater efficiency was kindled in our hearts and there was awakened a determination on our part to make 1916 a banner year in our Sunday school work here at Batesville. Let the brethren send for and use Brother Gladney. He will help them.—E. G. Mohler, Jr., P. C.

RIPLEY AND BLUE MOUNTAIN

Dear Brother Meek: Rev. T. H. Dorsey, our new presiding elder, was with us at Blue Mountain on the third Sunday in December for his first official visit. He preached two great sermons and made a profound impresion. He was to have spent Monday, 20th, with us at Ripley, but was called to Rienzi to bury Sister Fulllove. The work moves off smoothly, and with good prospects for the coming year. Our Sunday schools are taking "Specials" for the China Mission fields. The week of prayer will be observed, with services each evening from January 3 to January 9. Grenada College will also be brought before our people on the second Sunday.

Following the "Week of Prayer" we will hold a series of meetings at Blue Mountain, with Rev. J. H. Bell, one of our Conference evangelists, to do the preaching. On Friday, Feb. 11, we will hold a County Sunday School Institute with Dr. W. L. Deitrich and Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, and others, in charge.

Brother W. G. Burks, who was assigned to the Dumas charge, in this county, has not yet reached his work, on account of sickness. He has had a very bad case of la grippe. Our last news from him was that they would start in a few days for their new home. The people here, and in this county, are very fond of Brother Burks; he has been twice before pastor in this community.

Rev. J. R. Countiss, who preached at Blue Mountain, in the College Hall, to a great audience on the Sunday our Conference was in session, produced a profound impression.

R. P. NEBLETT.

PRENTISS, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: We are comfortably housed in our new quarters and are highly pleased with our new work. The good people of this community, both Methodists and Baptists, have received us very cordially. After spending six years in the Seashore District among the tall pines and gallberry bushes, we are glad to get back up into the farming country and watch the cotton as it is being hauled to town. We find plenty of work to do and no time to lose. It is said by some that we have the best board of stewards in the Hattiesburg District, and, from what I have observed, I feel that we are going to have backing in all our work here by these good men. Our district conference will be held here this year and I trust that you will be able to visit us then.—J. M. Lewis, P. C.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

That the liquor traffic is the most gigantic and withering curse that afflicts modern society there is not the slightest doubt. It is the uncompromising foe of all that is good and the unfailing ally of every other evil agency in existence. The most dependable statisticians tell us that it causes twenty-five per cent of the insanity of the Nation, thirty-five per cent of its vagrancy, and seventy-five per cent of its crime. It destroys vastly more lives than war or pestilence, imposes upon the public its heaviest financial burdens, and is the greatest hindrance to the upward progress of mankind. It debauches manhood, outrageous womanhood, and despoils and blights childhood. It respects no law, however sacred; spares no institution, however holy; and has mercy upon no victim, however pathetic his condition. It wars against the Christian Sabbath, against the home, against the Church. It is the creator of gamblers, the manufacturer of prostitutes, and the breeder of every form of corruption. It drags down to the grave every year hundreds of thousands of human beings, wrecking not only their bodies, but also their immortal souls. Mr. Clinton B. Howard did not overstate the case when he declared: "If Satan should make into one every serpent in the sea, every snake in the grass, every mad dog in the street, and every wild beast in the forest, he could not incarnate the American saloon unless he put himself under the same skin; for the saloon is as mad, sleepless, relentless, pitiless, and blood-thirsty as them all."

Who is responsible for the dramshop and its awful work of ruin in this fair land? The saloon-keepers? Yes, in part; but not wholly so. The State? No, the State is not a personality—it is only what its citizens make it. In the last analysis, it is the people who are responsible. Every voter who casts a ballot for men or measures favorable to the licensing of the liquor traffic is in part accountable for its existence and for all that follows from it. In a most important sense he is a party to the business, and God will so adjudge him. Can you afford to place yourself on the side of the saloon and meet that record in the fierce light of the judgment? This is the question that now squarely confronts every suffragist in the State of Louisiana.

THE ROMISH CHURCH WIDE-AWAKE.

The following is an extract from a statement sent out by the Church News Association (New York):

"Constructively, a big project of the year is in hand by Roman Catholic leaders of America, especially archbishops and college presidents. The Pope has just formed at the Vatican, as part of the administration of the curia, a new congregation that has for its aim the strengthening of Christian education. In part this new congregation was formed to help education in America. The Catholic University, the diocesan seminary, the college conducted by the orders, and especially the training of priests for Italian speaking Catholics, are to be looked to by this great communion in 1916."

This shows that, whatever the Protestant denominations may do, the Roman Catholic Church does not propose to retreat from the field of education. She realizes that her strength lies largely in her schools and that her hope for the future is in multiplying them and providing more adequately for their maintenance. Truly, it seems that this ancient Church never sleeps, but is Argus-eyed to discover and seize opportunities. It behooves the Protestant Churches likewise to be up and doing to strengthen their institutions of learning. It is frightful to think of what might result if the instruction of the youth of the Nation should be turned over to the secularists and papists.

"DISMISSED WITH FALSE PRAISE."

Under this caption, The Continent, the great Presbyterian weekly of Chicago, recently published the following utterance:

"An astonishing pamphlet is circulated by a prominent church. It is devoted to praise of the congregation's retiring pastor, and relates with glowing and elaborate compliments his success in his ministry there. It declares that when he offered his resignation his people besought him to stay among them, but he resisted all pleas and insisted on leaving because he was called to a work much more important. There are reprinted elaborate resolutions in which the session and all other church organizations expressed their heart-broken sorrow at losing a pastor so beloved. Formal action of the eldership pledged 'hearty co-operation and support' if he would only consent to remain. All this in spite of the fact, open and notorious enough to be known to hundreds, that the session months before the resignation served notice on the pastor that his presence in the congregation was unendurable and that he must leave as soon as he could get another place to go to—in consequence of which notice the unhappy man scoured the entire country to find a reasonably soft cushion whereon to light when he was kicked out. Condemnation of the church's hypocrisy is hardly necessary beyond the mere statement of the case, but there may at least be appended a sententious remark which an eminent Church leader uttered several years ago in view of a similar juggle: 'Before we church folks ever get any great blessings from the Lord we have got to learn to quit lying.'"

This language is caustic, but if the facts are correctly given (as we do not doubt they are, considering the source from which they come), it is not too much so. That any body of church officials could be guilty of attempting to palm off such deception upon the public is amazing. We have known instances in which the officials of a church in their desire to be courteous to a pastor deported themselves in such a way as to give him a wrong impression as to their attitude toward his continuance as the shepherd of their flock; but no such flagrant act of duplicity as this has ever come under our observation. We are printing this utterance of The Continent with the hope that it may serve as a warning against all tendencies of a kind to mislead any party interested or the general public concerning the affairs of a congregation. If there is no occasion for speaking out frankly in regard to such matters, as usually there is not in the Methodist Church, a person may do well to remain silent except to those to whom he has a right to express himself; but no sort of dodging or two-facedness is ever justifiable. Hypocrisy and falsehood are not less offensive when practiced in connection with Church work than they are under ordinary circumstances; on the contrary, if there is any difference, they are worse, because the Church claims to stand in all things for that which is highest and best. The only proper course to pursue in the administration of the affairs of a religious denomination is one of straightforward manliness. Indeed, this is the only way in which high-minded men can afford to bear themselves in any sphere or transaction of life.

A STRONG AND TIMELY ADDRESS.

We are publishing in this issue of the Advocate an address to the people of Mississippi by representatives of various Churches of that State which deals with a matter of large importance. It is a strong utterance, and if given a careful reading by the citizens and legislators of that commonwealth, as we trust it will be, it can scarcely fail to produce a profound impression.

The two sections of the Constitution mentioned in the discussion are not only an injustice to the Protestant denominations in Mississippi, but are hurtful to the general welfare of the State and are wholly out of accord with the spirit of the times. They ought by all means to be repealed, and it is to be hoped that the new Legislature, now in session, will at least give the people the privilege of passing upon the question. To do this would be good democracy.

A DIPLOMATIC EFFORT.

The New York American gives the following account of the effort of a colored minister to be both faithful and considerate in conducting a funeral service:

"An old darkey of questionable reputation, who had been a power in the community, had died, and the church was filled with negroes to hear what the preacher would say regarding him. After a very diplomatic eulogy, the orator wound up his remarks with: 'Now, my bredern, we hopes Uncle Moses is whar we thinks he aint.'"

But, anyhow, this is better than we have known some ministers who were not colored do on similar occasions.

A SONG OF THOSE WHO ANSWER NOT.

It singeth low in every heart,
We hear it, each and all—
A song of those who answer not,
However we may call;
They throng the silence of the hreast,
We see them as of yore—
The kind, the brave, the true, the sweet,
Who walk with us no more!

'Tis hard to take the hurden up,
When these have laid it down;
They brightened all the joy of life,
They softened every frown;
But, oh, 'tis good to think of them
When we are troubled sore!
Thanks be to God that such have been,
Though they are here no more!

More homelike seems the vast unknown
Since they have entered there;
To follow them were not so hard,
Wherever they may fare;
They cannot be where God is not,
On any sea or shore;
What'er betides, Thy love abides,
Our God, forevermore!

THE CHRISTIAN HOME.

Jesus Christ was no ascetic. No Christian man has any right to attempt to create saintliness of character hy hiding himself from the activities of every-day life. I must live in my home, but that home must have upon it the stamp of the heavens. I must mix among my friends, hut my contact with my friends is to he that which will draw them toward God. I very well remember when I was married my father came into my home. We showed him into every room, and then, in his own peculiar way, he said to me:

"Yes, it is very nice; but no one will know, walking through here, whether you helong to God or the devil."

I went through and looked at the rooms again, and I thought, "He is quite right," and we made up our minds straightway that there should he no room in our house henceforth that had not some message—a picture, a text, or hook—for every comer which should tell them that we, at any rate, would serve the King.

It is our privilege to take the home in which we live, all the recreations which we have, and turn them into opportunities for recognizing godliness.—G. Campbell Morgan.

BISHOP WILSON'S NEW YEAR MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH.

(From the Baltimore Southern Methodist.)

To all of my heloved hrethren of the ministry and laity of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and all others who will give heed to it:

God has not given us the spirit of cowardice, but of power and of love and of a sound mind. The events of the past year have unsettled the minds of men, so that they are hlindly groping after ends which cannot be attained by the agencies almost unlversally employed. The Church of Christ must not allow itself to he misled or disturbed by the restlessness and unsettled conditions of affairs prevalent in this present age. The mind of every believer in Jesus Christ should be settled and fixed upon the divine assurance and promise of power and of a soher mind. The one business of the Church is to save the souls of men. That work must be carried on without regard to secular conditions. It has happened more than once in the world's history that the largest gains to the kingdom of God have been made in the midst of the most troublous times and in the face of the most strenuous opposition hy the powers of evil. "We wrestle not against flesh and blood hut against principalities and powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in the heavenly places." We must not be dismayed by the magnitude of these forces of evil. He that is for us is greater than all that be against us. If, with unquestioning faith, every believer in Jesus Christ will give himself to the one work to which he is committed hy his profession, the incoming year will mark such results as have not been witnessed at any period in the Church's life. The powers engaged in conflict exceed by far any ever arrayed in any struggle heretofore known. As God has never failed hitherto to furnish all that is needful to counteract these secular agencies, we have no reason to douht that He will abundantly supply all the Church's needs for its work at this time. Let me exhort you, then, to take to you the whole armor of God and, with ahsolute devotion and unceasing prayer, labor for the one end, the salvation of men—that is the one and only guarantee of peace on earth.

May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ and the love of God and the feliowship of the Holy Spirit he with you all.

With love, your brother in the patience and tribulation of Jesus Christ,

A. W. WILSON.

FAITHFUL PREACHING.

By Rev. John T. Sawyer, D. D.

The man who is called of God to preach his Word is to he ahsolutely free from dictation on the part of those to whom he preaches. God sends him forth with his message, and to God alone he is accountable. The truth has always hurt and it hurts to-day. The man who prophesies "smooth things" to the people—"only of love, only of peace"—does not do his whole duty, and can not have God's approval. It is a mistake to suppose that a man must not preach the law. The man who does is no more to be condemned than the surgeon who performs a painful yet necessary operation.

Again, the soil has to he ploughed and prepared for the seed, and so the law is "our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ." A man must he ploughed up and hrought under conviction hefore he will so care for Christ as to actually come to him, i. e., so as that his nature and life shall be changed and he be made a "new creature." Hence, every true man, whether his hearers bear or forhear, will preach the Word of God, hit whom it may.

The story is told of a Quaker who, finding a thief in his house, took his gun and said: "Friend, thee had better get out of the way; for I intend to fire this gun right where thee standeth." The preacher must, of necessity, wound hefore he can help, and sinners must he made conscious sinners hefore they can be reached and saved. Why? Jesus said: "I came, not to call the righteous, hut sinners to repentance." Kid glove, rose water, not-to-hit preaching is at war with the "Thou-art-the-man" preaching which God requires of his servants. A minister of God should never be like one of those Italian jugglers who practice throwing daggers at a friend. See the latter stand against a hoard and note the skill of the juggler as he pins him in and literally marks out his form with daggers. The juggler's skill is in not hitting—the preacher's skill is in his so hitting as to hring his hearers, all bruised and woundcd, to the feet of his Lord for mercy and a perfect cure.

Archbishop Whately says: "I remember one of my parishioners at Stalesworth telling me that he thought 'a person should not go to church to he made uncomfortahle.' I replied that I thought so, too; hut whether it should be the sermon or the man's life that should he altered so as to avoid the discomfort, must depend on whether the doctrine was right or wrong."

At every hazard, the man who stands for God should preach God's Word—and wherever a man does that, he has seals to his ministry, not simply in additional names on his church register, but in saved souls, spiritually vitalized of God and showing forth the power of godliness in their daily lives.

"The carnal mind is enmity against God," and hence an audience of carnal men and women will not "endure sound doctrine." What, then, must God's minister do? Suit his sermons to please his hearers and fill their "itching ears" with sweet sounds? No, no! Let him "cry aloud and spare not." Studying his Bible, seeking in prayer the enlightenment and power of the Spirit, he should go into his pulpit and give his people "the whole counsel of God," never forgetting to hold up to them the crucified Son of God as an all-sufficient Savior. The man who fails to hold up Christ in his fulness of saving merit is as untrue to his people as the man who fails to warn them in unmistakable terms of sin, death and hell. More than aught else there is needed honest, plain, pointed and awakening preaching. Shall the devil be free to seek man's ruin and the Christian ministry be muzzled in seeking to warn and save him? It is indeed a reason for devout thankfulness that in the pulpits of all denominations there are still found many men who can not and will not flatter and soothe to the eternal ruin of their hearers—men who would rather please God than be popular.

The true minister makes frequent use of such texts as the one beginning, "God so loved the world," and the other, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest;" yet he does not neglect to use such texts as the following: "Enter ye in at the straight gate," etc.; "I tell you, nay; but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish;" "If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God;" "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal;" and those found in Matthew x, 28, and xviii, 8 and 9, and in Luke xvi, 19-31.

The preacher who would be true to God and to his fellow-men, and who is determined to keep his skirts clear of the blood of souls, will hold hack no whit of God's truth, willing himself to suffer that souls may be saved.

THE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL—ARE YOU ENROLLED IN IT AS A STUDENT?

On September 30, 1914, the Board of Education of our Church moved the Correspondence School from Vanderbilt University, at Nashville, to Emory University, Atlanta. Since that time the instruction has been personally done by the faculty of the Candler School of Theology of Emory University. These men have been selected hy the high authorities of the Church as the hest men to have charge of the studies of our young preachers. No matter how conscientious and intelligent a Conference Committee may be, there is no comparison btween the attempt to adequately examine students on five or six hooks during the hustle and distracting claims of an Annual Conference session and the quiet, steady mastery of the book, from week to week, and the careful writing out of the results of that study and its submission to the criticism of specially selected and trained men.

The Correspondence School not only conducts courses of study for admission on trial and for the four years of the Conference courses, but has graduate courses for the benefit of those who have already entered upon the full work of the ministry. A very large majority of the undergraduate ministers of our Church are studying with us. We crave for all of our other young brethren the same advantages. It is a matter of increasing surprise, as we see more and more the great benefits of the correspondence work, that all our preachers who are unable to attend a theological seminary do not pursue their studies hy this method. It means so much hetter preparation for their life work and far greater efficiency in the highest of callings to which they have been summoned.

No better witnesses can be found to the benefits of the correspondence work than the students themselves. If we are to judge by the large number of unsolicited expressions of their pleasure and profit in the work, the present year has been one of highest usefulness for the Correspondence School. We quote a few of these expressions:

"I thank you for your instruction and kindness toward me during the year. I am certain that I have received unmeasured help this year in my line of work and am better prepared for service."

"I am glad that I have submitted to the grind of examination papers, for it has been of great help to me, and I feel better equipped than if I had depended upon the superficial examinations at the Annual Conference."

"I have enjoyed my course more this year than any previous year, and I have gotten more out of it than during any previous year."

"Your instruction has been highly satisfactory."

"I appreciate the fact that we have such an opportunity in taking our courses in this most helpful way."

"I have enjoyed the studies and feel that your department has been of great help to me."

"I want to thank the school for their kindness to me during the past year and can say that I have been greatly benefited by having taken the work with you."

"The course in the Correspondence School has been very helpful to me indeed."

"I thank you for thus favoring me, and am very much pleased with my work the past year which I have had under you."

"I certainly enjoyed my work this year."

"I shall always thank you and be grateful to God for the benefits to me from the Correspondence School. May you be permitted to give many more brethren these benefits!"

"I wish to thank you and the instructors for kind and patient attention and helpful suggestions. These five years have been filled with ever-increasing wonder and admiration and love for the instruction given by the Correspondence School. If I were just beginning instead of finishing, I would pursue the same course. I have obtained more thorough study of the books by your association than I possibly could have done in the old way without your instruction. The purpose of this note is to express my appreciation of the school. Thanks to you to the various members of the faculty for the proficiency of which the students have been the beneficiaries. To enumerate the benefits the school has been to me would be too long a story. I have always wondered how, with the number of students enrolled, you could give the detailed attention to each one in his work that you do. It seems to me that I have always been in very close touch with the faculty who have given me instruction."

"It is fitting to be said that, while the school was excellent under its management at Vanderbilt, I notice a decided improvement in the work done by the school under its new management. This is worthy of praise, for it was thought by the most of us that the school would be some time in regaining its regular working proficiency when it went out from the old into the new home and management."

Such letters from our students are refreshing to the spirit, showing as they do that the school is fulfilling the purpose of its founders and helping to strengthen and develop for service the ministry of our Church.

In most of the Conferences the Board of Education will take care of the fees of students who feel they can not meet them if a statement to this effect is made before registering. A large majority of all the undergraduate ministers of our Church are already studying with us. We will be glad to hear from any who are not enrolled. The past year has been one of the best in the history of the school, and we trust that the coming year will be even better. Address Correspondence School, Wesley Memorial Building, Atlanta, Ga.

REV. JOSEPH W. POSTON.

Dear Brother Meek: In the death of our dear Brother Poston I have suffered a personal hereavement. As I pen these lines at my quiet firesIde, I feel lonesome. He was to me a dear and familiar friend for more than fifty-six years. He was the last of my boyhood comrades. Not one is left. He was my senior by several years, but we were nearly the same age as preachers, both of us being licensed in 1859. I entered the itinerancy one year ahead of him, November, 1859. He joined in 1860. From that date to the day of his death he was a faithful Methodist preacher, about three-fourths of which time was spent in the regular work.

I know nothing of Brother Poston's parentage, nor where nor when he was born. I know from his own statements that his early advantages, educational and religious, were exceedingly limited. Up to the time of his conversion, he had not gone beyond the elementary grade, even in the country schools of his day. His religious life received no encouragement at home. He was then about twenty-one years of age, and had mastered the carpenter's trade, for which he had a genius, as indeed he had for any kind of mechanical work, wood or metal. When his eye was clear and his hand steady, there was not a better watch repairer in the whole land.

Soon after his conversion he felt called to preach. No boy in all the country was less prepared than he for the work. But he determined to do his best to get ready. In the providence of God, he came to the attention of Rev. Dr. John T. Baskerville, himself a Methodist preacher—a man blessed with worldly means and as generous as faithful Job. The Doctor took the boy to his home, supplied his needs and sent him to school. If Brother Poston ever had a regret, it was that he quit school too soon. He might have continued longer—not more than a year however, for the war, which began in 1861, put an end to all schools. Besides, the general sentiment of that day was that a young man called to preach ought to begin the work as soon as possible. "The king's business required haste."

Brother Poston joined the Memphis Conference at Aberdeen, Miss., under the presidency of Bishop George F. Pierce. He entered upon the work hopefully and joyfully, strong physically, and strong in the faith. I knew his hopes and his aspirations, and had some knowledge of his mental and spiritual equipment. I was cognizant of his entire self-surrender and consecration to the Master and his cause, and have never felt surprised that he bore the hardships, and conflicts, and privations incident to the work like a hero—even in the spirit of martyrdom. Nearly the whole of his ministry was spent in North Mississippi. There are a few men left in the Conference who can testify that fifty-five years ago there were some hard places in North Mississippi. I can, for just fifty-five years ago I was there and travelled over one of the hard places, filling twenty appointments on every round. It was Brother Poston's lot to fill many of the hardest of these places. He never flinched during the war, nor in the days that followed the war, and they were days that tried men's souls—days of poverty and distress. He shared uncomplainingly the fortunes of his people. His pay in money was always small, but he lived in the confidence and love of his brethren and was happy. During the whole course of his ministry I do not suppose that he ever received as salary for a year as much as six hundred dollars.

Brother Poston was a useful man. He was not a great preacher as the world rates preachers, but he understood the doctrines of the gospel and preached them faithfully. Revivals and conversions followed often where he labored. He knew how to conduct revivals. He was a better hand at such work than at almost anything else. Were the great and good Dr. Wheat alive, he could testify that Brother Poston had few equals as the organizer and manager of a great camp-meeting, and that he knew exactly how to keep order among "the lewd fellows of the baser sort." The Oxford camp-ground, laid out and built on in 1871 or 1872, stands to-day as a monument of his zeal and activity. Long may it stand! He will have many stars in his crown of rejoicing.

Brother Poston assisted me in the first protracted meeting I ever undertook to conduct. It was at Rock Hill, in a log schoolhouse about six miles south of Somerville, Tenn. Our joint labors resulted in a great revival. Many souls were turned to the Lord. It was at this meeting that I introduced him to the lady who afterwards became his wife, Mrs. Sallie Compton, a young and lovely widow. She was a devoted Christian, and when she joined Brother Poston in the itinerancy she held back nothing. All she had of body, mind and spirit were consecrated to the Lord. For nearly forty years she labored by his side and helped him in his work. She shared uncomplainingly all his toils and sorrows, and rejoiced with him in his success. She was faithful and died in the hope of heaven. His second wife I have never met. She survives him in tears, but "surrows not as those who have no hope."

Brother Poston was "a good man, full of faith and the Holy Ghost." He had faith in Christ. He experienced religion, enjoyed it, preached it, and practiced it. For many years past he lived daily in the experience of perfect love—was never afraid nor ashamed to testify to the fulness of grace and the keeping power of his Lord. He died at his home in Holly Springs, Miss., December 25, 1915. His end was peace. His last words to a close personal friend were: "Oh, it is all right up yonder!" No wonder, for it was all right down here. I shall see him again.

His devoted and life-long friend,
Nashville, Tenn. JOHN W. BOSWELL.

HE WAS REAL MEAN.

Hudson Maxim has a delicious anecdote in his work just published, "Defenseless America." On a voyage across the Atlantic he was introduced to a famous woman pacifist, a notorious militant moral reformer, a Carrie Nation of England. She had asked to meet Mr. Maxim, and on his being introduced she at once opened upon him, saying that men like him who invent explosives and guns to kill people ought to be killed with them themselves.

Mr. Maxim sought to escape verbal guillotine for the moment by diverting her thought, so he asked her opinion of the Armenian atrocities, of which the world was hearing much then. "What do I think of them?" she answered. "I think just this—that if I were the Queen of England I would put an end to that business pretty quickly."

Mr. Maxim asked her how she would do it. "Why," she responded, "I would go there with an army and exterminate these beastly Turks."

"If you were to do that," said Mr. Maxim, "surely you would need some of the tools for killing people like those you blame me for inventing, would you not?" The woman would never speak to Mr. Maxim after that.—Army and Navy Journal.

The Church News Association (New York) thinks that the great war has resulted in strengthening the influence of the Vatican in several European countries, and cites England as a notable example. During the proceedings a letter was read from Cardinal Gibbons, who previously had declined to attend, in which it was stated that the Pope was favorable to the aim of the organization and would like to see a union of the Churches of Christendom. We dare say, however, that the Pontiff would want the union to come upon such terms as would practically amount to a "Romanizing" of the other Christian bodies.

Dr. Lyman Abbott, the brilliant editor of The Outlook, was eighty years old on December 18, 1915. He comes of a line of distinguished ministers, teachers, and authors, and has himself been a Congregational minister since 1860. After the death of Henry Ward Beecher, he filled the famous Plymouth Pulpit in Brooklyn from 1888 to 1899, when Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis became the pastor of that congregation. Dr. Abbott still preaches very frequently, and it is stated that for the past sixteen years his discourses have been mostly to college students. He was admitted to the New York bar some sixty years ago and is still a member of the New York State Bar Association. The vigor of his remarkable intellect seems yet unabated.

A LETTER FROM MISSISSIPPI'S CAPITAL.

Dear Dr. Meek: Our city of Jackson is now enlivened by the presence of many lawmakers and visitors. Both houses, the Senate and Legislature, opened on Tuesday morning, Jan. 4, with nearly all of the members answering to roll call. Of course, Mr. T. G. Bilbo presides over the Senate by virtue of being the Lieutenant Governor of the State. Mr. M. S. Conner, of Seminary, was elected Speaker of the House. He is reputed to be scholarly, having graduated from the University of Mississippi in the Liberal Arts and in Law. He also took a course in law in Yale and returned to Seminary to practice his profession. I have been informed that he is a Methodist and is superintendent of our Sunday school there.

The masterly contribution by Dr. F. N. Thomas in the Methodist Review on the life and work of Dr. Gross Alexander was a worthy tribute to that great scholar. I took my whole New Testament course with Dr. Alexander. Without controversy, our Church, as great as it is, has never produced such an accurate scholar in Hellenistic Greek. It gives us unspeakable pleasure that he was recognized by men of letters as a great expositor. When shall we see his equal again? The Trustees of the Southern Methodist University at Dallas acted wisely in securing him as a professor in our new school. His presence there would have added respect and prestige.

Since our denomination has ordained that Jan. 3-9 be celebrated as a week of prayer, we are observing the time appropriately. The doors of the Galloway Memorial Church are open every day from 9 a. m. until 6 p. m. There is a book placed on a table in the Church where the worshiper may write his name daily or at such time as he enters for private prayer. Each day's registration surpasses others (this day is the 7th). On the fly-leaf of this book are the words: "And a book of remembrance was written before him, for them that feared Jehovah, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith Jehovah of hosts, even mine own possession."—Malachi 3:16, 17.

This roster will be placed in my library as a priceless possession. Mayhaps I shall be often refreshed by reading and re-reading this list of worthies.

What the Layman's Missionary Convention will mean to Mississippi cannot yet be predicted. Our pastors would do well to send delegates here as some of the choice speakers of our Church, and other Churches will be on the program. If any charge needs stirring up on the spirit of missions, this Layman's Convention, which will meet here Jan. 26-30, would prove to be a powerful stimulus. Let Mississippi Methodism take advantage of the opportunity thus afforded.

Of course, we all felicitate ourselves over the selection of Dr. DuBose, formerly of this Conference, as the Book Editor and the Editor of the Methodist Review. He has not given us a sample of his work yet, but we know that we have no risk to run. But why attempt to describe a man who is indescribable?

The Jackson churches are all in good condition and the pastors are busy. We are expecting good this year—an unlimited advance in Christian grace.

HOSPITAL DAY AND THE HOSPITAL ISSUE OF THE ADVOCATE.

Hospital Day, Jan. 23, is near at hand. All four Conferences co-operating in the building of a Methodist Hospital in Memphis, Tenn., have fixed upon the fourth Sunday in this month, or as near it as practicable, as the day to press the claims of this greatly needed institution.

There should be inspiration in this concert of interest and effort—the fact that nearly eight hundred churches and two thousand Sunday schools throughout North and East Arkansas, West Tennessee and Mississippi, and part of Kentucky are thinking of, praying for and contributing to the same great benevolence of our loved Church. It should be a day of great and cheering results.

To help forward this great work the New Orleans Christian Advocate has generously and heartily consented to devote the issue of the previous week to the cause of Hospital Day. Hence the issue of Jan. 20 will be the Methodist Hospital number. We greatly appreciate this kindness, and thank the good Editor most heartily.

Our great Methodism in this section is equipped with about all other needed machinery for successful operation. Our people are numerous, and they are by no means lacking in financial ability. Yet our failure to care for the suffering and unfortunate is a reproach to our Church and a loss to the Kingdom of Christ. This condition we are determined to remedy.

The success of Hospital Day is in the hands of our good presiding elders, pastors and Sunday school superintendents. If these brethren will press this cause with the enthusiasm its importance deserves, Hospital Day will prove a blessing to their charges and schools, and will make possible the opening of the Hospital for service at an early date.

The forthcoming Hospital Issue will contain all necessary information as to the present status of the enterprise and the plans for its future. It will also give some helpful thoughts and suggestions for those who wish to present the cause to their people and pupils.

Now let us all put our prayers and best efforts into the opportunity so inspiringly presented, and let us see to it that Hospital Day shall make it possible for our loved Methodism to begin to meet the measure of its responsibility to the many sick and suffering around us.

WANTED—By a local preacher of our Church, who is a first-class double-entry bookkeeper with up-to-date methods, business correspondent, etc., a position in either Louisiana or Mississippi; moderate salary. Address: Hope, care of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, New Orleans, La.

A PLEA FOR THE REPEAL OF THE MORTMAIN LAW.

An Address to the Legislature and to the People of the State of Mississippi.

The Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Episcopal and Christian Churches, acting through their representative assemblies and authorities, believing that there are two sections of the Constitution of the State of Mississippi which are unwise, unjust and indefensible, have appointed Committees to jointly meet and petition the Legislature and appeal to the people to abrogate those sections.

The undersigned, thus chosen and acting for those great organizations, humbly petition the Legislature and strongly appeal to the people of Mississippi to take the necessary steps to eliminate from the Constitution Sections 269 and 270 thereof.

The first mentioned section prohibits giving by will land to religious corporations for charitable purposes, and the other makes void any bequest of money or other personal property to any religious corporation for charitable and educational purposes.

These were not included in the Constitution of 1832, but were embodied in the Code of 1857. In adopting the subsequent Codes of 1871 and 1880 they were, on careful consideration, wisely omitted.

Thus the law stood permitting such gifts by will for a period of more than forty years, during which long period it is not reported that there existed in any part of the State any of the abuses which Sections 269 and 270 above referred to are supposed or were intended to prevent.

Shortly, however, before the Constitutional Convention of 1890, when the Constitution was adopted which is now in force and which contains said Sections 269 and 270, there was a rather spirited newspaper controversy between a Catholic priest and a prominent citizen of this State, who afterwards became a member of the Convention, and under whose influence, mainly, said sections were enacted and became not a statute, but a part of the organic law, that is, of the Constitution itself.

This action of the Convention, inspired no doubt by a partisan spirit, was aimed mainly at the Catholic Church. There was little debate on the question and there had been no previous public discussion through the press or otherwise.

Ever since that action of the Convention in imposing the restrictions referred to, it has been generally conceded that it acted unadvisedly and unwisely, and that there has been and is now a very general and constantly growing demand for the repeal of the same.

While we have not examined the statutes and constitutions of the various States of the Union, we are informed that there is in none of them any such arbitrary and far-reaching restriction as is contained in our Constitution in said Sections 269 and 270.

Reasons for Repeal of these two Sections.

1. There are no conditions existing in Mississippi different from all the other States, making necessary such legislation.

2. If we are mistaken in this, as is contended by some, and it is necessary to restrain the Catholic Church as was contended in the adoption of these Sections, then they have wholly failed in their purpose, for it is well known that it is the custom of that Church to take and hold the title to its property in the name of its Bishop, who has neither wife nor children and to whom legacies are constantly being made by loyal members. On the contrary, other Churches, the title to whose property is not vested in any individual, are discriminated against, in that they cannot receive certain devises or bequests because of these sections. The result is that the Catholic Church is not barred from these benefits by will, while others are barred.

3. These Sections impose an unjust restriction on the rights of persons and of property. In order to guard against improper or undue influence during the last illness, and to secure time for reflection and deliberation, it could easily be provided by statute that a devise or bequest for religious purposes shall not be valid unless the will is duly executed a stated time before the death of the testator. And, to avoid any supposed danger of an undue accumulation of lands by any religious organization, it could be likewise provided by statute that lands devised for religious purposes shall be sold or converted into money or other property within a given time after the death of the testator.

4. It has ever been the public policy of the State of Mississippi, as expressed by its laws, to restrict in every possible way vice and crime. To this end lotteries, liquor saloons, gambling and prostitution are prohibited. The sections of the Constitution in question by their restrictions really class religion and charity with vice and crime.

5. There are no restrictions on devises or bequests for the purpose of improving the quality of poultry, swine, dogs, and cattle, but for the purpose of rearing and educating children with immortal souls and making them into useful, virtuous and law-abiding citizens through Christian schools and orphan asylums, no man can now leave, by will, either money, land or other property.

6. Wealth is accumulating in this State. A few years since, it was the boast of some that Mississippi was a State without millionaires and without paupers. Now we have both. In a way never shown before, people of wealth are beginning to feel that they owe duties to their fellowmen and that they should leave a part of their wealth, which might in such large quantities be a curse to their children, to the relief of the widow and the orphan, and for the education under Christian influences of poor children, so as to fit them for positions of usefulness and honor.

7. The State Universities and Colleges are far too small to accommodate all the students of the State of age to enter them. Many complain now of the burden of taxation necessary to support and upbuild and maintain these schools. (We are not of that number.) But by repealing the sections in question it is not only possible, but highly probable, that within a few years after its repeal people of substance, by their wills, may have provided without one cent's taxation to the State many other great schools and colleges with endowments so great that thousands of the sons and daughters of Mississippi who are too poor to ever attend college may have that great privilege, to the upbuilding and uplifting of our great State, and without increased taxation on the people; that hospitals may be built for the relief of the sick and suffering, thus relieving the situation in the State where now the call is being made upon the Legislature to double the capacity of the charity hospitals with that body not knowing which way to turn to get the additional revenue to meet this and additional calls; that homes for aged and destitute persons may be maintained; that orphan asylums may be built and those already established properly maintained by childless people of wealth who are to-day ready to make wills providing for this and other like beneficent purposes, but who are prevented because of these prohibiting sections.

It is, therefore, asked that the Legislature shall adopt a resolution declaring the necessity for the repeal of said sections and submitting to the voters of the State the question of amending the Constitution by striking out said sections.

A TRIP TO THE SOUTH AND SOME MUSINGS.

Mr. Editor: I was recently summoned by telegram to the sunny Southland to assist a sister in attending to some business matters. As long as the journey seemed, I did not hesitate, because the call came from a loved one. How much we are hedged in and bound together by the God-given ties of family relationships! What a great reunion awaits us some day when we shall all be permitted to gather around the great white throne! One thing especially impressed me on my journey southward: that was the prosperity of the Southland. At Huntsville, Ala., where I stopped to visit a married sister, I was urged by the pastor of the First M. E. Church, South, to tarry over Sunday and preach to his people, but time forbade.

At Conway, Ark., while visiting another married sister, I was privileged to look in on the buildings and grounds of Hendrix College, and also had a hurried glimpse of the new $70,000 M. E. Church, South, there; and at Dallas, Tex., I had the pleasure of being driven over the grounds of the new Southern Methodist University by a brother of mine, who is interested in real estate and is now selling off adjoining lots. That this school should succeed is no surprise to those on the ground, as the citizens of Dallas have given land to the value of several hundred thousand dollars as an endowment, and are most enthusiastic in pushing it to its final consummation. Already five administration and dormitory buildings have been completed and a fine enrollment has been secured. On my return trip, I worshiped on a Sunday morning in the First Southern Methodist Church of Little Rock, Ark., and offered prayer for the pastor, the Rev. Forney Hutchinson.

But why this rambling note? So much for this long journey. Since I was once a frequent contributor to your esteemed paper, and the presence of my father and mother in my home who receive it affords me the opportunity for scanning its weekly contributions, it recalls old school days at Centenary College, when it stood on a hill in Jackson, La., and Prof. Wiley, stately, dignified scholar that he was, daily paced her campus. Prof. McGimsey taught us mathematics, and A. S. Lutz, N. E. Joyner, and many other fellows wrestled with the Greek problems that Prof. Tom Carter, hurled at us in the classroom. My, how those old days come back! In the city of New Orleans, Revs. F. N. and F. S. Parker, John Foster and Dr. J. T. Sawyer then led the hosts to battle.

Please give my greetings to the old boys on the firing line.

WM. B. VAN VALKENBURGH.

La grippe is widespread throughout the United States. Cleveland, Ohio, and Detroit, Mich., are each said to have one hundred thousand cases of it, and the disease continues to spread. "PADDLE YOUR OWN PIROGUE."

On the bayous of Southern Louisiana, in the days of my boyhood, the pirogue was one of the chief means of travel. These trim little boats, made from the trunks of the giant cypress, and beautifully modeled after the lines wrought out by the early French voyageurs, under the skilled guidance of one who was trained to the use of the paddle, and had learned to hold a right balance, were a joy to natives and a wonder to strangers from the upper country. Having once acquired the art of this somewhat risky means of locomotion, the skiff or yawl seemed tame in comparison therewith. Seated in the stern of his somewhat captious craft, the traveler, acting as both propeller and steerman, skimmed fearlessly the surface of the waters. There was little machinery, but much progress. A skillful paddler, with a stroke and backward sweep, kept his trim craft on an arrow-like course, and only changed sides to use his muscles in another relation.

Such is life, such is work, such is progress—knowledge of the art, training by constant use, and skillful results therefrom. Anything that interferes with efficiency is damaging. An overloaded pirogue would fill or capsize. Sunken logs, barnacle-covered snags, and mud-flats were avoided, or disaster was imminent. But the man in the boat was master of the situation.

Are we as a Church too old to learn, or too crystallized in our polity to change? In all honesty, let us ask: Can the men assigned to our charges "paddle their own pirogues?" Do the men on the ground, in charge, have sufficient judgment, skill and piety to keep their trust and execute its delicate duties? Or does he need constant and continuous prodding from sources too numerous to mention? His mail is laden with "red type" letters—circular letters—from all the numerous departments of the Church, connectional and quasi-connectional, denominational and interdenominational, crying, like so many fledgling birds in the nest, for help.

Our fathers called burdensome officialism "red tape"—may we not call this "red type?" Is all the love for Christ's kingdom in the earth, all earnest desire for its promotion, all devotion and loyalty to its interests, hidden in a typewriter? I, for one, am tired, weary, and I write, too—but on the other side, from another view-point.

Hear me: field work is needed more than office work. John, Paul, and a few other New Testament writers wrote us letters that are better guides than anything dictated to a secretary and pounded out in multiple sheets on a Smith Premier or an Oliver. Give the man on the ground some credit for common sense and efficiency, and let him "paddle his own pirogue." He knows vastly more about conditions than you can tell him. Save your stationery and postage—give it to the cause; it needs it far more than the post-office department.

Again, the duties of the preacher in charge are very plainly laid down in the Discipline of our Church. They are enough, and to spare; and they are full enough, if carried out, to make him efficient. And efficiency is what counts. Eloquence, culture, learning are discounted before "making good." Few indeed are the men made more efficient by red type prodding. If our office men really want to help, let them seek some neglected rural church, which only hears a sermon on a fifth Sunday in the month, and tell the people of some modern movements—meanwhile preaching the gospel. Quit hammering on a typewriter, and hammer a pine-board pulpit. It's fine exercise, and tends to godliness.

Is all this too caustic? If so, and it hurts, just exchange places with the circuit rider for a season and get a new view-point.

The following statement from M. Poincare, of France, is worth reading and remembering. He said: "You ask the President of the Republic to follow the example of other heads of foreign States and pledge himself to abstain from all spirituous liquors during the war. That is a pledge which is very easy for him to take, not only for the duration of the war, but beyond it, for the President never takes alcohol." We wish we could say of every British leader in the State, and in the army and navy, "He never takes alcohol."—Christian Guardian.

AN APPRECIATION.

I know a most unusual girl!
Her manners aren't fancy.
Her hair sets in a wavy curl,
Her name is only Nancy.
Her wishes do not boldly roam,
Like those of her big brother.
She really likes to stay at home
And try to help her mother.

'Tis true, she hasn't made a hit
By being smart or funny.
But smiles across her features flit
Like glints of April sunny,
And so I pen this simple "pome,"
Because, somehow or other,
I like that girl who stays at home
And tries to help her mother.

HOW DICK STOOD BY HIS MOTHER.

"We never have pancakes now," sighed wee Dalsy, looking mournfully across the table at her brother.

"But we have oatmeal, and it's so nice and hot," answered Dick, pressing his fingers to the outside of his bowl by way of warming them.

"Bessie Warner has pancakes every morning, with lots of maple syrup. We used to have good things when Daddy was home. I wish he would come back." And Daisy drew a mite of a handkerchief from her apron pocket and held it to her blue eyes.

"If that's all you want father home for"—Dick began indignantly. Then he stopped suddenly. "We've got mother," he added, lowering his voice.

"But she's so sick."

"Dick, come here, please."

The boy pushed his chair back from the table and entered an adjoining room.

"It was such a good breakfast you brought me, dear," his mother said with a tender smile as he stood beside her bed. "I don't see how you managed it, Dick."

"You needn't think I am going to give you my recipe, mamma," laughed the boy as he lifted the tray from the coverlet.

"You're such a comfort, Dick," his mother answered. Then she added as he turned away, "I shall be thankful when I am able to make things comfortable again for you and Daisy."

"Maybe I won't think it jolly, too," Dick declared, his face fairly beaming.

"I am going to ask the doctor if I may sit up awhile to-day. And, Dick, you won't forget to go to the postoffice this morning?"

Dick did not answer immediately. But, the threshold reached, he paused and said slowly:

"You won't count too much on getting a letter, mother?"

"No, I won't dear. But I feel we shall hear from your father to-day." And Mrs. Foster's thin, white face lighted hopefully as her boy left her.

It was something to have a soldier-father! How proudly Dick straightened whenever he thought of it! But it was more to have a sick mother depending upon him for certain things. It was this that made Dick stand by his mother as loyally as his father was standing by his country away off in the Philippines, where he had been sent a year before.

Several letters, some containing money, had come from the father to the cottage on Lincoln street, but for three months not a word had been heard from Mr. Foster. But, as old Dr. Hall said, "Where Dick is, sunshine is." And the boy's cheery spirit helped his mother to bear up during this anxious time far more than he ever dreamed of.

"No letters for you to-day, Dick," Mrs. Thompson at the village postoffice said when the boy asked for mail that morning.

A lump came suddenly into Dick's throat and his eyes acquired an unwonted dimness. How could he go back to his mother and watch the light die out of her face at the news he bore? She had been so sure there would be a letter.

"Come on, Dick. We're going nutting," said a voice at his elbow.

Dick turned to find a schoolmate standing beside him.

"There's loads of 'em on Hickory Hill. Come on."

For a moment Dick was tempted to yield. It would be easier going nutting than facing his mother. Besides, it would be time enough to tell her the disappointing news later on. But only for a moment did Dick hesitate. Dick came of soldier stock, you will remember.

"I can't go to-day, Ned," he said, and, turning, made his way home.

His mother heard his footstep as he entered the kitchen and called him to her side.

"Coming," he answered and stood as if fastened to the floor. He had not decided yet, though he had been trying all the way from the postoffice how best to tell his mother there was no letter.

"Dick, dear, come quickly!" How eager the voice sounded! Dick felt his legs tremble.

Then Daisy danced out of the bedroom to meet him. "You've been so long, Dick!" she cried. "There is a letter from daddy. Mr. Thompson gave it to Dr. Hall to bring to mamma. There's money in it, and daddy is coming home, and mamma says we'll have pan—"

But Dick had fled past Dalsy to his mother.

"Mrs. Thompson said there was no letter, and I was afraid to tell you, and—and it's been so long since we saw father, and, oh, I'm so glad!"

Here Dick stopped suddenly and hid his face in the coverlet. But mothers don't tell, and Dick was only ten, you see, and sometimes it had been pretty stiff work keeping a brave front.

But by the time Dalsy tiptoed back from the pantry, whither she had been to make sure that the griddle was quite ready to fry paneakes on, Dick's face was sunshine again, and he hummed a bar of "When Johnny Comes Marching Home Again" as he made the big armchair ready for his mother with pillows and eomforter and thought how good it would seem to have his father home again.—Marie Deaeon Hanson, In New York Herald.

THE AUTHOR OF "IVANHOE."

So cordial was Slr Walter Scott as a host, so ready to guide in outdoor rambles, "overwalking, overtalking and overfeeding his guests," as his wife used to say, that visitors to his home in Abbotsford might easily forget his business In life, or that he had anything else to do but entertain. But Walter Scott rose daily at five o'clock, and was writing away rapidly by six, so that he "broke the neck of the day's work before breakfast." This was his regular program. While he was bathing and dressing, his thoughts were "simmering" in his brain, so that he dashed them off "pretty easily" when his pen was in hand. With no interruption except for breakfast, he worked steadily till eleven or twelve. By this system, very rarely broken, he could afford a ride after lunch, and at one o'clock, rain or shine, he could mount his big horse for a gallop over the hills.

And just as he would not let his work cheat his outdoor life, he would not let it cheat his children or his friends. When Irving visited him, he had to excuse himself after breakfast to correct proof; but often he wrote in a room filled with people. It is said he used manuscript sheets the same size as letter-paper, so that he might write his books and yet seem to be writing a common letter. The shouts of his children playing marbles or ninepins around him, or his dogs sleeping at his feet, or even leaping in and out of the open window, could not interrupt his thought, though occasionally the father stopped to tell a story to the pleading pets who talked, or give an affectionate pat to those who only looked their love. And then his active hand drove on, laying aside sheet after sheet.—St. Nicholas.

EVANGELISM IN NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

The North Mississippi Conference has now two regular Conferenee Evangellsts, Rev. J. A. Bowen and Rev. J. H. Bell. These ministers have been chosen because of their experience and fitness for the work. Brother J. A. Bowen will make his home in Tupelo, Miss., and Brother J. H. Bell will reside at Columbus, Miss. All brethren who desire the service of either of these men will take notice. Brother Bowen has been in Florida taking a course of study for four weeks since Conference. These prepared men are ready for work.

Your Committee trusts that there may he a great increase of meetings this winter and in the early spring, feeling that it is a great mistake, espeelally for pastors of towns on the railroad, to postpone their meetings until summer. We now have better houses of worship and hetter methods of heating them, and we should get out of that old habit, since those who have tried the early meetings are so well pleased with the outcome. Let us give our evangelists full work this winter. They need to put in the time because the needs of the field demand a strong effort, and not many of the country districts can be worked to great profit until summer. Now, brethren of the Conferenee, the pastors should give these thoroughly equipped men an opportunity. That is what they need, and if it is given to them God will use them in the conversion of many souls, and the upbuilding of the spiritual interests of the Church will follow. These men will not he expected to go together at all. They will manage their meetings separately, but will be in perfect harmony and accord with each other in the work that has been assigned to them. With the Church praying and working under the leadership of the pastor, and with the Conference Evangelists and the local evangelists, Rev. W. M. McIntosh and Rev. W. D. Bass, this should be the greatest year in the history of North Mississippi Methodism.

Editorial

NOW IS THE TIME.

The early months of the year are the ones in which the best work can be done toward circulating the Advocate. Our three patronizing Conferences resolved in their recent sessions to give us 3500 NEW subscriptions. Of these, each of the two Mississippi Conferences is expected to furnish 1300 and the Louisiana Conference 900. We request all of our friends, clerical and lay, to lend us AT ONCE a helping hand in carrying forward this movement. There is not a cause in the Church that would not be appreciably aided by the successful accomplishment of this undertaking. We should be glad to furnish any of our pastors a list of our subscribers in their charges. In writing for these, it would be well for the pastor to give us the names of all the post-offices at which his members receive mail. It is impossible for us to keep up with the grouping of the churches and be informed as to this. Let us hear from you, brethren. We can accomplish little without your assistance.

THE METHODIST REVIEW QUARTERLY.

The January number of this stately journal is on our table, brimful of interesting matter and fully up to its usual high standard. This is the first issue under the management of the new editor, Dr. H. M. Du Bose; the material for it, however, was gathered by his predecessor, the lamented Dr. Gross Alexander, and it is therefore to be regarded as largely the finishing up of his work in connection with this publication. Very fittingly, the opening discussion is a sketch of Dr. Alexander, along with an appreciation of his character and the service which he rendered in various capacities, from the gifted pen of his former pupil, Dr. F. M. Thomas, of Louisville, Ky. The articles which follow cover a variety of subjects and are, without exception, meritorious and informing. There are the usual number of book reviews—a department which ought to be of great value.

But the feature of this issue which is likely to attract the most attention is "The Editor's Table," which contains Dr. Du Bose's first public utterances since being called to his present position. He furnishes three characteristically admirable brief discussions, as follows: "An Editorial Foreword," "The Teutonic Peril," and "Southern Methodist Authorship." In the first of these he pays tribute to the work of his distinguished predecessors, after which he proceeds to set forth his conception of the functions of such a periodical as the Review. He states that he thinks it should be "Churchly"—that "it should voice the highest manifestations of the life and spirit of the Church which it represents, and should become a certain means of awakening and fostering a denominational consciousness." To this end he would have it to be a forum for the discussion of the teachings and polity of Methodism, as well as of the general doctrines and problems of Christianity. We regard what he has to say on this subject as of such importance that, at the risk of being somewhat prolix, we quote his concluding paragraphs:

"The doctrines of Christianity require to be kept constantly in the light of inquiry and thought. Healthy and reverent discussion is the life of religion; but theological agrarianism and adventurous speculation concerning doctrinal essentials are baneful to the last degree. The commission of the Church review to promote the one is a charge to discourage and combat the other. True progress in thought and action is achieved through the enlargement and use of the things already revealed and vindicated. Not discovery, but reverent appropriation, is the opportunity to which the largest theological thought invites. Discoveries there are for those who enter that realm, but they are like those made by the plow, the pick, and the spade in a continent whose shores were long ago charted

"Theological discussion and doctrinal criticism have in our day too often presented the aspect of an inverted pyramid. The nonessentials have come first; foundations have not been considered. Intellectual and spiritual gravity has been left out of the account. The dizzy risk of extending the mightiest verities into horizontal ether has been undertaken with the complacence of a thaumaturgist. The scheme has looked possible on paper, but the attempted realization has brought collapse and confusion. Something should be learned from experience. That which does not answer to law, it is lawless to handle. Its philosophy, or its folly, would as well be left undiscussed.

"A defense of ecclesiastical order and institution comes pertinently from the Church's chief literary mouthpiece. Both virtue and occasion should be made of this function. The most unlikely subjects have sometimes blossomed and fruited with literary abundance. The Athenian masters of tragedy chose commonplace themes and brought forth immortal dramas. While dealing with its severest problems the Church may lead the best literary impulses of its people. But while the Church may not plan to compete, even in its highest-grade publications, with the literary world, it can and must maintain the defense of its own interpretations, its own authority, and the guarantees of its own corporate life. Since this can be done not through punitive, nor always through administrative, measures, but rather through sentiment and argument, the value of a responsible connectional organ of the highest grade is apparent. With such an organ in the hands of its ministry and laity, the Church has covered at least one important line of contact in the work of securing the loyalty of its constituency. This will further indicate the policy which we hope to realize in the conduct of this Review.

"But we have by no means conceived of a Church quarterly as being only a means of making denominational loyalty more certain, or of settling denominational institutions into a more certain steadfastness: the field is wider; the mission of a review is more catholic, and is more a part of world thought and action. The review should be a promoter of true culture in connection with religious and ethical discussion on the plane of world sympathies. The finest models of expression befit all kinds of religious and ethical teachings, and, in fact, the higher aspects of such teachings are not translatable in any other than the terms of classic categories. It is well to know and admit this. It is well to give sanctity to a matter so well calculated to refine the intellect and enhance the religious instincts. It might even be a cure for the small frenzy which comes of the thought that religious writing to be attractive must hazard all kinds of disrespect to the letter and spirit of a revelation which claims to be complete and inerrant. True culture is always, and in every part of it, ethical. If unethical, learning is more dangerous than ignorance, as fire and water, when unleashed of the hand of use, are lawless in proportion to their volume and range.

"It is our wish and prayer that the Review under our hand should be an evangelical force, a true defender of the Church's doctrines and institutions, and a channel for the liveliest thought-expression and the most genuine literary activity possible in our great brotherhood. The Virgin-born, divine-human Christ and the doctrine of his sufficient blood atonement for human sin, his compassionate, healing love for men, and whatever else belongs essentially to the kingdom of his grace, are the theme and matter which rise Himalayan high before us as we contemplate the possible future pages of this Review."

It is indeed a splendid ideal for The Review which the new Editor here unfolds; and if he can bring it to a realization of these aims he will make it a mighty force for the upbuilding of Southern Methodism and of the cause of Christ. Possessed of rare literary genius, of a passion for investigation and hard work, and of a sound faith and profound convictions, along with an open mind and balanced judgment, we feel that Dr. Du Bose has "come to the kingdom for such a time as this." Let the brethren hold up his hands in every possible way, and especially encourage him by giving The Review a much larger circulation than it has ever had. Every preacher ought to take it and it ought to go into the homes of thousands of our laity. If our people are to stand firm amid the perplexities of this transitional age they must be informed and fully established in the truth. There was never before so much need for serious and convincing discussion as there is to-day, and periodicals which afford an opportunity for it will, in our opinion, be in increasing demand in the coming years. The warfare between the Prince of light and the Powers of darkness is destined to become more largely extended into intellectual realms as the knowledge of mankind expands, and Christianity must meet the issues presented in these fields and conquer in them as well as elsewhere. For this reason, the Christian scholar and Christian magazine may now be numbered among the necessities of the Church.

MRS. MEEKINS' INJURIES RROVE FATAL.

Mrs. Lily Meekins, our city missionary, connected with the Mary Werlein Mission, who, as was stated in the Advocate last week, was accidentally injured while alighting from a street car on January 2, died at her home at the mission last Sunday night about 10 o'clock. It was thought when our paper went to press last week that she was doing well and it was hoped that she would recover, but she had suffered a concussion of the brain and a contusion of the shoulder which finally proved to be too much for her to overcome, even with the best of nursing and medical attention. Though her condition was regarded as very grave, her death was sudden and came when unexpected. Her trained nurse, Miss Cora Carney, had prepared her for the night and she remarked that she was feeling better. A few minutes later, however, she complained of not feeling well, and her faithful physician, Dr. George S. Brown, was quickly summoned. A few moments later she gently expired.

Mrs. Meekins was the widow of Mr. John Meekins and had been a resident of New Orleans for forty years. Before her marriage she was Miss Lily Colton, and was born in Covington, La. She is survived by a brother, Mr. Joseph Colton, of Washington, and a niece, Mrs. William Hollis, of this city. Her only child, Miss Nellie Meekins, died a few weeks ago. Mrs. Meekins was 62 years of age. She had been connected with the Mary Werlein Mission for a number of years and her noble and unselfish work had attracted much attention. Her decease is greatly mourned, and by it New Orleans Methodism has sustained a heavy loss. We trust that some one familiar with her life and service will in the near future prepare for the Advocate a fitting memoir of this great-hearted woman who, like the Master, "went about doing good."

WILL BE A GREAT OCCASION.

The Laymen's Missionary Convention to be held in New Orleans January 23-26 promises to be a great occasion. The sessions will be held in the First Methodist Church. The speakers on Sunday, January 23, will be Dr. J. T. Henderson and Dr. W. R. Lambuth. A number of the most distinguished missionary workers in the United States will be in attendance and will deliver addresses. It is a rare opportunity which is afforded the people of New Orleans and the surrounding section to listen to the stirring messages of these noted Church leaders. Similar meetings have been held in nearly all of the leading cities of the country, and have been largely attended and have awakened widespread interest. It is to be hoped that a large number of our pastors and laymen from over the State of Louisiana will find it possible to be present at this convention. We feel sure that they would be amply repaid for coming.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. W. B. Baker has entered upon his work at Sherman, Miss., and states that he is much pleased with his new charge.

January 25 will be election day in Louisiana. A safe rule to follow in casting a ballot is for one to vote as one prays.

Rev. J. C. Price, of Ida, La., says: "Our work is getting on finely and the prospect is bright for a good year." Brother Price has our thanks for a club of 5 subscriptions from his charge."

Rev. A. W. Turner, Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, spent the early part of this week in New Orleans. He stated that the outlook for the prohibition cause throughout the State is encouraging.

Rev. T. L. Porter, of Miami, Oklahoma, in renewing his subscription to the Advocate, says: "I am well and happy, comfortably situated, and have a very fine people to serve. The year has opened with very bright prospects."

Rev. J. H. Holder, presiding elder of the Sardis District (North Mississippi), requests us to state that the meeting of the District Stewards of his district has been changed from January 18 to January 25. Let all interested note this change and govern themselves accordingly.

Rev. Lemuel B. Green, of the Alabama Conference, has been appointed a professor in Paine College, Augusta, Ga., our school for negroes. He takes up the work of Rev. W. L. C. Wallis, who, after nearly ten years of faithful service in that institution, died in November last.

Mrs. R. F. Harrell requests us to state that the present address of Mrs. J. L. Nelll, Publicity Superintendent of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference, is Box 84, Jackson, Miss. It will hereafter so appear in the Woman's Department of the Advocate.

The Joint Commission of our own Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Methodist Protestant Church, appointed to decide whether John Street Church, New York, or Sam's Creek, Maryland, has the right to claim priority of organization in American Methodist history, will meet in Baltimore, Md., January 25-27.

We make grateful acknowledgment to Rev. A. L. Porter, of Cleburne, Texas, one of its editors, for a copy of the "Journal of the Central Texas Conference for the Year 1915." It is in every respect a most creditable publication. The Central Texas is one of the great Conferences of the Lone Star State, having a Church membership of approximately 80,000.

Rev. W. W. Hopper sends us some subscriptions from Mayersville, Miss., and adds the following note: "We have been kindly received and our people have evidenced their loyalty to their pastor and his wife in many ways. We are grateful for this service to the Advocate, and we wish Brother Hopper a large measure of success in his new field.

The prayer meeting of the First Methodist Church of Monroe, La., according to "The Monroe News-Star," is increasing in interest and attendance. On a recent Wednesday evening Pastor Morris discussed in an impressive and informing manner the theme, "What Methodists Believe."

This congregation has also lately conducted an every member canvass with gratifying results.

We acknowledge the reception from the Rev. and Mrs. Robert Selle of an invitation to the marriage of their daughter, Miss Katherine, to Mr. Ashly Minor Poole, which was announced to take place at the Methodist Church in Brookhaven, Miss., on Wednesday afternoon, Jan. 12, at 3 o'clock. We extend congratulations to the happy couple, and wish them much happiness.

Miss Ellen Fitz Pendleton, President of Wellesley College, at Wellesley, Massachusetts, was a distinguished visitor in New Orleans last week. Much attention was shown her and several entertainments were given in her honor. It was under Miss Pendleton's splendid leadership that pledges amounting to more than $1,000,000 were recently secured for the great institution with which she is connected in a single year.

Writing under date of Jan. 1, Mrs. Lida Falkner Bobbitt, the accomplished wife of President R. E. Bobbitt of Mansfield College, says: "We have several new girls and our work has begun again in earnest. The College and our girls are very dear to us." We are pleased to know that things are progressing well at this excellent institution. The Methodists of Louisiana may feel assured that its interests are in safe and capable hands.

Rev. L. W. Cain, of Leland, Miss., sent us the following message from Nashville, Tenn., on Jan. 4: "We are having a fine meeting. The evangelists of the Church are worth while in every way. I have enjoyed the trip and have been greatly benefited. I think that hereafter I will be able to do better work." Brother Cain is an excellent help in a revival, and we hope that our pastors in Mississippi will keep him busy during the year.

Brother W. E. Fechter, of Fernwood, Miss., sent us last Monday the following brief notice: "Died at Fernwood, Miss., Sunday, January 9, 1916, at 5 o'clock p. m., James Sewell, aged 65 years. The funeral service will take place at the Methodist Church, Tuesday morning, January 11, at 9:45 o'clock. The interment of the body will be made at Bruce, Miss." We regret to chronicle this sad news, and we extend sympathy to the bereaved.

Rev. John E. Stower, Secretary of the Superannuate Endowment Fund, says to our pastors throughout the Church: "Any information you may request, the write correspondents to persons who might be induced to aid the Superannuate Endowment Fund or any of the Conference endowment funds will be gladly received. I am ready to spend a Sunday with any pastor where there is opportunity to aid our good cause. The brethren will please write me."

Having heard that his son, Mr. F. F. Hoss, Jr., who, as is stated elsewhere in this issue of the Advocate, is ill in Columbia, was getting well, Bishop Hoss has gone from San Francisco to his home at Muskogee, Oklahoma. The whole Church will rejoice to know that the beloved chief pastor is again in the homeland. Let all our readers pray that his health may improve and that in due time he may be spared to Southern Methodism for many years.

Rev. J. F. Nelson, of Lake View Springs, Miss., would be pleased to get in revival work. Brethren who wish to secure a date can best write Rev. R. A. Tucker, Glendale, Miss. Rev. J. S. Cummins, Bear Creek, Miss., is one of the following: Rev. P. P. Gore, Rev. [illegible] Rev. J. G. Johnson, Rev. P. P. Phillips, Rev. W. F. O. Bryan, Rev. D. L. Crichet and Rev. T. F. McLeod. Brother Nelson will be open for engagements from May 1 until the middle of July.

Mr. George Avery, of Biloxi, Miss., has left to complete the music course at the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago. We are pleased to assure to him a rich field of service as a singer and church leader. He has had some experience as a "singer" with evangelistic services. We are wishing for him success. We also wish to know more about him. Rev. W. B. Lee, presiding elder of the Scranton District, Gulfport, Miss., Note that Mr. Avery address Biloxi, Miss.

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRUFF

Girls! Try it! Hair gets soft, fluffy and beautiful—Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine.

If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You can not have nice heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store and just try it.

On the morning of September 29, 1915, the death angel visited our home and carried away our little darling, BESSIE FOSTER, 2 years and 13 days old. This caused me to realize that the words our Savior spoke are true: "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God." I often called her papa's angel when she would climb up in my arms and place her little baby-hands about my neck and say "Papa, I love you; sing, papa." I would often sing "Sweet By and By," but little did I think it would be but a few days until my darling would be in the city beyond, and I could sing "In the sweet by and by, we shall meet on the beautiful shore," and know she is on the other shore waiting to welcome loved ones home. She was patient and submissive through all her suffering and showed a Christ like spirit. Just before she died she wanted papa to sing her to sleep. I asked her if she loved papa, and she said, "Yes, sir." I began to sing her baby-song "By, baby By;" she closed her eyes to sleep and tried to help me sing, but her little voice was so weak she only moved her lips and she soon fell asleep—the sweet sleep of death—and passed from this wicked world of pain and sorrow to the peaceful resting-place that awaits the redeemed in the sky. There we shall meet her again some sweet day.

RESOLUTION OF SYMPATHY.

Whereas, one of the beloved members of the Woman's Missionary Society at Heidelberg, Miss., Miss Callie Finlayson, who was such a devoted daughter, has recently been bereft of her mother, to whom during her long illness she gave herself in loving attention and patient devotion; therefore, be it Resolved:

1. That we, the members of this Society, extend to Miss Callie Finlayson our sincere sympathy and commend her and her father, together with all the other members of the family, to God who gave and who hath taken away.

2. That these resolutions be spread on the Minutes of the Society and a copy given to Miss Callie Finlayson, and that a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed: Mrs. J. W. Ramsey, Miss Sallie Dantzler, Mrs. C. G. McCormick.

AN EXPRESSION OF SYMPATHY.

Whereas, on Thanksgiving Day, while all was sunshine and joy, a sad misfortune befell Mrs. George Morrison and her family in the unexpected death of their boy, Elmer—the sad news which came to them turning their joy into sorrow and shocking the entire community; therefore, be it Resolved:

3. That these resolutions be spread on the Minutes of this Society, a copy given to Mrs. Morrison, and a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed: Mrs. J. W. Ramsey, Miss Sallie Dantzler, Mrs. C. G. McCormick.

GEORGE P. SHAW.

Wayne County, Mississippi, never produced a more loyal nor honorable citizen than George P. Shaw, who was born on November 13, 1839, and who for seventy-six years lived the upright life which inspires confidence and love. On Wednesday, August 11, 1915, the Master called, and he went up higher to await the coming of loved once left behind, and to enjoy the blessed fellowship of those gone before.

"Uncle George" was married to Miss Hilma Lefstrand on January 25, 1872. Of this union were born nine children—seven daughters and two sons. Eight of these children and the devoted wife were permitted to be with and minister to this good man until the end. One little daughter preceded him to the glory world. Converted in early life, his religion stood the tests of the varying experiences of more than half a century. He was a man of great faith. He believed God when he said, "The steps of a good man are ordered of the Lord," and so he was a man of prayer. Many people in all walks of life can testify to his unbounding Christian hospitality. He had that kind of courage that faced shot and shell on the battlefield without flinching, and the higher kind that faced the financial wreck and ruin caused by the war and began the struggle for reconstruction without losing heart; and also that still higher courage that enabled him as a private citizen to stand uncompromisingly for the right under all conditions. He had great love for his friends and especially for his old comrades who, with him, wore the gray. He loved his family—his home was his castle. His funeral was held in the Methodist Church at Winchester by Rev. A. B. Coit, a Presbyterian minister from Enterprise, who is a beloved friend of the family. The church was filled to overflowing with his fellow-citizens from every walk of life, while great crowds of colored people stood with bowed heads just outside. Their presence and tear-stained faces testified to the high esteem in which he was held. The verdict of all is: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

One who loved him,

SADIE CLARK.

Sage Tea to Darken Hair

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Bring Back Color and Lustre to Hair.

You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost over night if you'll get a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this old, famous Sage Tea Recipe are sold annually, says a well-known druggist here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is turning gray, becoming faded, dry, scraggly and thin have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful—all dandruff goes, scalp itching and falling hair stops.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur to-night and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.—Adv.

RESULTS OF A "WHITE GIFTS" CHRISTMAS PROGRAM.

While the writer had helped to work up other similar programs, his first experience in carrying out a "White Gifts" service was the past Christmas in our Sunday school at Donaldsonville, and from first to last we were delighted with the results. To begin with, the program was simple and easily prepared, the singing of the standard Christmas hymns being the larger part of the service for the congregation, and these hymns when once learned can be used year after year. The Christmas stories that set forth the spirit of the program were told by adults, who themselves took care of this part of the service. Luther's Cradle Hymn by a Junior girl was the only number on our program for which training was needed, and that was given by the child's mother. The service was profoundly spiritual, from the Scripture lessons on the birth of Christ to the presenting of the gifts. It was like a revival meeting, where Christ was held up as "all in all." As a result, in our school, which has an attendance of about fifty, the gifts summed up as follows: Six signed pledges for accepting Christ, and four for renewed consecration; and four "intermediate" boys came forward and publicly renewed or began their Christian life. Seven signed pledges to be more regular in attendance upon Church, ten pledged to try and bring others to Church, eight to win some one to Christ, and two to attend the weekly prayer meeting and to try and bring others with them. Four pledged to respond to any reasonable request for service from the pastor, and two pledged to aid in visiting the sick. Three pledged to join the Woman's Missionary Society.

In "substance," various gifts of groceries and vegetables were presented, including a filled box by the "intermediate" boys' class, and a flour sack of ear popcorn by a beginner, and $13.50 in cash. The groceries were divided into baskets and distributed to the poor, including two aged negro women, and the money was used in buying clothes for children not able to dress properly for Sunday school.

In service to the Sunday school, ten promised to be always on time, and five promised to bring new scholars, one naming two as the number, one five, and one six. Seven promised to respond to any reasonable service asked for by the superintendent. One promised to attend the Young People's Society more faithfully, and two to lead the meetings.

In carrying out the "white" emblems of the program, the altar and the pulpit of the church were decorated in white, banked in pot plants in white containers, and white streamers trimmed in green connected a brilliant electric star, above and behind the pulpit, to an electric cross that sat on a white table that made the altar upon which the gifts were laid. All other lights except those composing the star and the cross were turned out during the giving service, these emblems representing to the eye the beginning and the end of the Savior's life.

Following the giving Christmas service, on another night during the holidays, the congregation had an old-time Christmas party in a borrowed hall, and had all manner of games and social pleasures. At this time Santa Claus came and brought fruits and candies for each one present, and a delightful time was had.

In the person of Mr. H. L. Baker (by the way, who drives in twelve miles to be present), we have a Sunday school superintendent that sees things from afar, and we expect the already splendid school, for its size, to be doubled in attendance and to develop materially in efficiency during the year. To be associated with such a laborer in the Lord's vineyard is a delight too rarely enjoyed by a pastor.

WATCH YOUR HEART IF YOU WISH HEALTH.

Weak hearts are more common than weak stomachs, lungs, eyes, backs, or kidneys. Every time your heart misses a beat your life is being shortened. Heart disease, taken in its early stages, is quite easy to relieve; but every day that treatment is delayed the relief becomes more difficult.

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy taken in conjunction with the Nervine, or alone, has proven very efficient in relieving heart disorders.

The Rev. Geo. W. Kiracofe, of Keller, Va., in this connection stated as follows:

"It has been many years since I was cured of heart trouble by Dr Miles' Heart Remedy and Nervine. I am just as sound as a dollar in that organ to-day. Before I took these remedies my breathing had been short and at times difficult; there were sharp pains about my heart, accompanied by fluttering which would make me feel faint and languid. The least excitement or worry would unnerve me. The trouble grew steadily worse. Doctors' prescriptions did me no good. But since using Dr. Miles' Remedies all symptoms were removed and have never returned since."

If you suspect that you have heart trouble avoid all dangerous delays.

It costs you nothing to try these remedies if you are not benefited. All you have to do is to return the empty bottle to the druggist and he will refund your money.

OVER-EATING.

Life preservation being a natural instinct of mankind, and its contingent necessity being that of eating, diet becomes, in consequence, the most vital question of existence. Its importance will be generally conceded We all know the old proverb which says: "It is not the legs that make the stomach to amble, but the stomach the legs."

Food has been defined by the late Doctor Parkes as "a substance with a store of latent or potential energy, manifest as heat, electricity, mechanical movement or formative power, so as to serve the purpose of healthy life, or else a substance aiding the manifestation or application of this energy."

Sir Henry Thompson says that "a proportion, amounting to at least more than one-half, of the disease which embitters the middle and latter part of life is due to avoidable errors in diet. Such disease renders life for many disappointing, unhappy and profitless, a term of painful endurance, while for not a few it shortens life.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

If Kidneys Act Bad Take Salts

Says Backache is sign you have been eating too much meat.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.

MISSION STUDY IN SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

To the Pastors and Sunday School Superintendents of the North Mississippi Conference.

Dear Brethren: The educational department of our General Board of Missions has determined upon a seven-year study of the mission fields occupied by our Church in our Sunday schools—one for each year.

The field for study this year is China. A course of study for the primary, junior, intermediate and senior classes of our Sunday schools has been prepared, which should be taken up by the classes either in monthly studies of the lessons or during some one quarter of the year. If you will write to Dr. Rawlings for "China in the Sunday School," a little folder explaining the course, he will gladly furnish to you all that you desire.

As all thinking men know, "Information produces inspiration." If our Sunday schools but knew the great need of China, and that Christianity is meeting that need, there would be but little trouble in getting a missionary special for China from each Sunday school this year. This course of study on China will furnish much valuable information that can easily be converted into enthusiastic inspiration for the great cause of missions.

Please let us think of our duties to China, and other religious obligations, as glorious opportunities to cowork with God in the BIG business of saving a lost world. Let's not allow ourselves to think of any religious duty as an irksome task. Such thoughts are paralyzing to one's religious life. But to approach one's Christian obligations with happiness and buoyant joy for the privilege of coworking with God is rejuvenating to the Christian and life-producing to the world.

Yours fraternally,
J. TILLERY LEWIS,
Conference Misionary Secty.

WHERE DRUGS FAIL.

Many chronic diseases fail to respond to drug treatment, even in the hands of the best physicians, whereas acute diseases usually respond readily. When a disease has become chronic, drugs often seem to do as much harm as they do good, for the system rebels against them. It is just this class of cases which derive the greatest benefit from Shivar Mineral Water. If you suffer with chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, gall stones, kidney or liver disease, uric acid poisoning or other conditions due to impure blood, do not hesitate to accept Mr. Shivar's liberal offer as printed below. His records show that only two in a hundred on the average, have reported "beneficial results." This is a wonderful record from a truly wonderful spring. Simply sign the following letter:

Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if it falls to benefit my case you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

JENNINGS, LA.

Dear Brother Meek: I arrived here in time to take charge of my new work on December 1. We were cordially received and the outlook for the year's work is good. We have organized our Sunday school classes and have also started a teacher-training class. We observed "Rally Day" for Africa and it resulted in a nice sum being pledged as a special contribution to the cause of missions. Our people see as never before the needs of that field of Christian endeavor. We have a class that will soon begin mission study, using as a text book "Daybreak in the Dark Continent." We are in the midst of the week of prayer and self-denial. A good attendance is present at each evening service. Our congregations are increasing, and, on account of our accessibility to the main street of the town, many of the visitors to Jennings attend our Church. We are planning to have a day set apart as Advocate Day, on which we shall present in a special way the claims of our church paper.

THE TROUBLE IS NOT INSIDE.

The myriads of parasitic germs which cause Tetter, Eczema, Ringworm, Itch, Acne, Salt Rheum, etc., cannot be killed internally. They live and feed on the surface and must there be treated. Tetterine is the common sense treatment that has scientific principles to back it up. E. A. Kennedy, druggist of Brooklyn, Fla., says: "Tetterine has cured quickly and permanently several stubborn cases of tetter that came under my personal knowledge. One of 15 years standing." 50c at druggist's or by mail from Shuptrine Co., Atlanta, Ga

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK IN MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

I wish to give you some facts concerning the Sunday School Board of the Mississippi Conference and its work.

We feel that the Sunday School Board is very fortunate in being able to secure the services of Rev. J. L. Neill as our Field Secretary. Brother Neill was the popular pastor of First Church, Laurel, and did not wish to give up his work, and never did give his consent to leave the work, but stated that he would loyally go to any field to which the Church would send him. Bishop Atkins gave the Board permission to select their man, assuring us that if we selected the best man possible, he would stand by us in our choice. We selected Brother Neill, and he appointed him to this work against Brother Neill's wish, and also the wish of the official board of his Church.

Brother Neill has taken hold of the work with his accustomed enthusiasm, and we are looking forward to a great year in our Sunday school work in the Mississippi Conference.

Brother Neill goes to the various fields free of charge, and we want all Sunday school superintendents and pastors to feel perfectly free in writing him, and extending an invitation for work in their respective fields of labor. This will enable him to go to the poorest fields, as well as the more fortunate fields, without any embarrassment to pastors, superintendents or the people.

Our goal for the year is 10,000 new pupils, a "mission special" in every Sunday school, every teacher a personal worker, and every school observing Children's Day.

We are only asking this year for one thing from the Sunday schools, and that is the collections from Children's Day to maintain our work. Last year, in addition to this, we asked for a five-cent assessment and a fifth Sunday collection. We found this burden; some on the Sunday schools and have decided to ask only one thing—the Children's Day collection.

We feel that the pastors and superintendents, both will appreciate our position and will do their best to make this as great a success as possible. The Board has asked Brother Neill to attend to the correspondence regarding the Children's Day programs and services; so all correspondence regarding this matter will be with him. His address is Jackson, Miss., Box 84.

H. F. TOLLE,
Chairman of the Board.

A Foe to Tuberculosis

The Journal of the American Medical Association (August 9, 1914), reviewing an article on "The Influence of Calcium Salts on Constitution and Health," said: "They (the authors) report numbers of concrete instances in which patients gained in vitality and energy after taking calcium."

Doctors agree that in tuberculosis lowered vitality and lost energy must be overcome.

One of the constituents of Eckman's Alterative is calcium (lime), in such combination with other valuable ingredients as to be easily assimilated by the average person. To this, in part, is due its success in the treatment of tuberculosis—a service which even some ethical practitioners have acknowledged to their patients. We make no wholesale claims for it but since it contains no opiates, narcotics or habit-forming drugs, a trial is safe. Price $1 and $2 per bottle. Sold by leading druggists or sent direct from the Laboratory. We would like to send you a booklet containing information of value and references.

Old Folks Saved From Suffering

Mrs. Mary A Dean, Taunton, Mass., in her 87th year, says: "I thought I was beyond the reach of medicine, but Foley Kidney Pills have proven most beneficial in my case."

Mr. Sam A. Hoover, High Point, N. C., writes: "My kidney trouble was worse at night and I had to get up from five to seven times. Now I do not have to get up at night, and consider myself in a truly normal condition, which I attribute to Foley Kidney Pills, as I have taken nothing else."

Mrs. M. A. Bridges, Robinson, Mass., says: "I suffered from kidney ailments for two years. I commenced taking Foley Kidney Pills ten months ago, and though I am 61 years of age, I feel like a 16-year-old girl."

Foley Kidney Pills are tonic, strengthening and up-building, and restore normal action to the kidneys and to a disordered and painful bladder. They act quickly and contain no dangerous or harmful drugs.

GRAY HAIRS

mean that your hair is not receiving proper attention, and yet a gray hair will do more to make you look old than anything else. Rid yourself of an aged appearance by giving the hair correct treatment and proper food. There can be no life without food, and unless you give your hair the proper attention you cannot expect it to retain its lustre and beauty. Use "La Creole," the best of all hair dressings and see your gray hairs disappear. This dressing was discovered by the Creoles of Louisiana many years ago, who were famous for their beautiful hair. Since then it has worked wonders, banishing gray hairs and restoring the hair to its original lustre. As a hair dressing it has no equal, keeping scalp in a clean, healthy condition. It has stood the test for over fifty years. Don't use strong alkaline soaps as they do more damage than good. Use "La Creole" hair dressing, the natural preservative. For sale by all dealers. Price $1.00. Manufactured by Van Vleet-Mansfield Drug Co., Memphis, Tenn.—Adv.

Calomel To-day, Sick To-morrow

Dose of nasty calomel makes you sick and you lose a day's work.

Calomel salivates! It's mercury. Calomel acts like dynamite on a sluggish liver. When calomel comes into contact with sour bile it crashes into it, causing cramping and nausea.

If you feel bilious, headachy, constipated and all knocked out, just go to your druggist and get a 50-cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone, which is a harmless vegetable substitute for dangerous calomel. Take a spoonful and if it doesn't start your liver and straighten you up better and quicker than nasty calomel and without making you sick, you just go back and get your money.

If you take calomel to-day you'll be sick and nauseated to-morrow; besides, it may salivate you, while if you take Dodson's Liver Tone you will wake up feeling great, full of ambition and ready for work or play. It's harmless, pleasant and safe to give to children; they like it.—Adv.

SOME QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

The Editor of the Woman's Missionary Work in the Midland Methodist recently received a communication questioning the expenditures made by the Woman's Missionary Council. Mrs. Hume R. Steele, our educational secretary, thinking that these questions and their answers might help dispel prejudice in the minds of some of our women who always want to know the "why" of affairs, asks that we publish the same in our department. We take pleasure in granting their request, and hope thereby to arouse greater enthusiasm among our women and kindle in their hearts an earnest desire to give a more cordial support to the work.

"'Why is the large amount of $25,000 set aside for the entertainment of the Council when it is needed, as some profess, on the field?

"'Why are such large salaries paid officers?

"'In the last statement one-sixth of the amount collected was deducted for expense of administrating. To whom does this go?

"'Women's societies of other churches are administering much larger sums with far less expense. Why cannot this organization do likewise?'

"It is of vital interest to the Church to know that the funds collected for missionary work and administered by the Woman's Missionary Council reach the objects for which moneys are given, and are not squandered in extravagance. Those who do not understand the details of work and the necessary expenditures are apt to interpret some appropriations as extravagant; whereas, if the details were known, satisfaction would be felt at the wise expenditures.

"In 1914 the Home Department raised and expended $267,523.22; the Foreign Department, $283,807.52; total, $551,330.74. The total cost for administering these funds was 6 and 9-20 per cent—that is, one-sixteenth of all moneys, and not one-sixth, as some have interpreted. In other words, 93 and 11-20 cents of every dollar goes directly to the work and workers on the field. Under the head of adminlstration, for which the 6 and 9-20 cents is used, is included the cost of printing annual reports, leaflets for the instruction and conduct of the work, necessary expressage of the same, postage, and clerical work which must be done accurately and expeditiously, travel in the interest of the work, and salaries of five officers.

"Few, if any, business corporations administer so large an amount on so small a percentage. Fifteen to twenty per cent is given as a good economic basis for administration of the average business enterprise.

"It has been said that the woman's societies of other Churches are administering larger sums with far less expense. Such woman's societies do not exist as independent organizations, but are auxiliaries to their general boards. They do not administer upon their own funds, but turn them over to their general boards, whose rates of administration are higher than that of any woman's board. In other words, the women of such boards are collectors of funds, not administrators.

"The annual session of the Woman's Missionary Council is the great inspirational meeting of the Church. Missionaries from foreign fields, deaconesses, and home missionaries from various sections of the country, and officers and members gather for the purpose of bringing together all facts, incidents, and histories, which create interest in the great missionary work. The cost of travel for those who bring these living messages must be met. In addition to this, because of its size, the Council is a self-entertaining body. The community where the Council meets and all the Conference societies receive inspiration, which creates larger interest in the work, and great educational influence is thus brought to bear upon the Church at large. The individual gifts from those who are inspired by information given at these councils have in many instances more than equaled the cost of the meeting. When it is remembered that fourteen of the nineteen women of the Executive Committee give, without remuneration, a great part of their time in this service, and that they themselves are large contributors to the cause, it is easily understood that the expenses incidental to this Council work must be borne by the society demanding the work of them.

"Why are such large salaries paid to officers? The answer to this question is relative. When it is remembered that the secretaries and treasurer of the Woman's Missionary Council render the type of service for which men receive salaries twice or triple the size paid these women, the question is inverted; Why are the salaries not larger? The difference in the salaries of men and women doing a like work is one of the economic problems that society is facing to-day These salaried officers have come at the call of the Council from other lines of work. Some have renounced larger salaries to serve this woman's work. The Word of God says, 'The workman is worthy of his hire;' and when it is remembered that the secretaries and treasurer of the Council work continuously on an average from nine to fifteen hours a day, that they tarry not because of physical fatigue, but by diligence have helped to make the work, the question as to why they are paid such large salaries is beggared. They have families or other obligations, and these divinely given obligations cannot be met without salaries. Any organization must pay for efficient service.

"This great missionary work demands co-operation and not criticism. Those who know it best and who give most generously recognize that the women of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the missionary societies have wrought well and deserve endorsement and support.

"Any work need not hope to escape criticism. Friendly criticism is helpful, but the spirit that would obstruct is neither friendly nor constructive. There is a story of one who resented that ointment was poured upon the Master's head. This woman's work for the outcast, the foreigner, the heathen, the sufferer, has called for the heroic. They have braved the seas, they have dared public opposition, they have dared to believe that the cross of Christ could lift all men, where a critical spirit or a less consecrated zeal would stand off and ask: 'Why this expenditure? Why this waste of life?'"

MID-YEAR MEETING OF EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The Executive Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Council met in mid-year session Monday, November 29, and continued through Friday, December 3. All members were present except Mrs. W. J. Piggott, Social Service Superintendent, who is not yet strong enough to take up her work.

It was with sincere regret that the committee considered the resignation of Mrs. F. F. Stephens, who has served so efficiently as First Vice-President of the Council. Mrs. Stephens felt that the pressure of other duties made this action necessary. Her resignation will be felt as a distinct loss to her co-workers throughout the Church.

In seeking to fill her unexpired term the committee turned to Mrs. J. E. Grubbs, of Winchester, Ky., who has so ably served before in this capacity. Mrs. Grubbs accepted the office and entered upon her duties January 1.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhœa, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

The prompt and positive results given by this pleasant tasting, home-made cough syrup has caused it to be used in more homes than any other remedy. It gives almost instant relief and will usually overcome the average cough in 24 hours.

Get 2½ ounces Pinex (50 cents worth) from any drug store, pour it into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. This makes a full pint—a family supply—of the most effective cough remedy at a cost of only 54 cents or less. You couldn't buy as much ready-made cough medicine for $2.50. Easily prepared and never spoils. Full directions with Pinex.

To avoid disappointment in making this, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex," and don't accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., 235 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

UNITED AUTO RENT SERVICE

From the Field

Greensburg, La.

Dear Mr. Editor: We are well pleased with our new location. I have been to each church in the charge, and I found that there are good people at each place. They did not give us one "pounding," but several each week, which, though composed of small quantities, amounted to something after all. The parsonage is being furnished by the Ladies' Aid Society. We have four Sunday schools and two prayer-meetings.—J. L. Cady, P. C.

Flora, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: Just a word from Flora. We were given a genuine old-time Methodist reception. We had three fine services on the opening Sunday of the year. We hope soon to have all the Church pulling together all the time for the best interests of the Kingdom of God. The Advocate will not be overlooked in our plans for the year. I am always glad to recommend it and your work.—M. F. Adams.

Calhoun City, Miss.

Dear Brother Meek: I am delighted with my present opportunities—six new churches, full congregations, and hearts hungry for soul food. Our welcome everywhere has been cordial and on a liberal scale. I had rather serve Calhoun City with such a welcome than the chief of city churches with even a pencil line of coldness to me and mine. We love to be loved, and in turn to love our people and the common cause. We came here not to look for troubles, but opportunities, and we have them as never before. I placed a copy of the Advocate in the first three homes on my initial round (and one since), and I shall make an effort to put it into every real Methodist in the charge.—R. M. Evans.

Hermanville, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: At the last session of the Mississippi Conference I was moved from Benton to the Hermanville charge. I arrived at my new appointment on Tuesday, Dec. 7. A number of the good people met us at the train and escorted us to the parsonage. There we found the good ladies waiting with a magnificent supper which they had prepared for us; so you see it made us feel good to be among them. About a week after we reached Hermanville, just as the pastor was leaving the parsonage for the church, a large crowd met him at the gate and he received a large "pounding." There were all kinds of good things to eat. When the people left the parsonage, the table was groaning under its burden. So the work has started off well and we have a fine people to serve. I will send you some subscriptions to the Advocate later.—J. W. Price, P. C.

Pollock, La.

Dear Dr. Meek: Will you please allow me space for a short report of our new work? We have been very cordially received by the people of each congregation on the Pollock charge that we have reached. Our people at Pollock showed their appreciation of their new pastor and his family in a very material way by supplying the parsonage with lots of good things to eat—enough to keep us supplied with food for some time. The future looks bright. I think that most of our people are possessed with a measure of optimism. Rochelle is arranging its report in a very satisfactory, and we look forward to our first quarterly conference with the hope of making it a very profitable and helpful occasion. We are pleased with the prospect on this work. We will labor and pray that God may give us a good year. I shall do what I can for the Advocate.—L. E. Crooks, P. C.

CHRISTMAS AT THE ORPHANAGE.

Christmas is always a happy time at the Orphanage. It was never more so than the one one just passed. I am quite sure that our family of 107 children were never made happier in their lives, and we are all grateful to a good God and to our many thoughtful friends over the State who did so much to make it full of joy for the children.

We had a Christmas tree, and, in spite of the inclement weather, we had a number of our friends from Ruston, including Dr. Henry, our pastor, and his family, with us. The tree was decorated with Christmas ornaments, candles, etc., and hung with dolls and horns. The many presents that came from over the State were stacked high at the foot of the tree, and after singing and an appropriate address by Dr. Henry, the presents were distributed. Then the children were "turned loose." And the time they did have! I am sure it would have done our Methodist people good to have witnessed this scene. I am sure there was not a happier lot of children in the State. Besides the toys, goodies, and playthings, there were many substantial gifts in the way of useful articles that could be used long after the holidays were over. The pupils from the Louisiana Industrial Institute paid the subscription for several very valuable periodicals and magazines to come to the Orphanage for the full year; the Ladies' Aid at Lake Providence sent a fine lot of books, standard works of real value, which will remain in the library for many years to come and afford pleasure and instruction to many children; the Woman's Missionary Society of Winnsboro secured the names of all the children in the Orphanage, and sent a present to each one; the ladies of Tallulah sent presents to forty; Miss Irma Gilbert's class, of the Gilbert Sunday school, sent presents to several and Miss Newman, of Wisner, sent presents to several others. From Arcadia, the Lake Providence Sunday school, and several other places, there came boxes and barrels filled with toys and other things for the Christmas tree. Friends in Ruston sent presents, and boxes of oranges, apples, candies, nuts, raisins, fireworks, etc., came from various places. Some sent money for the Christmas fund. In fact, it was a glorious time, and our joy was full. Many of the boxes and packages that came in had no markings on them so we could tell from where they came. We have tried to acknowledge, with thanks, the receipt of all that came, but in some cases we cannot do so, for we do not know who sent the packages.

But to one and all we express our deepest, sincerest thanks, and pray that our Heavenly Father may bring to the heart of each of our friends a measure of the same joy they have helped to bring to others.

A fitting close to our season of joy, and an accomplishment for which we are profoundly grateful, was the fact that on the last day of the old year we paid off the last note of $2000 that we owed, with $60 interest, canceled the mortgage held against the Orphanage, and could say with great joy as the new day of the new year broke in upon us, that we "owe no man anything but to love him."

Thanking God for his boundless goodness, and wishing our many friends a happy, prosperous year, I am, with profound gratitude,

Faithfully,

ROB'T W. VAUGHAN,
Superintendent, Louisiana Methodist Orphanage.

PRESENTS MADE NORTH CAROLINA VETERANS.

The recent Christmas season was made cheerful, more than usual, for the families of worn-out Methodist preachers in North Carolina, for Christmas gifts to them went out from the Trinity College office in the form of checks. These checks were from the fund of $10,000 given last year by Mr. James B. Duke to be distributed by Trinity College to the superannuate preachers and their wives and to the widows and orphans of deceased preachers of the Methodist Church within the bounds of North Carolina. The Church has its own superannuate fund and the proportion of the Duke fund that goes to each claimant is based upon the amount awarded by the Church. This retiring fund is not yet adequate. It is hoped that Mr. Duke's munificent gift may attract wide attention to this need and may in the end be the means of building up a pension system that will be in keeping with the dignity of a great Church. It is stated that nothing in its long history has ever given Trinity College more exquisite pleasure than the privilege of rendering for Mr. Duke this beautiful service to these aged servants of God.

THE INCOME TAX IN LOUISIANA.

During the year 1914 the largest income tax paid in the State of Louisiana was on an income of between $400,000 and $500,000. The tax was paid by a man, but it is not known whether he is married or single. By way of comparison, it may be stated that in New York there are 102 persons who have incomes of $500,000 or over. The statistics for Louisiana further show that two persons paid taxes on incomes of between $200,000 and $250,000; one paid on an income of between $150,000 and $200,000; six on incomes ranging from between $100,000 and $150,000; eight on incomes of between $75,000 and $100,000; 21 on incomes of between $50,000 and $75,000; 49 on incomes of between $30,000 and $40,000; 43 on incomes of between $25,000 and $30,000; 98 on incomes of between $20,000 and $25,000; 168 on incomes of between $15,000 and $20,000; 378 on incomes of between $10,000 and $15,000; 1285 on incomes of between $5000 and $10,000; 683 on incomes of between $4000 and $5000; and 963 on incomes of between $3000 and 4000. There were 630 bachelors and 218 single women who paid income taxes. Twenty married women with husbands paid taxes on their own incomes. The income tax for the year 1915 will have to be paid by the first of March, 1916. It is expected that 10,000 persons and firms in Louisiana will pay this tax between now and then.

A NOTABLE PROHIBITION SPEAKER.

The addresses of Major Dan Morgan Smith, the well known prohibition lecturer, in New Orleans last Sunday were strong and to the point. Among other things, the distinguished speaker said: "I drafted regularity laws, model license laws, for California, Oregon, Colorado, Virginia, West Virginia, and many other States while I was employed by the liquor interests, and I know that the same people who paid me to draw these laws before the election also paid others to defeat them after the election. The liquor traffic does not need regulation—it needs strangulation." Major Smith further said: "Within a mile of this church in which I am speaking is the largest segregated district in the world, and such a place could not exist without the aid of the liquor traffic."

A MESSAGE FROM BROTHER LINFIELD.

In forwarding his first round of appointments, Rev. W. L. Linfield, presiding elder of the Newton District, who last year served the Court Street Church of Hattiesburg, writes as follows: "I am a little late getting my plans laid. I was late in moving, owing to the fact that in the midst of packing up for the change my fourteen-year-old son, William L., Jr., was stricken with appendicitis and had to be hurried to the infirmary at night for an operation. This occurred on December 6. We had intended leaving for our new home on Dec. 9, but could not move until the 20th. Brother W. W. Graves, the pastor in Newton, is a big brother to his new presiding elder. Notes from many of the pastors in the district are full of hope for the new year." We are sorry to hear of the illness of Brother Linfield's son, but we trust that he will be soon perfectly restored to health and free from every trace of the malady by which he was attacked.

HOSPITAL DAY

We have multiplied special days until they have almost lost their significance.

It is of the very first importance, therefore, that attention should be directed to Hospital Day in a way that shall rescue it from the fate of the merely commonplace.

The four Conferences related to our Memphis Hospital enterprise have designated Sunday, January 23, as the day for pressing the claims of this great interest with all possible zeal.

The situation makes this an emergency case.

The property we have already secured is so admirably adapted to our purposes that it almost amounts to reproach for us to leave it longer unimproved. A commodious and imposing building in the midst of ideal surroundings, makes it practicable for us to begin our beneficent work without the expenditure of a large sum, and ample grounds meet all the demands of future enlargement.

Some of the surgeons of Memphis have evinced skill so commanding and conspicuous, and they have achieved success so marvelous, in many instances, that the pleading call for their services has become widespread and pathetic.

The present hospital facilities and equipment supplied by the city cannot adequately meet the urgent demand. The claims of the constituency represented by our Church cannot be disregarded if we are to meet the measure of our responsibility.

Methodists abound over the territory contiguous to Memphis. It is doubtful if the relative strength of our beloved Church, in any part of our widely extended connection, is greater than in Arkansas, Mississippi and West Tennessee.

Our people lead in founding and maintaining the great business and educational movements which make for the enrichment and betterment of society; and yet we are far behind others in the work of ameliorating the sufferings of humanity.

We are now confronted by an inspiring opportunity. Let us seize and improve it.

A hospital under the auspices of our Church, administered in the spirit of a broad catholicity, will discover springs of beneficence we had not dreamed of, and open channels through which will flow streams of benevolence that shall invigorate and fructify all departments of church activity.

The appeal embodies the very spirit of the Master. If it is pressed with the urgency and zeal its importance demands, it will not go unheeded, and Hospital Day will be memorable in our history.

Memphis, Tenn. W. B. MURRAH.

THE METHODIST HOSPITAL AT MEMPHIS, TENN.

This property embraces the 22-room house shown above, and a magnificent grove of 8½ acres. It was purchased at a cost of more than $100,000, but has not yet been opened for lack of funds to make needed alterations and additions. It is said that there is no finer site for a hospital in the South.

HOSPITAL COMMISSIONERS' REPORT.

To the Bishop and Members of the Memphis, North Arkansas, Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences.

Dear Brethren: As you well know, this has been a year of unprecedented financial depression, and, as our Methodist Hospital had not been able to get open for service previously, we have felt these conditions more than those benevolences which were already in operation. You will therefore not be surprised that we have not been able to make much headway since your last sessions.

We are sorry to say that the simple plan we suggested a year ago for meeting the needs of our situation, and as appropriate to the prevailing financial conditions of our section, and which was adopted as the order of your bodies, failed, we believe, for lack of the expected co-operation. Instead of the minimum of $35,000 it was hoped the plan would secure, it brought the cause only a little more than $4000.

Our Field Secretary has been able to bring the cash collections for the year, including the above amount, to more than $15,000. This has enabled us to promptly meet all obligations and retain a cash balance in bank of about $1500.

On August 11 we paid our first annual note of $5000, with all accrued interest on the amount due on our property to that date. This leaves a balance due on the property of $62,000, which is offset by a subscription list of over $100,000, which our Secretary is collecting as rapidly as he can.

Our payments on the property are now out of the way till next August, and we should proceed at once, or as soon as the Conferences are over, to raise the amount necessary for such alterations and additions to our building as will enable us to open in the near future such an institution for the care of the afflicted as will be a credit to our Church. Financial conditions are brighter now, and we believe this should be promptly done.

We would repeat and emphasize a paragraph in our report of last year: "The need for a Methodist Hospital grows more evident and urgent every day. The Memphis Hospitals are crowded to their capacity all the time, and more of our people occupy their beds than any other denomination, for the simple reason that there are more Methodists in this section. We are occupying room that by right should be given to others, and crowding out those who have prior claim." And this is evidenced by the fact that other denominations are having to enlarge their hospitals mainly on account of the sad neglect of this work by our own Church. And more and more unanswerable is the ever recurring and increasingly emphasized question: "Why is there no Methodist hospital?"

We should raise the amount necessary for opening our Hospital within the next few months, and be ready to receive patients as soon as possible. With the improved business conditions and the consequent hope and cheer of our people, we should carry this work to a speedy success.

Looking to and praying for this result, we again request the appointment and observance of a "Hospital Day," and would suggest that all our patronizing Conferences unite in observing the fourth Sunday of January (Jan. 23, 1916), on which to make an offering to raise the needed opening fund.

The term of office of your Commissioners expires with this session of our Conference, and we respectfully request that you elect two clergymen and three laymen to fill the vacancies.

We have re-elected Rev. H. M. Ellis Field Secretary, and hereby request the Bishop presiding over the Mississippi Conference to appoint him to this work. He has a large and laborious field to cover, meeting with many disappointments and difficulties, and we bespeak for him your hearty co-operation and encouragement in this noble work.

Respectfully submitted,

J. H. SHERARD, Chairman.
L. M. STRATTON, Secretary.

AN APPEAL FROM BISHOP ATKINS.

To the Presiding Elders, Pastors and Members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Mississippi—

Dear Brethren: I am deeply interested in the success of our Methodist Hospital to be built in Memphis, Tenn. Our Church is in great need of this institution. It will not only serve our own people in their day of misfortune, but, properly administered, it will prove a potent influence for the advancement of the Kingdom of Christ.

Both of your recent Annual Conferences passed appropriate resolutions on this subject, in each of which, without a dissenting vote, Sunday, January 23, 1916, was set apart to be "faithfully observed" as HOSPITAL DAY. I hope every Sunday school and church will do its best for this worthy cause on that day, or as near thereto as possible.

The Hospital Commissioners tell us that $35,000 spent in alterations and additions to the present property will enable them to open a thoroughly modern hospital with accommodations for eighty patients. The Methodists of Mississippi ought themselves to contribute more than that amount on this HOSPITAL DAY as a thank offering for their preserved health and manifold blessings. And so may it be. Let every Sunday school superintendent and preacher inform his people of this need and give them a chance to make an offering, and let every member make an offering that will be an unmistakable expression of Christian sympathy and benevolence.

Yours fraternally,

JAMES ATKINS.

Waynesville, N. C.

THE HOLY SPIRIT LEADING.

By Rev. H. M. Ellis.

Evidently the Holy Spirit is leading our Church in its effort to build a hospital in Memphis, Tenn. The Heavenly Father's interest is in his child, and in the suffering child most of all. Service rendered to these is service rendered to him, and service withheld from them is service refused to him.

This ministry to the anguished bodies of men is in direct line with the blessed work of the Christ. It was this which won him the way into so many hearts, for it manifested his love and solicitude for them. And they loved him who had thus proven that he first loved them. And he has made particularly clear what an exalted opportunity such service affords—"I was sick, and ye visited me."

Other denominations are being moved to project work of the same kind, and they are responding nobly with heart and means, and are thus winning a new respect and gratitude from mankind and a new joy of service.

Who can doubt that it is a divinely impulsed enterprise?

There can be no doubt as to the NEED. There are the sick, the injured, the deformed all about us. Look where we will their pale faces and suffering eyes are to be seen; go where we will their groans are to be heard. How they need the Methodist Hospital for their relief!

All hospitals in this section are crowded. Many of these institutions are planning immediate enlargement to meet the piteous demand. And Methodism has no place in all this section to care for its own afflicted, much less act the good Samaritan to the unfortunate not of its family.

There can be no doubt about the will of God. He would save, save ever, and save from every ill. He would not be the great Father if this were not true.

And there can be no doubt about the ability of our Church members to build this Hospital as soon as they get ready. Their places in the business activities of the section, their expenditures upon the pleasure of themselves and their families, their ability to secure means for whatever grips their interest or catches their fancy is proof undeniable. None dare deny it.

It is "up to" Methodism to show whether or not it offers a Gospel that is adequate to the needs of this old disease-plagued world; whether it is mere method or ministry, sentiment or service, shouting or saving. Nothing so tests the genuineness of the profession of Christianity as the appeal of the helpless and afflicted. "Whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" (1 John 3:17.)

This call is putting each Methodist in these four Conferences to the test. It is sifting and separating. The workers and the shirkers are being branded. He who will give to any cause, will give to the helpless sick.

Orthodoxy is in performance, practice, doing. The good Samaritan was more orthodox than the Scripture-gorged priest who passed by his poor, wounded fellow without offering help. And if he uttered a prayer for the helpless man, it was blasphemy. The most cursed heresy is that of heartlessness and neglect.

Yes, the Holy Spirit is certainly leading this movement. God calls, the duty presses, the opportunity invites. Heaven's highest privileges—those of saving human life and winning immortal souls—are offered as the prize. Surely my religion has power to make me gladly suffer, if need be, any necessary sacrifice that I may share in this Christly service.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Report of the Hospital Committee.

We have heard with interest and appreciation the report of our Hospital Commissioners and the statement of the Field Secretary, Rev. H. M. Ellis.

We regret that the simple plan adopted by the last Conference for raising the necessary funds for opening the Hospital failed for lack of co-operation on the part of Sunday school superintendents and pastors, and that the financial conditions prevailing during the year made it impossible to secure the amount needed. But we note with pleasure that, in spite of adverse conditions, our Field Secretary has raised during the year $15,000 in cash and more than $10,000 in additional subscriptions, and that all obligations have been promptly met.

We fear that our people have not yet awakened to the real need for this institution. We therefore call on our presiding elders and pastors, the recognized leaders of the Church, to faithfully instruct our people and impress upon them the urgency of this need. Hospital service is more in demand to-day than ever before, and this demand is constantly increasing. Other denominations are responding to the movings of the Spirit of Christ and providing such institutions, and it is unfair that we fail to make provision for our own sick and unfortunate, and thus force our people into the hospitals of these other denominations and crowd them out. And we not only need our Methodist Hospital in order to minister to the afflicted, who must have such help or die, but that we may adequately express and demonstrate the Christly spirit of our own Church, and that our practice may agree with our profession of sympathy. Let our preachers make this clear to our people, without waiting for the visits of our Field Secretary, whose large field makes it impossible for him to reach all.

We offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we heartily unite with the other Conferences enlisted in this movement in setting apart and faithfully observing Sunday, January 23, 1916, as HOSPITAL DAY, on which, or as near thereto as possible, all our congregations and Sunday schools shall be solicited and urged to make a worthy offering to this greatly needed institution.

Resolved further, That we will in every way possible co-operate with and assist our Field Secretary in his campaigns and visitations of our churches and people during the coming year, and that we will pray for his success in the work, and for the speedy opening of the Hospital.

We recommend to the Bishop the appointment of H. M. Ellis as Field Secretary of the Methodist Hospital, Memphis, Tenn., for the coming year.

We recommend to the Conference the election of Rev. J. R. Jones, Rev. J. T. Leggett, Mr. L. N. Dantzler, Mr. P. H. Enochs and Mr. W. E. Lampton as Hospital Commissioners for the Mississippi Conference for the ensuing year.

Respectfully submitted,

W. H. LEWIS,
W. M. SULLIVAN,
W. D. DAVIS.

THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SPEAKS.

We are glad to hear the encouraging reports of our Hospital Commissioners and of our most efficient Field Secretary, Rev. H. M. Ellis, to the effect that, in spite of the financial depression, he had raised during the year $15,000 in cash and more than $10,000 in subscriptions, and had been able to take care of all obligations promptly.

We regret very much that the Hospital is not open for business. If all the pastors and superintendents had faithfully carried out the plan adopted by the last Conference the funds would have been secured, and the Hospital would doubtless now be full to its capacity. We feel that it is very urgent that the opening be delayed no longer, and we believe that the presiding elders and pastors and other leaders of the Church, if thoroughly aroused, can make it possible for the doors of the Hospital to be opened very soon after Sunday, January 23, 1916, suggested as HOSPITAL DAY for the ensuing year.

We should no longer lag behind other denominations which are enlarging their institutions for the alleviation of suffering humanity. We ought to be ashamed of ourselves, because we are not only failing to provide for our own sick and afflicted, but are crowding others out of their own denominational hospitals.

If the pastors are wide awake on this subject it will not be necessary for our Field Secretary to visit every charge. We are thoroughly convinced that as soon as we open the Hospital the people will believe that we mean business, and will gladly make possible by their liberality the realization of our fondest hopes concerning this great institution. They will then be inspired to do their best. We therefore offer the following resolution:

Resolved, 1. That we heartily unite with the other Conferences enlisted in this movement in setting apart and faithfully observing Sunday, January 23, 1916, or as near thereto as possible, as HOSPITAL DAY, on which every congregation shall be asked to make an offering to this great and greatly needed institution.

Resolved, 2. That we hereby pledge ourselves to assist and co-operate with our Field Secretary in all his efforts during the coming year.

Resolved, 3. That we will pray for him, that he may be anointed by the Holy Ghost and that utterance may be given him, in order that he may speak the Word of God boldly and convincingly concerning this great movement.

Lamar Avenue View of the Methodist Hospital (Memphis, Tenn.).

Resolved, 4. That we will also pray for our Methodist people, that the Holy Spirit may impress upon their minds and hearts their duty in this matter, that they may respond cheerfully and liberally to this great enterprise, which means so much in a physical and spiritual sense to the sick and suffering ones of our own spiritual kin.

We recommend to the Conference the election of J. H. Sherard, M. C. Smith, L. C. Fant, Rev. W. S. Lagrone and Rev. H. S. Spragins as Hospital Commissioners of the North Mississippi Conference for the ensuing year.

Respectfully submitted,

Dr. W. T. JOHNSON, Chairman.

W. D. WENDEL, Secretary.

For the Committee.

PREPAREDNESS—A HOSPITAL NEEDED.

The war in Europe is drenching a continent in blood. The contagion of preparedness is reaching our shores, and some of our people are wild with the idea of increasing our army and navy to gigantic proportions. I am opposed to the policy of preparedness as it respects war, but I am heartily in favor of preparedness as to our sick.

The hospital movement for the Memphis territory began some years ago, but it has not moved very rapidly for some time. We put the blame on the war, on short crops, on short prices, on business stagnation, on anything in sight or out of sight. The truth is, we have not done this work because we have not tried hard enough.

We need at this moment $35,000 to make the necessary alterations and additions to the building we now own before we can open for business.

We have the most commanding hospital site in Memphis. Large trees spread their long branches over the entire lawn of six acres, while the other two and a half acres furnish ample room for all the buildings we will need for many years. It is on an elevation that commands a view of a large part of the city, and is the only place that provides for convalescents in this part of the country.

The Baptist Hospital is crowded, and they propose to add a wing at once. St. Joseph, the great Catholic hospital, is planning another extension. The Lucy Brinkley Hospital has recently added twenty rooms, the Presbyterian and City Hospitals are full all the time, and we Methodists seem to be satisfied to let other denominations furnish us with hospital facilities.

Do we want one of our own? What is the advantage of having a Methodist hospital?

1. We should not ask another denomination to do something for us that we ought to do for ourselves.

2. More and more we are coming to the hospital era of our Christianity. Surgery is becoming the finest of professions, and when one is ill, he needs the expert service which the hospital furnishes.

3. It is obedience to our Lord's command to heal the sick.

4. When one is sick in a hospital the opportunity to render him a spiritual service is unusually favorable, and we may reach many a sinner while he is under the care of a hospital who has thus far resisted.

5. Is it not reasonable to believe that we Methodists can receive unusual care in a Methodist hospital? Does a man need his own home to call forth the best there is in him? Do we need church-houses to carry on our work? If we answer these questions in the affirmative, then we must admit the importance of a Methodist Hospital.

We now have about $80,000 of unpaid subscriptions on hand, and one object of this letter is to appeal to these friends to send in the cash. We must take care of the notes on the present property as they fall due. Something like $9,000 will be due next August. But we must have $35,000 at once, if we are to open soon. Reader, do YOU want a Methodist Hospital in Memphis? Then send a subscription or cash to H. M. Ellis, 2086 Union Avenue, Memphis, Tenn. DO IT NOW.

T. W. LEWIS,

A Memphis Pastor.

METHODIST HOSPITAL.

We are again approaching a special day appointed by all four of the Conferences comprising the patronizing territory of our Methodist Hospital, at Memphis, Tenn., and embracing a church membership of 250,000.

Sunday, January 23, is to be observed as Hospital Day, as ordered by the authority of our Church.

On this day every preacher is expected to present the interests of the cause, and take an offering in each congregation for funds needed to open formally the Hospital.

Each Superintendent is called upon to take a collection in the Sunday school for this purpose, that our Church may at once commence a noble Christian work which she has sadly neglected so long, and permitted other denominations to do for us.

To do something worthy of our great Church in this favored territory, we should on this day contribute an average of 50 cents per member.

If every minister and layman within the bounds of these Conferences supporting this movement will do his full duty, sufficient funds will be raised to equip and operate our Hospital on such a scale that Methodists in the South, from far and near, can point to it with a just feeling of pride and admiration.

If only a faithful appeal is made to every congregation and Sabbath school on Hospital day, enough money will come in to start the work of healing.

While this occasion was planned for the many and their small sums, it is hoped that it will reach some who will give large amounts. We have wealthy laymen who, if guided in the proper spirit, should appropriate large sums for this humanitarian cause. In fact, this is practical religion.

A Methodist preacher told the writer that there were members of his church who could give $25,000 for this religious cause and not miss it (so far as denying themselves of any of the necessaries of life) any more than buying a good cigar.

How a person of considerable wealth can afford not to contribute liberally to relieve the suffering of his brother in distress and yet presume when he dies to be received into the glorious home of the blessed, I am at a loss to understand. If such is the case, then I have made a great mistake in the interpretation of God's Word. To care for the sick is the first duty of all.

Please observe Hospital Day, and do your part.

May the God of all love and mercy fill us with a sufficiency of His grace that we may all do our full duty.

J. H. SHERARD,

Sherard, Miss., Jan. 10, 1916.

WHY THE DIFFERENCE?

Why does the same cost seem so much greater for religion than for pleasure or profit?

A gentleman who could pay only $25 to help erect a new building for the church of which he was a member managed to put $3000 into the new Elks' building the following year, though no remarkable change had occurred in his financial condition.

Another gentleman who found it so "impossible" to pay his $500 subscription for the building of a new church that he dissuaded his pastor from going on with the project, was able to pay $2500 for a new automobile the next week.

On a circuit where the Methodist preacher's family managed to exist on a salary of about $300 one of his members paid $1500 for a hound pup.

A gentleman who spoke pathetically of the anguish of soul he felt in being "absolutely" unable to make the least contribution to the building of a Christian hospital, for the saving of his fellows from death and hell, was, in less than twenty minutes, enthusiastically describing his preparations for a camp hunt which was to cost him at least $250.

And all these professed faith in Christ and claimed to be seeking heaven!

"Consecrated?" Why, certainly they are! But their "consecration" is to self and pleasure, not to God and right.

But what one spends for pleasure is the proof of what he might give God.

THE IMMEDIATE NEED.

We must get our Methodist Hospital ready for business as soon as possible. And what we do must be representative, worthy, and as good as the best, if not as large.

With $30,000 or $35,000 to use in alterations and additions to our present building, we could open in a few months with everything modern and first-class, and prepared to take 80 or more patients.

When we are once open and serving the sick, the Hospital will win friends and supporters as the cause cannot do previously.

The amount of money needed for the opening ought to be raised on Hospital Day. The cause carries its own appeal. With a good presiding elder's or pastor's influence and enthusiasm behind it, sympathy is bound to be aroused and contributions made.

Don't let it be a penny and dime collection. Ask for amounts worth while. Many of our wealthy members should give thousands to this cause, and why not your influence secure it? Every member ought to have some share in it. I do not believe we have one too poor to pay a dollar.

Let us show our worldly neighbors, who spend money so lavishly for pleasure, how promptly and cheerfully we can devote ours to the service of our Lord and humanity.

Let the collections on Hospital Day make the opening assured.

And let each church and Sunday school do well its own part, trusting that every other will be as loyal and true.

TO OUR FORMER SUBSCRIBERS.

To the friends who have already subscribed to the fund for the Methodist Hospital, I want to announce that we will surely need their money before very long, and I trust it will be convenient for them to send it to me at an early date.

We have been most considerate and patient during the days of financial stress, but under the improved conditions we shall press the work with all vigor. We confidently expect to be at work on the additions and alterations in a little while, and to be ministering to the sick not long after.

We will soon send out notices to those whose subscriptions are past due, but we hope those who see this notice will not wait so long. We will appreciate the remittances as soon as possible.

A WORD TO SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS.

It is only fair that the Sunday schools of our four Conferences contribute the money to build the Children's Department of the Methodist Hospital, and we ask them to do as much toward this on Hospital Day as possible.

It is very important that some special arrangements be provided for the little folks in our Hospital. Of course, as long as they are very ill they must have about the same attention as any other very sick person. But we propose to get our children well. When they begin to convalesce they will not have the many things to think about and plan for that older ones have, and they will grow restless and fretful. To be rolled in where they can see some moving pictures, hear some music and stories; and have something to entertain them while the long days are passing till they are out again will be a world of help. Now, that is what we want to provide.

The children are tender-hearted and sympathetic, and they are sure to respond to the appeal for the Hospital if they are properly informed of the need and plan, and are given a chance.

Furthermore, those who have these little folks in their care should remember that, unless this tender sympathy of the child is fostered and cultivated by being given opportunities for expression, it will not come to its divinely intended fruitage in a life of Christly benevolence.

It is hoped that every Sunday school within the bounds of the Memphis, North Arkansas, Mississippi, and North Mississippi Conferences will be given a chance to do what may be in their power for this important enterprise of their Church.

Let each class make its own subscription, to be paid by June 1, and as much of it paid in cash on Hospital Day as possible. And certainly each school could raise as much as $1 a member to provide a splendid Children's Department, in which yearly hundreds of lives will be saved, and hundreds of little folks be sent back well and happy to the homes and hearts of which they are the joy and light.

Dear Superintendent, do your best for the Hospital on Hospital Day.

HINTS AND SUGGESTIONS

For Hospital Sermons.

My Chance (Matt. 25:34):

1. To prove my love and sympathy,
2. To save—body and soul,
3. To serve the Lord of Glory,
4. To practice Christly virtues and develop heavenly habits comes when I meet one less fortunate than myself.

For Want of a Friend (John 5:1-9):

Thirty-eight years of manhood wasted,
Thirty-eight years of suffering endured,
Thirty-eight years of service lost,
because there was no one who would help.

The Man Who was Healed (Acts 4:14):

This man meant much to disciples, church, society.

Would have meant nothing if not healed.

1. His Affliction furnished opportunity to manifest the love and power of Christ.
   No preaching or testimony could have made it so clear. The compassion must be in the disciples' hearts first.
2. His Healing—Surprised and attracted multitude, so giving apportunity and text for preaching Christ.
   Result: 5000 converts.
   Men come, and heed, where love is seen saving.
3. His Presence When Healed—sealed lying lips and paralyzed persecuting hands. "Seeing him, they could say nothing"—of all they were so anxious to say and do.
4. The Absence of the Healed Man is Troubling the Church To-day. She needs him greatly—to be her opportunity, and her proof. To win the world she must have God above and the Saved Man at her side.

A SIMPLE PLAN FOR THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER.

There are many teachers who want to do something for the Methodist Hospital but feel that their pupils are too small or too few to make the effort.

I have a simple plan that is working elsewhere with fine results, and I am sure it will surprise you if you will give it two weeks' earnest trial. It grips the interest of the little folks, it secures the help of home folks and neighbors, and it doesn't take a collection from the school.

One class of seven little girls sent us $23.75 after trying it three weeks. In one church, where the pastor insisted that they were all too poor to do anything at all, four little girls raised $15 in two days.

It will cost nothing but a post-card to try. If any Sunday school teacher wants to help the Hospital and will drop me a post-card, stating that fact and giving name and address, I will forward the plan. And I'll then furnish all necessary material, free, to make the trial.

HOW MUCH WILL YOU GIVE?

Every loyal and true Methodist within the bounds of the four Conferences associated in this work will ask himself the question: "How much shall I give toward the building of our Methodist Hospital?"

Let's consider a little:

1. This is our Church's great deficiency. With all its splendid machinery and organization, it has no hospital in this vast territory where it could minister to the sick or wounded, even of its own family. It is neglecting a plain duty, and imposing its own sufferers on the hospitals of other denominations, and, as a Methodist, I share the reproach and shame.

2. We have been giving to the other benevolences and interests of our Church all these years, but we have given nothing to the cause of healing the sick, which command our Savior placed in the same sentence with that one we have held so sacred: "Preach the gospel." Therefore, without abating our interest in any other work of the Church, we should at once begin to make up for our long dereliction and neglect of this interest. We should, therefore, give more liberally to it than any other till it is thoroughly established, and can take rank among the regular benevolences.

3. The opportunity to build a Methodist Hospital will not come again in this territory when this is complete. We want ours to be as good as the best, and we want it to stand as the expression of our own sympathy and earnest effort to relieve the suffering.

4. The investment in the Hospital plant is a permanent one, entering on a perpetual service. It is not like the other church funds, that will be exhausted this year and must be duplicated the next. Long after we have passed to our eternal home this plant will be doing its ministry of mercy, and the daily stream of unfortunates coming for relief will still be the beneficiaries of our benevolence. Then we should make our contribution as liberal as possible.

5. We may give in partial payments, making a cash payment now, if possible, and giving our subscriptions running through several months (or years), payable as our financial ability will allow.

6. Our gifts are the tests of our sympathy for helpless sufferers, and the measure of our interest in the effort by our Church to render them relief.

Therefore let us give all we can, in as few installments as convenient, and as much of it cash as possible.

It may be that even now Jesus is sitting over against the treasury to behold how the people cast money into the treasury. Mark 12:41.

And, by the way, why not fill out the subscription now and forward it, with what cash you can pay, to H. M. Ellis, Field Secretary, 2086 Union Avenue, Memphis, Tenn.?

THE NEED OF CHRISTIAN HOSPITALS.

It is not enough that we have ample hospitals: we need Christian hospitals. The saint within such institutions longs for an atmosphere that is congenial, and the dying sinner there should have the last chance. The following tragic incident recently came to my notice:

The daughter of wealthy and worldly society people was fatally injured in the collision of autos which terminated a joy ride, and was hurried to a near-by hospital. For three days the best medical and surgical skill of the city fought desperately for her life, but when they knew the end was near they sent one of their number to tell her. As gently as he could he imparted the terrible information. For a moment she lay stunned, then, frantic and wild-eyed, she seized him by the coat, and cried:

"O, I can't die! I'm not ready to die! For God's sake pray for me!"

The doctor wiped the streaming tears from his eyes, and in choked voice replied, "My dear girl, I don't even pray for myself."

Then she appealed to the other physician at the foot of the bed in the same frantic manner, and, without answering, he fled from the room.

She then turned to the nurse who was trying to quiet her, and begged piteously that she pray for her lost soul. And when she, sobbing and unable to speak, shook her head, the poor girl, flinging her arms wide in appealing gesture, shrieked: "Oh! Will no body help me? Don't anybody care?" and then fell back on her pillow, and in a little while, without hope, without prayer, without even a Christian near, passed out to meet the Judge.

"Very late," you remark.

Yes, very late; very. But in a Christian hospital she would have been given a last chance.

TO THE LAYMEN OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren: You are doubtless aware of the fact that there will be held in Jackson, Jan. 26-30, a Convention of the General Laymen's Movement. As the Conference Lay Leader I trust that there will be a large attendance of the laymen from our Conference. Each afternoon there will be Denominational Conferences under the direction, usually, of some of the visiting speakers. At these meetings our own problems will be taken up and discussed as time will permit. Let every District Leader at least consider before that time his special needs and be ready to present them at the first afternoon meeting. Let all laymen consider the problems of the Church and be ready to join heartily in all the discussions. Let us give much time to prayer these next few days that a great spiritual blessing may rest upon the meeting. It is confidently expected that this chain of conventions will do even more in arousing the interest of the laymen than did the similar series of meetings held in 1910. Come to the meeting and you will be sure to carry away a new inspiration and zeal for your future work.

Yours in the Master's work,

G. L. HARRELL,
Conference Leader.

LINE UP.

As the Israelites journeyed through the wilderness, very soon after they lost sight of their leader, they went into idolatry. Indeed upon Moses' return he found them in the very act of worshiping a golden calf, and he asked the question, "Who is on the Lord's side? Let him come unto me." And all the sons of Levi gathered themselves together unto him.

The prohibitionists, in my judgment, represent those faithful Israelites, and as the leading Anti-Saloon League standard-bearer is quoted as having said seven years ago, "Whenever the line is drawn and the question is asked 'Who is on the Lord's side,' you need not have any doubt where I am going to line up." The local option faction and the liquor interests, lined up together, say that this is not an opportune time to agitate the State-wide proposition, and they are making every effort and straining every nerve to demonstrate that the statement is true, while they certainly know that it is not. They represent those Israelites who did not line up on the Lord's side and were slain by the thousand. To say that the strenuous effort put forth along this line is devil-like may appear harsh and extreme, but really this is and has been the devil's way of fighting ever since man's fall. As the old fiend's purpose has ever been to deceive, so it is reasonable to conclude that the purpose of the liquor interest and its allies is the same.

They further state that there are other interests of equal importance with prohibition. In regard to this statement, it may be said that their estimate of the importance of the prohibition cause is too low, or that of some other things too high, or both. For example, they say if State-wide wins it will deprive New Orleans and the State of hundreds of thousands of dollars in revenue, thus putting a few hundred thousand dollars against suffering of every conceivable kind, as well as death, physical and eternal. Such a subterfuge! Such a comparison is enough to make any conscientious person shudder.

The so-called Christian citizen, or any citizen who "lines up" with the local option faction, is like a German soldier who in time of battle deserts his own army and goes to the Russian army and fights in its ranks just because he does not like the standard-bearer. If we claim to be on the Lord's side, let us "line up" and show our colors.

The Louisiana Annual Conference of the M. E. Church, South, in its recent session put itself on record in the following uncertain manner: "When a great moral principle is involved the Christian citizen has no other choice than to stand for that principle." Line up on the Lord's side!

HOW PROHIBITION RUINED KANSAS.

Prohibition has ruined Kansas. That unfortunate commonwealth will no longer have the incentive of debt to cause it to be thrifty and economical in State affairs. Recently it held a little bonfire at which it burnt up the last evidence of State debt.

To those who fear that Virginia will fare badly without the income from the licensing of intoxicating liquors we commend the following news item from Topeka:

"Kansas will be free from debt January 1, 1916, and the one State in the Union so situated," Earl Akers, State Treasurer, announces.

"As a result members of the State executive council are planning a celebration to be held on New Year's Day in the rotunda of the statehouse.

"On that day the $159,000 in bonds outstanding against the State will be redeemed.

"It is planned that as part of the celebration these shall be burned in a 'funeral pyre' for the State's indebtedness."—Richmond Virginian.

A REMARKABLE YOUNG MAN.

Mr. Connor, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the new Mississippi Legislature, seems to be rather an unusual young man in more ways than one. A recent issue of The Jackson Daily News contained the following brief sketch of him, which will doubtless be read by many with interest:

"'Mike' Connor, the youthful Speaker of the lower House of the Mississippi Legislature, has been a practicing attorney only a few years. He graduated from the University of Mississippi, literary department, in the class of 1910 with the B. S. degree, having entered the institution four years previously. He then went to Yale University and took special work for one term.

"Mr. Connor was president of the Senior class of 1910, president of the Blackstone Club, and on returning to the University for the 1911-12 session to complete his law course he was made editor-in-chief of "Ole Miss," the annual publication of the institution. He graduated with distinction in the law class of 1912, and represented the class as orator at the Commencement exercises.

"Thoughout his course of study at the University, Mr. Connor was prominent in the work of the literary societies and the Young Men's Christian Association. He is one of the rather few members of the Legislature who neither smokes, chews, drinks or swears. His habits, in brief, are exemplary."

Dr. W. G. Henry, pastor of the Galloway Memorial Church of Jackson, stated in his interesting letter in the Advocate last week that Mr. Connor is a Methodist, and superintendent of our Sunday school at Seminary, Miss.

A CHOICE LAYMAN TAKEN.

Rev. H. S. Spragins writes us as follows: "Doubtless you have heard of the death of our good friend, Brother H. D. Chaney, which occurred at his home at Rosedale, Miss., on Wednesday evening, January 5. His death came as a great shock to all of us, notwithstanding the fact that his health for the past few years had been such as to warn us of the inevitable. A truly good man has gone from us. It would be hard to find a man more loyal to his pastor or a better friend to the Church than was Brother Chaney."

This message causes us genuine sorrow. Death, indeed, claimed a choice spirit when Brother Chaney fell into the last long sleep. Fidelity was his dominant characteristic in all the relations and work of life. Being a druggist, he was a public servant, and his conscientiousness in ever keeping at the post of duty could not have been surpassed. He always carried the interests of the Church on his heart and was deeply concerned for its success. For many years he was our faithful Sunday school superintendent at Rosedale and his impress upon the young life of that community will not soon pass away. He had faith in Christ and loved his fellow-men. Clean, true, and wedded to noble ideals, he served his day and generation well, and has left behind a record to which his friends can point with pride. To his bereaved family we extend sympathy, and pray that Divine grace may comfort and sustain them.

During the year 1915 the number of cigars smoked in the United States was decreased by nearly 680,000,000, but this resulted in an increased consumption of cigarettes, the additional number used being 330,000,000. The decrease in the use of cigars, and the use of cigarettes in their place, is thought to have been due to an effort to economize on the part of the users of tobacco.

According to Rear Admiral Victor Blue, chief of the Bureau of Navigation, nearly 95.5 per cent of the men enlisted in the Navy are citizens of the United States. A few of the men come from our island possessions. Less than 5 per cent are foreigners. Commenting on this, Admiral Blue says: "The Navy has been Americanized by getting young men from the farms and occupations not connected with the sea."

A conscription bill was passed by the English House of Commons on Jan. 6, 1916, by a vote of 403 to 105. The bill was strongly opposed by the labor organizations, and after its passage, sitting in open congress, they expressed their disapproval of it by an overwhelming majority of votes. The three labor members of the Cabinet, Arthur Henderson, President of the Board of Education; William Brace, Parliamentary Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, and George H. Roberts, Lord Commissioner of the Treasury, resigned.

Two women, Mrs. John Dibert and Mrs. S. B. Sneath, both of New Orleans, were elected directors of the Interstate Trust and Banking Company of New Orleans at a recent meeting of the stockholders. Commenting on this, a New Orleans paper declares that "this is the first time in the history of banking in this part of the country that women have been admitted to the directorate of an important banking institution." Whatever may be one's opinion as to the propriety of their doing so, it is certain that women are pushing to the front along all possible lines of activity.

During the year 1915 gold to the amount of $435,875,000 was imported into the United States, and the exports of the metal from this country during the same period of time amounted to only $26,875,000. The success or failure of the nation's industrial and commercial activities is largely determined at the end of each year by comparing its exports and imports of gold for the space of twelve months; so according to the above statement we have reason to consider the year through which we have just passed as very successful in so far as the material interests of the nation are concerned.

THE TEST OF HONOR.

The test of honor does not lie in the meeting of those obligations which one knows he can be physically, or legally, or by force of social influences compelled to meet. It lies rather in the voluntary and cheerful fulfillment of such obligations as no coercion could reach, and the neglect of which society is apt to condone.

For the person of honor an obligation does not have to be down in contract or subscription form. He holds himself as much bound by what he ought to do as by what he has pledged to do.

As a member of any social organization, the person of honor knows himself bound for his share, at least, assessed or not assessed, of the cost of each and every enterprise of that organization. His failure will either endanger the success of the enterprise, or compel his associates in the organization to make good the amount which properly he was due. The first would be disloyalty, which honor would not brook; the second is but another way of "holding up" one's associates for the amount he himself is due.

The person of honor never leaves to another the share of effort or expense which by right falls to himself.

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE DESPISED COLLECTION.

No one is saved who has not the spirit of Christ, "for if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His."

No one can have the spirit of Christ who has not the grace of liberality, for "the Son of Man came not to be ministered to, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many."

No one can develop the grace of Christian liberality without faithful practice in the habit of giving. "Give and it shall be given to you," etc.

No one can practce the habit of giving without frequent opportunities and appeals of need being brought to his notice.

Hence the people best developed in the grace of Christian benevolence will be found in those churches and communities where collections are neither feared nor shunned.

He who persists in dodging the collection can never be Christly, or ready for heaven.

The church which prohibits collections, not only robs the deserving cause of the help it should receive, but robs its members of the best chance to develop in an essential Christian grace, and thereby becomes a double traitor to the Kingdom.

THE KAISER AND THE POPE.

It is perhaps only a rumor, but it is a persistent one! It is said that the German Kaiser has promised to restore the temporal power of the pope, and to set apart the holy aeres of Palestine as a separate and celestial kingdom for the Roman pontiff. But the reciprocal favors which the pope is to do for the Kaiser, that is not announced to us, nor are we informed even as to whether the pope is pleased with the arrangement. On the whole, therefore, we refuse to be in any manner excited by this unique suggestion, and we decline to enter into the discussion of these world problems which such a plan, if seriously proposed, would certainly lay at the door of Christendom. Indeed, we do not believe there is any truth back of the rumor. The Kaiser would find in his own Protestant Germany an almost insurmountable obstacle to such a scheme; and, for the rest, we are persuaded that the Kaiser is just now deeply concerned as to his own temporal power, rather than feeling at liberty to achieve or secure the temporal power of "the prisoner of the vatican." —Methodist Recorder.

METHODISM IN RUSTON.

The writer had the privilege of spending Sunday, Dec. 5, in the city of Ruston, the visit being occasioned by the death of Sister W. A. J. Lewis. There are now not many survivors of the splendid men and women who moved their homes from old Trenton on the Ouachita in the early days of Ruston and who were the first members of the Methodist Church which has developed so greatly in the passing years. All the friends of Brother Lewis ("Captain Billy," as he is affectionately called) will deeply sympathize with him and his family in their great bereavement.

There are some interesting facts in reference to our work in Ruston, only a few of which may be noted in a brief space.

In reference to the Orphanage, it seems that whatever mistakes may have been made by Methodism in Louisiana in other respects, the location of this splendid institution could not by any possibility have been more wisely selected. It is indeed gratifying that in its excellent environment and under the strong leadership of Brother Vaughan, it is actually accomplishing such valuable results; and also that it has so strong a hold on the affections of the people of the entire State.

The only district parsonage in the Louisiana Conference that is out of debt is conveniently located in the most desirable residence neighborhood of Ruston. The wide-awake presiding elder hopes to make the closing year of his second quadrennium his best.

Dr. Henry, who is just entering upon the second year of his pastorate, reports that his Board of Stewards are vigorously planning for increased efficiency in the financial system of the Church, and, ably seconded by his capable and charming wife, is confident of a successful year in all departments of church work.

At the Sunday morning communion service, in which large numbers participated, two rather exceptional things were noted: not a single person left the Church until the final benediction, and every member of the choir communed.

The Sunday school, with Prof. B. F. Dudley as superintendent, is well organized and active. A large number of Industrial Institute students are enrolled under the leadership of Brother Spinks, a most consecrated traveling man who prepares his Sunday school lessons in hotels, depots, and on trains, and who himself, let it be noticed, received his education in a religious school in Texas. The adult class for men is ably taught by Brother Sam Collins, a graduate of Centenary College in Jackson. This product of a Christian college is the lay commissioner of education for the Ruston District, and is deeply interested in our plans. Another graduate of Centenary College is Brother J. M. Sims, a loyal and intelligent steward.

Brother S. D. Pearce, a Ruston attorney who has for many years been a strong pillar, both in affairs of Church and of State, is also a Church school man, having attended the Southern University at Greensboro, Alabama, at the same time as Bishop Murrah. His wife, without any intermission for a long period, has, without salary, most efficiently served the Church as organist and director of music, devoting a considerable part of each week to the work of preparation for the Sabbath service. She does this as a labor of love. She, too, was formerly connected with a Church school, our own Mansfield College. Profesor R. C. Oliver, a member of the choir, is a Wofford College man.

The Principal of the public school in Ruston, Prof. C. V. Reser, a man, who, unlike a number of school men whom I meet, does not think it incompatible with his position to take an active part in denominational Church work, is also the product of a Church college and expresses great interest in Centenary.

One of earth's purest souls was Prof. C. H. Carson, Jr., a local Methodist preacher, who taught for many years in the Ruston Industrial Institute and who died not long since. His influence will ever be a benediction in the community. He was an Emory man.

Remembering that the Presiding Elder, Pastor and Orphanage Superintendent, all, attended religious schools, the question arises, What would be the result if all the influence of Church schools were substracted from Methodism in Ruston?

A BETTER EQUIPPED MINISTRY.

These thoughts and suggestions are not original with me, but were suggested by one of the members of the Mississippi Conference deeply interested in the better education of the young men coming into the ministry of our Church in the State of Mississippi.

This man has shown his interest in these young men by what he has done for several of them in the last few years. Now, I am not bringing any charges or complaints against anybody or any institution, but we are compelled to say that the majority of the young men coming into the ministry of the Methodist Church in the State of Mississippi in the last ten years have received very little, if any, benefit from our fine college at Jackson. Millsaps has done well with the equipment and means it has had, but if we are to reach one of the needs for which it was founded—a better educated ministry—we will be compelled to go a step further than we have yet gone by making it possible for these young men to go to college. We all remember with regret and sorrow at each session of the Annual Conference—both in North and South Mississippi—splendid young men coming up for admission on trial who are uneducated and unprepared to fill the place they seek and unable to go to school. We have to take them as they come or turn them back, and many who are turned back are unable to go to school for the lack of means. These young men come from the country homes, where nearly all of our preachers come from, and they usually are without means, and it is very hard to secure the money necessary to attend the College.

At every Conference session we hear speeches made on the needs of these young men—eloquent speeches, full of pathos and sympathy—and yet these young men come in unprepared and many are turned back, a few to return later and try again, only a little better prepared, and too many never to return. No one will dispute the fact that we are losing at this point; that we are suffering for the need of well equipped leadership. Should the Church in Mississippi go a step further and prepare to remedy this condition? In my judgment, she can, and she should do so by all means. If the Church does not do this, she will forfeit the place she has held in the State as the leading denomination. If she loses this place, it will be because she has failed at this one point, and if she fails to do this she should lose. The larger part of the wealth of the State is held, owned and controlled by Methodist people, and yet, notwithstanding the liberality of one great-hearted layman in the founding and establishing of Millsaps College and his standing challenge, for so long, to duplicate every dollar given by the people of the State, there has never been a liberal and generous contribution from our membership to this great Methodist institution. Our Baptist brethren have responded generously to the calls for Mississippi College, and this is worthy of our emulation. If the Methodist people of the State could be induced to respond as generally and liberally to Millsaps as the Baptists have to Mississippi College, we could make preparations to take care of all the young preachers coming to us asking for a place in the Church, and we would be prepared to say to those young men, "You must go to college before we take you in."

It has been suggested that the Church in the State raise the funds needed to erect and equip a building on the campus at Millsaps large enough to accommodate fifty young men in the dining room; with a sitting room, a kitchen, pantry and other needed rooms down stairs, and with a living apartment up stairs for the matron and her family, and maybe a few rooms for some of the young men. Let the needed provisions to feed these young men be furnished, partly as the orphanage is furnished, donations from any who may feel like giving, and partly provided for by the Boards of Education of the two Conferences, and say to these young men, "Come to Millsaps to college and we will feed you free while you prepare to preach the gospel." We should also see to it that there is a theological professorship in the College as soon as possible. This will make this a school of the prophets and should lead up to a higher course in the University at Atlanta.

By the way, to close with, I will say that everybody at Laurel at the recent session of the Mississippi Conference was delighted with Dr. W. J. Young and more than pleased with his work. Surely the young men who attend the University and come under the touch of such a man as Dr. Young will come out prepared in mind and spirit for the work of the ministry. W. H. SAUNDERS.

Editorial

LET US OPEN ITS DOORS.

As will be noted, this issue of the Advocate is largely devoted to the Methodist Hospital enterprise at Memphis, Tennessee. For two or three years, when the movement in the interest of this project was first begun, we served as one of the Commissioners having it in charge, and from that time to this we have felt a deep interest in the undertaking. The progress made in carrying it forward, owing to unavoidable adverse conditions, has been regrettably slow; yet there is reason to be encouraged by what has been accomplished. A magnificent property, admirably adapted to the purposes in contemplation, has been acquired; several Annual Conferences have become thoroughly committed to the work of establishing and maintaining the institution; more than $125,000 has been secured in cash and subscriptions, and all accruing obligations have been met up to the present. Hence, it may be said that the enterprise has passed the uncertain stage and that its ultimate success is now assured.

But there has been quite enough dilly-dallying in the promotion of this project and it is high time that we were consummating it and opening the doors of the institution for service. The sum of money needed to make this possible is too small to justify a longer delay in beginning to operate the fine plant that is already in our possession. What is $35,000 to the more than 250,000 Methodists in Mississippi, West Tennessee, and North Arkansas? They could easily raise double this amount on any single Sabbath if they would only half try. A general interest and concert of effort are all that are needed to secure the funds requisite to set our hospital going.

How are our people to be aroused to the importance of this enterprise and led to lend it a helping hand? As is the case in all the other work of the Church, we must chiefly look to our busy, burdened pastors to do this. They are on the ground and have the ear and confidence of their flocks as no one else has; and therefore are in a position to lay this worthy cause appealingly on their hearts. Let this be done in every Sunday school and from every pulpit in the Conferences related to this project next Sunday, giving every one present an opportunity to make an offering. If all would do this faithfully, we dare say that the outcome would be surprising and highly gratifying. See that your charge, whether large or small, dear brother pastor, swings into line and is represented in the reports sent to Secretary Ellis. There ought not to be a blank opposite the name of any pastorate in Mississippi.

But do we really need this hospital? Of this there is not the slightest doubt. The truth is, our Church is trailing in this important field of service in this section. The Baptists have an excellent hospital in Memphis and another at Jackson, Miss.; the Presbyterians have one in Memphis and a splendid plant in New Orleans, to which a building is now being added for a free clinic; the Roman Catholics have several such institutions in this portion of the South; but the Methodists have no hospital in Louisiana, or Mississippi, or Alabama, or Arkansas, or West Tennessee. Yet we dare say that if the assessments of the property holdings of the members of the various denominations in this stretch of territory were available, it would be found that there is no religious organization in it that is stronger financially than the Methodist Church. This showing lacks much of being creditable to us.

Nor is our deficiency in this respect one that is of little consequence. We dare say that if the truth were known it would be found that we are already suffering considerable loss because of it, and there is no doubt that unless we strengthen our Church in this particular we shall suffer vastly more largely from this weakness in the coming years. Living in one of the great Roman Catholic centers of the country, we are in a position to know to some extent how that great ecclesiasticism, through its various arms of benevolence, is constantly making inroads upon the membership of the Protestant Churches. Only a few days since we had occasion to make inquiry concerning a woman in pitiable plight, an utter wreck from the opium habit, who happened to drift into the Advocate office, and we learned that, though a Protestant, she had a little son who is being cared for in a Catholic institution. Herein lies the explanation of why it is so difficult for the Protestant bodies to make headway where the Romish Church has sway. With forms of philanthropy to minister to practically every physical or social ill to which humanity is heir, Roman Catholicism is strongly entrenched, and to endeavor to dispossess it of any field is like charging an enemy behind well-nigh impregnable fortifications. Though accounting it unsound and unworthy in so many respects, we may well learn a lesson at this point from this wonderful ecclesiastical organization which has survived the passing of centures and has extended itself so largely over the world. There need be no conflict between institutional and evangelical Christianity. On the contrary, the Church that would be evangelistic to the highest maximum of efficiency should, through philantropic agencies, seek to throw out in every direction life-lines to save (soul and body) the perishing millions of the race. The only point to be guarded is to see that the vital fact that the highest function of Christianity is spiritual, not in any sense material, is ever kept in mind.

That the service rendered through hospitals deserves high appraisement among the multiplying benevolent activities of modern Christianity, there can be no question. If we were asked to name the one institution (other than the Christian Church itself) in the State of Louisiana, or perhaps in the entire South, that is doing the most telling philanthropic work, we should answer without hesitation, the Charity Hospital of New Orleans. There are millions of dollars invested in this great plant; it has numerous buildings, and the State and city and general public are behind it. The 'phone number of its ambulance corps is underneath nearly all the telephones in the stores, shops, factories, and public places in New Orleans, and when a person is injured the question of expense is not considered, but he is at once hurried to the Charity Hospital, where he is given attention and medical treatment. This service is open to the poorest as well as the richest. For years this great institution kept its doors open to the destitute and suffering of the adjoining States, as well of the Crescent City and Louisiana; but its patronage finally became so large that it was forced to restrict its service to the State in which it is situated. Who can measure the influence of this noble institution? Yet, vast as it is, we believe it would be largely increased if it were operated under a thoroughly Christian management. Indeed, it is our firm conviction that the Church can surpass the State in the work to be done in the field of philanthropy fully as much, if not more, than she can in the field of education. Those who nurse the sick and care for the afflicted and helpless ought to possess Christlike hearts. If they minister in Jesus' name, they are apt to have a larger sympathy, a more lasting patience, and a tenderer touch.

We crave for our fast-growing Church a large place in this widening sphere of Christian activity in the future. And especially do we hope that those directing our hospital enterprises will see that they are made as generally helpful to destitute sufferers as is possible. This is a matter of the utmost importance.

We shall only add that we consider Memphis an ideal location for our Hospital. Situated on the bank of the great Mississippi River, in the center of a large and remarkably fertile cotton-growing region, with railroads reaching it from every direction, it is already one of the foremost cities of the South and is destined steadily to increase in importance as a center of population and commerce as the years pass. The Medical Department of the University of Tennessee is located there, and about it will always be gathered physicians of eminence and the most up-to-date skill. At such a place, our plant, if properly equipped and operated, will exercise a great influence, not only locally, but for hundreds of miles in every direction. It therefore, by every token, behooves us to see that it is made equal to the best institutions of the kind in the land. So let us, as the first step in this direction, raise next Sunday the money necessary to enable us to begin to serve the public. This will tend to enthuse our people concerning the enterprise and make further progress comparatively easy. Before us is a great opportunity. Surely, we will not trifle with it longer. A position in the rear does not befit Methodism. It is not in keeping with her past history. The proper place for her banners is in the forefront.

A QUEER VARIETY.

It is a strange kind of a prohibitionist who is willing to shut up the saloons only by means of the "parish unit." He does not mind denying his near-by neighbors the right to purchase liquor at will, but if a brother happens to live just across the parish, he thinks it would be a terrible indignity to impose such a restriction upon him. Strictly a HOME MISSIONARY is this type of a prohibitionist. If his inmost heart could be looked upon, we wonder whose "image and superscription" it would bear. We have an idea, but we will not be unkind enough to state our opinion here.

MUCH TO HIS CREDIT.

Mr. Norman Walker, one of the editors of The Times-Picayune, in discussing the political situation in Louisana, a few days ago, stated that Lieutenant-Governor Barret's campaign for the office of Governor had suffered because in pressing it he had not gone beyond $6000, the amount legally allowed for this purpose. If Mr. Barret has observed the law regulating the expenditure of money in political contests, he is very much to be commended for so doing, and the better element of the State's citizenship should see that he does not suffer loss on this account. The use of large sums of money in politics is a very grave evil, and it has been vigorously legislated against in nearly all the commonwealths of the Union.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Bishop Candler will leave Atlanta to visit our Mexican Missions on January 21. He will spend next Sunday, January 23, in Houston, Texas.

Rev. J. L. Williams, of Leesville, La., issued to the members of his congregation, in a very attractive form, a New Year pastoral letter which was beautiful in its sentiments. Brother Williams seems to be a wide-awake and progressive leader of the hosts of Israel.

The work at Kosciusko, Miss., is progressing favorably under the guiding hand of the new pastor, Rev. S. A. Brown. We have received from Brother Brown an interesting communication concerning his charge, which will appear in our "From the Field Department" next week.

Rev. A. S. Lutz, the new presding elder of the Monroe (La.) District, is giving a good account of himself in his important field. Echoes reaching this office show that he is making a fine impression wherever he goes.

Rev. C. D. Atkinson, the new presiding elder of the Shreveport District, is keeping busy in his "diocese." According to report, he is beginning already to wear the harness as a district superintendent like a veteran.

Rev. J. M. Boykin, from the Meridian (Miss.) District, has been appointed to serve the Covington (La.) charge and has entered upon his work there. We are informed that he has been well received and has made a very favorable impression upon the people.

Governor Brewer's appointment of Judge J. Morgan Stevens to the Supreme Bench of Mississippi was confirmed by the State Legislature last week. The term of a Supreme Judge in Mississippi is nine years. Judge Stevens has already shown that he is well fitted for this high office.

Rev. Felix R. Hill, Jr., has been cordially welcomed for the new year by the Rayne Memorial congregation, this city, and the work is going forward encouragingly under his direction. Plans are under way to improve greatly this historic house of worship in the near future.

Rev. R. A. Sibley of Carthage, Miss., reports that he has entered upon the work of the new year with good prospects of success. He has called for lists of our subscribers at all points in his charge and will endeavor to extend the circulation of the Conference organ among his parishioners.

Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt writes us as follows: "Please announce through the Advocate that the Athens (La.) M. E. Church, South, will be dedicated Suuday, January 30. Rev. J. M. Heury, D. D., of Rustou, will preach the dedicatory sermon. All former pastors are cordially invited to be present."

Keep in mind the fact that the Laymen's Missionary Convention will begin at the First Methodist Church in this city next Sunday. All the Protestant denominations of New Orleans will participate in it. At the evening hour Bishop Lambuth will deliver his famous lecture on "Ploneering in Africa."

The matter concerning the Memphis Methodist Hospital appearing in this issue of the Advocate, with the exception of the editorial on the eighth page, was collected or written by Rev. H. M. Ellis, the Field Secretary for that institution. All the unsigned contributions relative to that enterprise are from his pen.

Rev. W. F. Rogers of Sallis, Miss., writes as follows: "Everything is progressing favorably with us. We observed "Grenada College Day" last Sunday, Jan. 9, and got a liberal contribution. Our new presiding elder, Rev. W. W. Mitchell, was with us on the first Sunday in January and preached two excellent sermons."

The January Number of the Missionary Voice was largely devoted to a discussion of "Preparedness, Peace," etc. Rev. R. B. Eleazer, the editor, requests us to state that a copy of that issue will be sent without charge to any one applying to the Board of Missions of the M. E. Church, South, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

Rev. C. H. Ellis, one of the highly esteemed superannuates of the Mississippi Conference, is serving the New Augusta (Miss.) charge for his son-in-law, Rev. J. W. Chisolm, who is attending the Theological Department of Emory University. It scarcely needs to be said that Brother Chisolm has left his flock in safe hands.

Rev. A. S. Brisco, of Lamar, Miss., sounds an optimistic note from his charge. He sends us a new subscription, and says: "I value your paper as an assistant pastor more and more." One of the chief aims that we have for the Advocate is to make it re-enforce our pastors in their labors to build up the Church and Kingdom.

Rev. N. E. Joyner has begun his pastorate at the Carrollton Avenue Church of New Orleans with his accustomed energy and the people are responding to his leadership. He has faith in the future of this church and will not spare himself in trying to get it in shape to serve efficiently the section of the city in which it is located.

We make grateful acknowledgment to Rev. R. M. Evans, of Calhoun City, Miss., for several subscriptions, forwarded on the 10th inst. Both as a preacher and pastor, Brother Evans always gives a good account of himself in the field to which he is assigned. We know no minister whom we believe to be more fully consecrated to the Master's work.

Rev. W. S. Lagrone is much pleased with his new pastorate at Drew, Miss., and is laying his plans for the year's work. The "Week of Prayer" was observed, with a gratifying attendance upon the services. He is beginning to think of his revival meeting already. He will probably do his own preaching and have the Wisdom Sisters, of Macon, Mo., to do the singing.

Rev. J. B. Randolph, Superintendent of the Mississippi Methodist Orphanage, says: "We start the year with a clean balance sheet, and we hope to keep out of debt." Let the Methodist people of Mississippi help Brother Randolph to realize this earnest desire. We shall have something further to say concerning the financial support of our Orphanges in the near future.

Rev. W. L. Duren, President of the Board of Missions of the North Mississippi Conference, has called a meeting of that body at Grenada, January 27-28. The opening session will be at 7 p. m. on Thursday, the 27th. All members of the Board and the presiding elders of the Conference are urgently requested to attend. Dr. E. H. Rawlings, of Nashville, Tenn., will be present.

We have in hand a copy of the Journal of the East Oklahoma Conference, issued under the direction of Rev. W. L. Broome, of Bristow, Okla., the Conference Secretary. It is a well arranged and highly creditable annual, and shows that Southern Methodism is prospering in that section of the State of Oklahoma. Brother Broome has our thanks for remembering us with a copy of this publication.

A layman writes us as follows: "I traveled over a considerable part of the patronizing territory of the New Orleans Advocate last year and I learned of several pastors in good-sized towns who had no regular mid-week prayer meeting." We wonder if this can be true. A church without a prayer meeting, no matter what else in the way of organizations it may have, is to be commiserated. Its spirituality is evidently at a low ebb.

Rev. W. M. Williams, of Collins, Miss., writes: "My son, Frank Stow Williams, and his wife sailed from San Francisco on January 6 for China, where they will take up their work in Soochow University. They are full of hope and enthusiasm concerning their labors in that institution. We enjoyed the few days that our children were with us during Christmas, but we are now all alone again. However, we are well and are happy in our pastorate."

Dr. A. F. Watkins, of Jackson, Miss., in a personal note to the Editor, says: "We have a brand-new Legislature in session here, and I hope that you can run up and look in on it." We trust that we may have this pleasure before the Solons adjourn. The Jackson Daily News stated some days ago that there is an unusually large number of college men in the present Legislature, Millsaps College, the State University, and Mississippi College, especially, being well represented.

In a business note to our office, Rev. W. M. McIntosh, of Iuka, Miss., says: "Everything is moving along nicely up this way. I am getting ready to start out in my evangelistic work. I want this to he the best year of my life. I am doing my best to get to heaven and to carry everybody else that I can with me." Brother McIntosh's engagements last year were mostly in the West, where he held some of the greatest revivals in his truly remarkable ministry. The brethren needing assistance in their meetings would do well to write him without delay.

Great is Tupelo' Brother O. W. Bradley forwarded to us on January 14, 39 subscriptions to the Advocate, 11 of which were new. He says: "I asked Mrs. A. D. Robins to look after the Interests of the Advocate, after a few remarks on the subject last Sunday, and I am sending you the list of subscribers which she has turned over to me. Things have moved off well here and I anticipste a good year. Fine folks are these in Tupelo." We are grateful both to Sister Robins and Brother Bradley for this good work in behalf of the Conference organ.

Mrs. Vic T. Hoyle, of Tupelo, Miss., writes: "The annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference will be held at Clarksdale, February 23-27. Dr. S. D. Gordon, of New York, will give a series of devotional talks. We will also have efficient help from the Council, and a returned missionary and our deaconesses will be present. I hope to be strong enough to attend and preside over some of the sessions. The names of delegates should be sent to Mrs. W. K. Herrin, chairman of the Entertainment Committee, Clarksdale, Miss."

Dr J. A. Parker, who is on the honor roll of the Louisiana Conference, and who came to New Orleans for medical treatment two or three weeks ago, is still here at the Touro Infirmary. After a careful examination of his physical condition, his physicians decided that an operation would not help him and left him to wrestle with the disease afflicting him without the aid of surgery. His condition is considered quite serious. Sister Parker is with him. Let the readers of the Advocate remember this worthy veteran and his loved ones at the throne of grace in this time of trial and anxiety.

Rev. N. B. Harmon, of Magnolia, Miss., informs us that his health has greatly improved and that he hopes soon to possess his usual vigor and strength. This will be good news to Brother Harmon's many friends in Mississippi and elsewhere.

Last Sunday was "Rally Day" at the Parker Memorial Church of this city. Despite the downpour of rain, a fine audience was in attendance. After an appropriate sermon by the pastor, Rev. R. H. Harper, the officials chosen for the new Conference year were impressively installed. The stewards presented Mr. Jones, the faithful organist who serves without remuneration, a beautiful portfolio as a token of the Church's high appreciation of his work. Brother Harper has entered upon his third year as the pastor of this flock with its prospects brighter than they have been before in many years, or perhaps in its entire history.

A note from Rev. W. N. Duncan, our pastor at Winona, Miss., states that Rev. G. W. Bachman returned home sick from the North Mississippi Annual Conference in New Albany early in December and that he has been out of his room but a few times since. He does not improve and his physicians regard his condition as very grave. Let the brethren remember this noble veteran and his family in their prayers at this critical time. No more faithful minister than Brother Bachman ever wrought in Mississippi, and his host of friends throughout that State and elsewhere in the Church will learn with sincere sorrow of his serious illness. May he be consciously in the gracious keeping of the Heavenly Father!

Under date of January 11, Rev. J. L. Greenway of Silver Creek, Miss., writes: "Brother D. C. Farmer, who is a local preacher in our Church, and who for a number of years was in the active work, recently fell and fractured his thigh and three of his ribs. Since the death of his wife at Wesson, a few months ago, he has made his home with his daughter, Mrs. S. C. Armstrong, at Oakvale, where he is now being tenderly cared for. While he is suffering much pain, it is hoped that he will recover. Father Farmer is much beloved and has the sympathy of many friends, who will greatly miss him from church and Sunday school." We regret to learn of Brother Farmer's painful accident, and we trust that ere this his sufferings have abated and that he has begun to show a decided improvement.

Mr. J. H. Ledyard, the efficient superintendent of our fine Sunday school at Tupelo, Miss., sends us the following interesting note: "The Sunday school of the First Methodist Church at Corinth, Miss., through its superintendent, Mr. H. M. Weaver, has challenged our Sunday school in Tupelo to an attendance contest to run through the months of January and February, the school showing the largest average attendance for that time to be declared the winner. For the first two Sundays the contest stands: Tupelo, 689 present, Corinth, 641. The contest is creating much interest in the two cities and each school is bestirring itself to win." Both from Tupelo and Corinth we have received comic cards ridiculing pleasantly the other side in this earnest race for the place of leadership.

Brother W. H. Bradley, of Flora, Miss., sends us a copy of some resolutions adopted concerning Rev. M. L. White, who served that charge with great acceptability for the past two years. He is commended for his untiring zeal and energy, for the assistance that he gave in wiping out the debt on the parsonage and church, for his aid in improving the latter structure and making valuable additions to it, and for his liberal giving which admirably re-enforced his work. A high appreciation is also expressed for Brother White's family, and both he and the members of his household are heartily commended to the people to whom they have now been sent to minister. A cordial greeting is, furthermore, extended to the new pastor, Rev. M. F. Adams, and he is assured that he will be given earnest co-operation.

Rev. J. H. Holder, presiding elder of the Sardis District, writes: "Things are moving off nicely in the district. The preachers are all in place and hard at work. We are looking forward to a great year. Mounger, at Charleston, is moving into a new eight room parsonage. It is a beauty. Park, Brooks, and Bennett are well started in their new fields and the people are delighted. Wendel, the faithful, has had some sickness in his home but undeterred by this, is pushing ahead and doing a great work in his way. Brother Porter is beginning his fourth year at Oakland more beloved than ever. The people are sorry that the time limit will not permit them to keep him indefinitely. Baker and Collins are stirring things, as is their custom. Good news also comes from the other charges. I shall soon be in them, helping the brethren to get started."

Mrs. FLOYD McPHERSON passed from this life on Dec. 17, 1915. The remains were brought to Morton on Saturday for interment in the Morton Cemetery. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. C. W. Crosby in the First Methodist Church at Morton, and were concluded at the cemetery by the writer. In her going, she leaves a mother, a husband, a five-year-old child, and a host of friends to mourn their loss. May God in all his mercy abide with them.

JAMES W. EVANS.

Morton Miss.

Little MARY L. SCALES, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Scales, was born on June 13, 1914, and died on Dec. 19, 1915. God in the dispensation of his providence saw fit to translate this sweet babe from earth to the heavenly home where there are no cares and sorrows. The funeral service was conducted at the home of the child's parents on Dec. 20 by the writer and Rev. D. W. Mowder, pastor of the Baptist Church at Lena. The interment of the body was made in the Cemetery at Morton, Miss. May God's richest blessings rest upon the broken-hearted loved ones left behind. The child is only sleeping!

JAMES W. EVANS.

The time between Jan. 31, 1914, and Nov. 19, 1915, marks the brief life of our infant son, BENJAMIN DOUGLAS PICKETT, who was ill only six days. Funeral services were conducted at the parsonage at Escatawpa, Miss., on Nov. 20 by Revs. B. F. Jones and W. W. Moore, and at the grave at McGowan's Chapel, Quitman, Miss., by Rev. A. J. Davis on Sunday, Nov. 21. May our Heavenly Father richly bless all those who so kindly assisted us in this trying ordeal. In our sadness there is mingled the joy of trust and resignation to the will of God, and we ourselves find comfort in the Christ whose life we try to exemplify and preach to others.

Rev. and Mrs. R. T. PICKETT.

The subject of this sketch, W. E. DEES, was born on May 26, 1841, and died on Dec. 26, 1915. He served well his country as a soldier and citizen, and our Church as a steward. He was one steward who visited from house to house and prayed with the people. In the home, he was a devoted husband and father, and while his was a life of sacrifice and service, he seemed to be unconscious of the fact that from his life flowed a stream of holy influence that led men to a higher and better life. At the Baptist Hospital in Memphis, on Dec. 6, he underwent a serious operation, and all that loving hands could do failed to save his life. At his request, he was carried to his home at Heminghway, Carroll County, Miss., from which he went home to be with God and loved ones, among whom is his loving wife who preceded him to the grave.

As he lived, so he died—in peace with God and all mankind. And so we write, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." He will be greatly missed in the Church and home circle. May God bless and comfort his orphaned children!

A former pastor,
G. W. McLAIN.

When LAFAYETTE CUMMINS ceased to breathe on Nov. 6, 1915, one of the best citizens of Pontotoc County passed from among us. He was born on Feb. 20, 1853, in Johnson County, Mo., being a son of Sanford and Demaris Cummins. This family moved to Lafayette County, Miss., when the subject of this sketch was about 12 years of age. He made Lafayette County his home until 1887, when he moved to Toccopola, Pontotoc County. Brother Cummins was happily married to Miss Pattie V. Hill, of Fayette County, Tenn., on Sept. 8, 1875. They lived together until the latter's death in February, 1885. He married Miss A. M. Whiteside, of Pontotoc County, Miss., on Jan. 5, 1888. He was converted in early life and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He had and deserved the confidence of all who knew him. He served as a steward in the Church and as a trustee of the church and parsonage, and filled these offices with fidelity and credit. He was generous, hospitable and pure in heart and life. His home was the preacher's home from the day he became the head of a family. He was loved by all who knew him; indeed to know him was to love him.

His pastor, T. J. HOPPER.

On November 10, 1915, we laid to rest in the cemetery on the hill, at Greenwood, La., all that remained of a most excellent and lovely character, Sister LOUISA M. MORE. She first saw the light of this world on May 17, 1845. Early in life she caught a vision of God and soon saw that Greater Light to whom she surrender her all, uniting with the Methodist Church at Greenwood, and giving to it her best service. Perhaps it was in connection with the Woman's Missionary Society (being its senior member at the time of her death) that she did her largest work.

Sister More was, in 1892, united in marriage by the writer to Mr. John M. More, a man of very worthy Christian character. Having no child of her own, she adopted a little boy, to whom she devoted the love of her motherly heart. He, with her venerable husband, other loved ones, and many friends remain to mourn her departure. For several weeks she suffered much bodily pain, yet her spirit was calm—and she was patient through it all But God, who loved her too well to let her suffer longer, came and took her to himself that the weary body might rest from its toils and sufferings till the resurrection of the just. Look up, sorrowing ones, to where she is waiting and watching for you. W. F. HENDERSON.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

It is with a feeling of sadness that the Woman's Missionary Society of South Side Methodist Church, Meridian, Miss., pays this last act of respect to the memory of one of its most loyal members, Mrs. Mary Alice Yates. Sister Yates was a woman of fine qualities, active, unselfish, always ministering to the sick and needy and looking to the uplifting of others. Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That while we, as the Missionary Society, bow in submission to God's will, we have sustained a great loss and our Society is poorer for our sister's removal.

2. That in appreciation of her labor and love among us, we extend to the sorrowing family our love and sympathy in their great trial.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her daughter, Mrs. Jno. Dick, a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and that a copy be spread upon the minutes of the Society.

Signed: Mrs. Leon Elizey, Mrs. A. M. Broadfoot, Mrs. Geo. Shirley.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and 1-4 oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

To Darken Hair Apply Sage Tea
Look Young! Bring Back Its Natural Color, Gloss and Thickness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant, remove every bit of dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, gray or dry, scraggly and thin. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use tonic, costing about 50 cents a large bottle at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, no one can tell because it does so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.—Adv.

EXCHANGE YOUR OLD BODY FOR A NEW ONE.

You can do it in three weeks and thereby renew your health. This article is written by a physician who has seen it demonstrated in numerous cases and explains how it is done.

Listen: If your weight is one hundred and thirty-three pounds your body contains eighty pounds of water, for, according to standard medical books, the human body contains sixty-seven and one-half per cent of water. Now disease is invariably caused by impurities which we call poison, and these are readily dissolved by the right kind of natural mineral water. Drink ten gallons (eighty pounds) of Shivar Mineral Water (use no other water for twenty-one days), and you will have exchanged your old body for a new one, so far as the soluble part of it is concerned. The impurities will be dissolved and pass away. If you suffer with dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, gall stones, kidney or liver disease, uric acid poisoning, or other conditions due to impure blood, accept Mr. Shivar's liberal offer which appears below. Read the following letter carefully; then sign and mail it:

Shivar Spring,
Box 17-G, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if it fails to benefit my case you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

REV. A. B. MOWERS ADVOCATES NERVE REMEDY.

Nervous indigestion is one of the commonest of the many forms of nervous trouble. It is very hard to treat usually, but those who have used Dr. Miles' Nervine all report that it was not long before their trouble vanish entirely.

Every ailment must have a cause and the cause is what should be removed. When the cause lies in the nervous system. Dr. Miles' Nervine cannot be too strongly advocated. It is backed by thirty years of successful use.

The Rev. A. B. Mowers, of York, Pa., is an ardent advocate of this remedy since it completely relieved him. He made the following statement for publication:

"Nearly 10 years ago I was troubled with nervous indigestion in its worst form. I had sick headaches nearly every day with a dizzy, dull feeling. I was extremely nervous, confused and suffered much with constipation. I was informed of Dr. Miles' Nervine and Liver Pills and determined to give them a trial. I used them as directed and received much relief. I continued the Nervine until I had used several bottles. I now enjoy good health, relish my meals and can eat any kind of food without fear. I take pleasure in recommending Dr. Miles' Remedies to the public."

Dr. Miles' Nervine or Liver Pills can be purchased at any drug store and the purchase price will be cheerfully refunded by the druggist if after using the remedies you are not satisfied with the results obtained.

HATTIESBURG DISTRICT NOTES.

The presiding elders of the Mississippi Conference held a council meeting at Main Street Church of this place last Wednesday, Jan. 5. All except Rev. P. D. Hardin, were present.

They agreed on the following dates for the district conferences: Hattiesburg, at Prentiss, April 12; Brookhaven, April 18; Port Gibson, at Gloster, April 27; Seashore, May 3; Meridian, May 10; Newton, at Rose Hill, May 16.

Almost without exception, the preachers in this district have been kindly received, and are hard at work. The promise is good for a great year's work.

Rev. Jas. M. Lewis has made a fine start at Prentiss. He and family were graciously received by all the churches on his work. He has a fine board of stewards, and they are carefully looking after every interest of the Church.

Rev. C. W. Crisler has had a two weeks' serious wrestle with la grippe. He is, however, recovering now, and will be able to preach next Sunday.

Rev. W. A. Terry is beginning his new work under very favorable circumstances. The Broad Street Church has given him and his family an encouraging beginning.

The Priscillian Society of Court Street Church gave their now pastor and his family a happy reception last Friday, Jan. 7, at 3:30 p. m., at the residence of Mrs. Curran W. Sullivan. Mrs. Sullivan is the youngest daughter of our lamented friend and brother, Rev. J. W. Chambers.

The sudden death of Mrs. E. H. Mounger, wife of Brother E. H. Mounger, for many years one of the loved and trusted leaders of our Conference, has brought great sorrow to the Methodism of Hattiesburg. He worshiped last Sunday at the Court Street Church, where all hearts were in tender sympathy with him. T. W. A.

A NOTE FROM BROTHER FULLILOVE.

Dear Dr. Meek: I must write a few more words to give expression to my feelings toward my dear brethren and friends. Tongue can never tell of the comfort and peace which have come to our hearts, since my dear wife and the mother of our home left us, from the sweet letters which have come in from the brethren in nearly every mail. I received a very consoling letter from Rev. I. D. Borders who now lives in Kansas City, Mo. Brother Borders and I have always been the most intimate of friends. My dear brethren, I have always loved you, but it seems that I now love you more. I know the God whom I serve and the Gospel which I preach to others is sufficient for me. While the cloud still hovers around, my Savior is near. He has wept with us as he did with Mary and Martha. May the blessings of a wise Providence be with you all! Pray for us.

Your brother in Christian love,
B. P. FULLILOVE.

Rienzi, Miss.

IN APPRECIATION OF SISTER FULLILOVE.

(Adopted by the Ladies' Aid Society at Abbeville, Miss., at a recent meeting.)

It is with the deepest regret that we note the death of Sister Fullilove, wife of Rev. B. P. Fullilove, formerly of this charge. For two years Sister Fullilove served us faithfully in the capacity of a pastor's wife. She was also president of our Ladies' Aid Society while she was with us. Among us Sister Fullilove was known and loved because of her sweet Christian character and for the good that she did. With feelings of deep regret and heartfelt sympathy, we give expression to these few words in loving memory of her. And while we feel a deep sympathy for her grief-stricken family, we know that her death was only a gentle awakening to a brighter, better life.

MRS. MARY C. CHILDS.

Mrs. Mary Cecelia Childs, wife of Dr. William Childs, of St. Landry Parish, departed this life on Jan. 6, after an extended illness.

Mrs. Childs was born in St. Landry Parish on June 3, 1857; was married on Dec. 23, 1879, and was the mother of nine children, of whom seven are living. She was reared ten miles from Opelousas in the parish of her birth, and was the daughter of Madison and Marie Young.

The deceased was well known in this section of the State. Her generosity to the poor and needy made her home a frequenting place for many who enjoyed her hospitable bounty. The spirit of giving was a religion sacred to her. At times it seemed limitless in its magnanimity, yet the larder was always full, and she and hers prospered and their worldly possessions only grew with the years and her bounteous goodness. Her poor relatives were closest to her heart, and several of them partook regularly of her benevolent gifts. Had she lived close to the greater moving streams of humanity, instead of in a quite remote country community, it is not easy to conjecture to what magnanimous an extent her generous heart would have gone in its dissemination of charities to those less fortunate.

Her children—seven in all—were devoted to her. Her husband never opposed her in her philanthrophy. Her death came as a bolt from the blue, a surprise and a shock, being unexpected even by those closest to her life.

Mrs. Childs was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and held membership for many years at Church Point, La., a small chapel little more than a mission, where her generosity and influence with her family went far in keeping this struggling church alive.

Her name is graven on the stone,
That friendship tears will often wet;
But each true child's heart upon—
That name is stamped more deeply yet.

Eunice, La. A. B. C.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

Inasmuch as God saw fit to call home dear little DIXIE FATHEREE be it

Resolved, That we as teachers and students of the Baxterville Consolidated School, Baxterville, Miss., extend to her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. M. Fatheree, and her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Sartin, and their family, our sincere sympathy for them in this, their great bereavement.

Also be it Resolved, That in our petitions we will fail not in asking for them that sustaining grace and comfort which God only can give, and most surely does give, as they submit fully to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

A MESSAGE FROM BROTHER GOLDEN.

My brethren of the Mississippi Conference might be glad to know that I have regained my health and am doing as good work as I have ever done. I feel sure that I would not be alive to-day if I had remained in the East. This is truly a great climate, but one has to come in time. I have seen many lose their fight for life because they came too late. I weigh 156 pounds and my throat and lungs feel as well as ever. I have not had the catarrhal headache since I came West. I feel as well as I ever did in my life, and the doctors say that I am entirely well of tubercular trouble.

The West is a great country, but it takes a hero to stay at the bat out here. These people do not want sermonettes or manuscripts. They want a preacher to hit the ball—no fouls. Three strikes and you are out. It takes a man, and he must live close to God, to keep church work up to the front in the West.

Doctor, you are giving us a good paper, and the Advocate is faithful to come each week with its helpful messages of truth. Best wishes to you in your great work, and to the members of the Mississippi Conference.

Toyah, Tex. J. J. GOLDEN.

Calomel Seldom Sold Here Now

Nasty drug salivates, makes you sick and you lose a day's work.

Every druggist in town—your druggist and everybody's druggist—has noticed a great falling off in the sale of calomel. They all give the same reason. Dodson's Liver Tone is taking its place.

"Calomel is dangerous and people know it, while Dodson's Liver Tone is perfectly safe and gives better results," said a prominent local druggist. Dodson's Liver Tone is personally guaranteed by every druggist who sells it. A large bottle costs 50 cents, and if it fails to give easy relief in every case of liver sluggishness and constipation, you have only to ask for your money back.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a pleasant-tasting, purely vegetable remedy, harmless to both children and adults. Take a spoonful at night and wake up feeling fine; no biliousness, sick headache, acid stomach or constipated bowels. It doesn't gripe or cause inconvenience all the next day like violent calomel. Take a dose of calomel to-day and to-morrow you will feel weak, sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day's work! Take Dodson's Liver Tone instead and feel fine, full of vigor and ambition.

DOCTOR SAVES A BLACKSMITH.

Some time ago I was taken with Kidney trouble which caused me to give up my work as blacksmith. I lost my appetite and could not sleep, from the dreadful pains that would come over me, from my kidneys. I was treated by a physician for about three months. He could not help me so finally he prescribed Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. I started taking same and before I had finished taking the first bottle I begun to eat and sleep better than I had in a long time. I continued to take same until I was entirely cured and took on considerable weight.

I am now back working at my trade again and never felt better in my life. I appreciate what Swamp-Root has done for me and will recommend it to anyone who suffers with their kidneys. When physicians fail to give relief and then prescribe Swamp-Root, they sure know of its merits. I am,

Very truly yours,

BYHALIA, MISS.

Dear Brother Meek: Having seen nothing in the Advocate from the Byhalia charge since Conference, I feel like writing something about this part of Holly Springs District. During the past two years, under the ministry of our beloved pastor, Rev. L. A. McKeown, there have been wonderful manifestations of the Holy Spirit among us. Scores have been converted and added to the Church and a wave of spiritual uplift has shown itself among the membership.

Taking into consideration this evidence of Divine approval of the faithful work done by the pastor, no wonder the people desired to have Brother McKeown returned, and they certainly were delighted when news came from Conference that he had been appointed to this charge for the year 1916.

Brother McKeown is a great worker in the Master's vineyard; so he preaches once a month to two congregations outside of his regular work. Of course, these are afternoon appointments. At one of these he has organized a church with a good membership and a growing Sunday school.

While we are rejoicing over the return of Brother McKeown, it is attended with regret to part with Brother Tucker, our presiding elder, who was changed because of the time limit. He showed himself possessed of the spirit of the Master and performed his duties faithfully, and was loved by our people, who are glad that he is appointed to a good charge at Grenada. Our new presiding elder, Rev. J. H. Felts, was with us the third Sunday and preached an eloquent sermon at 11 a. m. The people were delighted with the sermon, and, judging by this effort, he is fully up to the standard.

Brother Robert Davis, who has lately returned from the Baptist Hospital at Memphis, where he submitted to an operation, is now confined to his room. I had the pleasure of visiting him in his room and found him in fine spirits and willing and able to discuss subjects as they came up. It is a habit of his to attend the Annual Conference, so it was a sore disappointment when he was not able to go to the Conference at New Albany. Such a saintly man is a benediction to a community. Hot or cold weather does not deter this gray-haired follower of the Man of Gallilee from walking to Church and Sunday school.

A few Sunday nights ago Rev. Charles Moss delivered an interesting and instructing sermon at our Church. He was listened to with marked attention. Many of the congregation were schoolmates of his when he lived at Byhalia. They have reason to be proud of him, for he is making good. Rev. S. A. Brown, a former esteemed pastor by invitation, delivered a number of telling sermons at Emory Chapel, after which Brother McKeown invited him to Byhalia, where he preached for a week to good, attentive congregations in the nice church which was built during his pastorate. It goes without saying that the people were glad to have him in their midst and to listen to the thoughtful, spiritual sermons which he delivered. We are looking forward with faith to the work of the new year, trusting that great things will be done in this charge under the leadership of Brother McKeown and the presiding elder, Brother Felts. M. D. HERRING.

CHASES RHEUMATISM.

Every drug store is stocked full of all kinds of remedies which are supposed to benefit sufferers from Rheumatism, but the one remedy that has been tried and proven efficient is called "RENWAR." It is sold on a positive guarantee of money back if not satisfied. R. A. Foster, of Petros, Tenn., writes as follows: "The bottle of 'RENWAR' I got from you has done my wife more good than all the other remedies she has ever tried. I shall always keep a bottle on hand as I consider it the best remedy on the market." Send fifty cents for a bottle, if your druggist cannot supply you. If not satisfied we will cheerfully refund your money. Prepared and guaranteed by the Warner Drug Company, Nashville, Tenn.

COMPETITION-MADE THIEVERY.

It is a pity, as Justice Russell of the Court of Special Sessions declared, that there is no State prison sentence for thieves of the brand of Felix Erman. This worthy, a butcher, had with diabolic ingenuity rigged up false scales so that by stepping on a board he was able to add ten ounces to the weight of a customer's purchase. When one of the inspectors of the Bureau of Weights and Measures caught him this device had been in use nearly a year, and his stealings, it was estimated, amounted to $75 a week.

Erman pleaded guilty and will spend three months in the penitentiary, and a light sentence it is under the circumstances. But his plea in extenuation was, perhaps, the most remarkable feature of his case. "I was compelled to do it on account of competition," he said. "I could not make money unless I did it."

The implication of that plea is that the other dealers also are robbing their customers. Unfortunately, the records of the Bureau of Weights and Measures and of the courts prove that many of them are. The only way for the housekeeper in this city to be sure of getting what is paid for is to weigh and measure the purchases after getting them home. If more people would do that there would be far fewer Ermans in the mercantile world—and perhaps more of them in the penitentiary.—New York Tribune.

Big Eaters Get Kidney Trouble

Take Salts at first sign of Bladder Irritation or Backache.

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys; to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.—Adv.

Lime-Loss in Tuberculosis

In the Journal of the American Medical Association (January 17, 1913), was the following:

"It has been many times stated that in tuberculosis or in the pretuberculosis stage an increased amount of calcium (lime) is lost both in the urine and feces. In fact, a demineralization has been thought to be a forerunner of the development of tuberculosis."

If tuberculosis is due to lime loss, the success of Eckman's Alterative in its treatment may be due, in part, to its content of a lime salt so combined with other valuable ingredients as to be easily assimilated.

Always we have urged consumptives to attend strictly to matters of food, but often some effective remedial agent is needed. In many cases of apparent recovery Eckman's Alterative seems to have supplied this need. It contains no opiates, narcotics or habit-forming drugs, so is safe to try. Price $1 and $2 per bottle. Sold by leading druggists or sent direct from the Laboratory. We would like to send you a booklet containing information of value and references.

BACKACHE, PAIN IN SIDE, RHEUMATISM.

Dear Reader:

For a long time I suffered from backache, pain in left side, frequent urination (bothering me at all times during the day and night), and the uric acid in my blood caused me to suffer from rheumatism with a constant tired, worn-out feeling. I heard of the new discovery of Dr. Pierce, of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., called "Anuric," and obtaining these tablets I at once began their use. After giving "Anuric" a good trial I believe it to be the best kidney remedy on the market to-day. I have tried other kidney medicines, but these "Anuric Tablets" of Dr. Pierce's are the only ones, in my opinion, that will cure kidney and bladder troubles. (Signed)

HENRY A. LOVE.

Note: Experiments at Dr. Pierce's Hospital for several years proved that "Anuric" is thirty-seven times more active than Lithia in expelling poisons from body. For those easily recognized symptoms of inflammation—as backache, scalding urine and frequent urination, as well as sediment in the urine, or if uric acid in the blood has caused rheumatism, it is simply wonderful how surely "Anuric" acts. The best results are always obtained in cases of acute rheumatism in the joints, in gravel and gout, and invariably the pains and stiffness which so frequently and persistently accompany the disease rapidly disappear. Send 10c. for large trial package or go to your nearest drug store and simply ask for a 50-cent package of "Anuric" manufactured by Dr. Pierce. If you suspect kidney or bladder trouble, send him a sample of your water and describe symptoms. Dr. Pierce's chemist will examine it, then Dr. pierce will report to you without fee or any charge whatever.—Adv.

THE HUMORS OF CASTE.

Though going to foreign countries by crossing the ocean is to break one's caste, hundreds of young Hindus are now visiting Europe and America in pursuit of modern scientific and industrial education. Indeed, so numerous are the families affected that public opinion has compelled the Brahmans to ordain that no loss of caste shall result from going abroad for education. The step next contemplated is to have merchants and other business men exempted from the ban. It is certain that in time all classes of travelers will be exempted.

It is not so much the going abroad that is objected to, as the eating of forbidden food, as beef, pork and chicken, or any food cooked by foreigners. To obviate partly this difficulty, the Hindus have just organized a steamship line—the Indian Peninsula Company—between Bombay and London. On board the ships of this line Hindu caste rules are studiously observed. This company is soon to open a hotel in London for the caste people of India, so that Hindu students, merchants and travelers may go to London, reside for any length of time, and still return home without breaking their caste.

Caste rules prohibit people of different castes dining together. These rules, however, are broken by the rising generation in schools and colleges. The students, defying the cold and calculating conservatives, use the school and college buildings for dinner parties, where Hindus and Mohammedans, Christians and Jains, Buddhists and atheists break bread together. In Benares, the stronghold of Brahmanical orthodoxy, intercaste dinners are of common occurrence. The Indian leaders in reform have gone a step further. On a public occasion they dined publicly with Europeans in the town hall of Calcutta.—Methodist Recorder.

The picture of two French soldiers carrying from the field a wounded German and ministering to his needs is a rebuke to much of the bitterness that denounces a whole nation because our sympathies are on the other side. The human heart, deep below the surface, is about the same on both sides of a battle line, and on the whole as much to be trusted as that specimen of it we know best.—Our Dumb Animals.

Get Rid of a Racking La Grippe Cough —It Weakens

For the severe racking cough that comes with la grippe, Foley's Honey and Tar Compound is wonderfully healing and soothing. It eases the tightness over the chest, raises the phlegm easily and helps the racking, tearing cough that is so exhausting and weakening. R. G. Collins, ex-postmaster, Barnegat, N. J., says: "Foley's Honey and Tar Compound soon stopped the severe la grippe cough that completely exhausted me. It can't be beat."

Cured His RUPTURE.

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that quickly and completely cured me. Years have passed and the rupture has never returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell, but will give full information about how you may find a complete cure without operation. If you write to me, Eugene M. Pullen, Carpenter, 597B Marcellus Ave., Manasquan, N. J. Better cut out this notice and show it to any others who are ruptured—you may save a life or at least stop the misery of rupture and the worry and danger of an operation.

NORTH GATE, CHANGCHOW.

Miss Ella D. Leveritt writes:

"It seems that the whole year has heen one hrimful of blessings and that this has heen the very sweetest year of my life in China. Our burden of prayer has heen for an awakening among the Christian girls in the school. The petition is heing answered. Since the heginning of June eight of the older pupils have joined the Church and are taking an active interest in Christian work among the pupils. It is a joy to see Christian influence growing as it is in the school. This term we have opened an afternoon free school—that is the tuition is free, hut they buy their hooks. The advanced pupils of the sixth and seventh grades of Zong Tsung are doing the teaching in this half-day school and are very happy to think that they are helping and at the same time are learning to teach. This school opened with fourteen little girls from seven to twelve years of age, and thirty pupils will be our limit at present. This will give our pupils normal training during their last two years."

A REMARKABLE STATEMENT.

During the Panama Exposition many distinguished Japanese visited our missions on the Pacific Coast. They expressed themselves as being especially interested and gratified at the work they saw going on at Mary Helm Hall. A Japanese gentleman said that one of their number who received the gospel in America had a very much larger audience in Japan than one who was converted there, the feeling being that here they have seen Christianity tried and tested in America, and are, therefore, prepared to endorse it as worth while. Let the auxiliaries remember this as they work for Japan.

From the Field

Rayne, La.

Dear Dr. Meek: We are expecting a good year at Rayne. The prospects are encouraging and we have a very loyal band of people. We have afternoon appointments at Branch and Roberts' Cove, and this means work on the part of the preacher. In addition to this, we have the fourth-year Conference course of study to briug up. However, despite the many tasks that confront me, I expect to look after the interests of our church paper.—C. E. Fike, P. C.

Vaughan, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: We are having a cordial receptiou on this charge. Nearly every day some special kindness is shown us. The people of Yazoo County know how to make a preacher and bis family feel good. I completed my round ot appointments in December. The prospects for a successful year are encouraging. The attendance of some of the Sunday schools is increasing, as is also the interest in them. Quite a number of our people here are active Christians, and we are expecting great things by the help of the Lord. Pray for us.—R. E. Rutledge, P. C.

Gunnison, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: I had the privilege after the session of the North Mississippi Conference of seeiug how wide our State is, moving from Macon Circuit, on the east, to Gunnison, on the bank of the Mississippi River. We have been most cordially received and kindly treated here. I attended the Greenville District stewards' meeting last Friday and met a number of the preachers and laymen of the district. And, more interesting still, I met my presiding elder—the courtly, royal, hustling Brother Spragins, who is new to me and I to him. If he and the people of Gunnison charge are as well pleased with me as I am with him and them my appointment to this place will not be a misfit.—R. W. Evans.

Walnut, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: After some delay, caused by the severe illness of our baby, we have reached our new charge and preached at three of the churches out of the five that make up the appointment. Our people have received us kindly. Many tokens of their interest have come our way. On Christmas evening a shower was given for the new preacher and many nice and useful things were left at the parsonage. Our work here has started off well. I hope that you will remember our baby, who is still in danger, and that you will pray for him; also please ask your readers to do likewise. I believe in prayer. I am already planning for revivals throughout my charge. I want to begin by getting our folks to read the New Orleans Christian Advocate.—O. P. Armour, P. C.

Pollock, La.

It is a great pleasure to give to the readers of our paper the information that the religious interests of our Church here are on the up-grade. Our district has received a repetition of a great blessing to our church work by the return to us of that much admired and consecrated Christian gentleman, Rev. H. W. May, as our presiding elder, who committed himself to me as being well pleased with the preachers who are under his jurisdiction for this year's work. He reports a bright beginning. He expects to be with us soon. Our pastor, Brother Crooks, is with us with his saintly wife, and I believe I can safely say that he is the preacher for this work. His record behind him gives him perfect access to our homes and to our hospitality. While he is a large man by nature, he is of like proportion in his life and preaching. His daily walk and conduct has won the admiration and confidence of the people of our town. His sermon this morning was very convincing—urging us to be about our Master's work. This afternoon at 3 o'clock he and I went out in the country about six miles to a schoolhouse where he will preach once a month on the same day he preaches for us. He had a good congregation and a profitable service. The people of our town gave Brother Crooks a "pounding" on his arrival that would have made a city preacher happy. We are proud of him as our preacher and pastor.—Jas. H. Walker.

Durant, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: Knowing your interest in every department of our Church, I thought it might be well to give you a partial report of our progress during the new Conference year. From present indications, it would appear that Brother W. W. Mitchell will prove a worthy successor to Brother Shipman as presiding elder and that Brother T. M. Bradley will creditably fill the place vacated by Brother Broyles, as pastor. Both of these brethren have entered heartily and enthusiastically into their work, and, if they continue as they have begun, Durant can report at the next Conference another year of advancement.

The "Week of Prayer and Self-Denial" was observed by our congregation, beginning on Monday night with 41 in attendance, and falling below this number on only one night, when 36 were present. The services were led by laymen every night except two. A substantial collection was realized for the cause of missions.

On the second Sunday, a church conference was held after the regular preaching service for the purpose of discussing ways and means for completing our church, upon which we expended $8500 last year, and which will require about $5000 more for completion. The Chairman stated that $5100 of the $8500 was raised by subscription last year ($3400 having been on hand at the beginning, the amount having been accummulated by the ladies and the Sunday school during several years past), and it appeared that the subscription list of last year would have to be practically duplicated. He called for volunteers to duplicate their subscriptions, and in a few minutes $1000 was subscribed. Every one takes it for granted that we will be worshiping in our new church before the next Annual Conference.

On Sunday night the officers of the Adult, Young People's, and Junior Missionary societies were installed publicly, and it was announced that the adult auxiliary expected to inaugurate a vigorous membership campaign, adopting as their slogan, "Every Lady in the Church a Member of the Missionary Society."

We have a fine Sunday school and I could recount some of its recent achievements had not this letter already grown too long. Every department of our Church seems to be closely aligned with the pastor and officials for the advancement of the Church of God, and we are expecting a good year. R. C. ELMORE,

Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—now—any time—will surely save your hair.

Editorial

A contemporary propounds the following pertinent question: "Are you overcoming the world, or coming over to it?"

Men have learned many new things, but they have not learned how to begin the Christian life without the "new birth" or how to maintain it without reading the Bible and prayer.

"Fighting in the Garden of Eden," is the heading given by The Literary Digest to an article dealing with the progress of the great European conflict. It is too bad that the war lords will not let even the bones of Father Adam repose in peace.

The late Col. Ingersoll glorified Humboldt for discovering and affirming that "the universe is governed by law," while at the same time he (the Colonel) was banishing the great Lawmaker from the skies. That was logic with a vengeance; but Mr. Ingersoll was a rhetorian, not a logician. He dazzled with the splash and spangle of words—thinking was not his forte.

Great lives are the results of great convictions. Nothing else can produce a majestic character or incite one to large achievements. The soul that is too shallow or flinty for mighty beliefs and principles to find deep rootage in it is not capacitated to sacrifice and suffer, and to dare and do that things of far-reaching significance may be accomplished. The value of even penitence and prayer must be measured by soul-depth.

To have the witness of the Spirit is the glorious privilege of every believer, and no one should be satisfied without it. Thus only may a person KNOW that his sins are forgiven and that he is in a truly saved condition. If there is any one thing of which a human being ought to be absolutely certain, it is that he has passed from death unto life and is in right relationship to God. This is a question upon which is hinged the eternal destiny of the soul.

The Western Christian Advocate says: "Bishop Warne intimates that it was a somewhat embarrassing situation when, while he was preaching to an outdoor congregation in India, a Brahmin approached, and making a low bow, inquired most blandly if the Bishop would kindly inform his hearers how many saloons and brothels there were in Chicago." The fact that the so-called Christian nations are not really Christian has long been one of the most serious obstacles in the way of missionaries. The truth is, there is not a thoroughly Christian nation on the globe. It will be worth seeing when there is; for, as Mrs. Browning has said, "Fully developed Christianity will be civilization perfected."

THE CHURCH'S CHIEF WORK.

The following is from a recent issue of Zion's Herald, the vigorous organ of New England Methodism:

"What is needed to bring Methodism back to its great work?

"First, that the laity and ministry should deem it of primary importance to secure open decisions for Christ. All other work is secondary to this.

"Second, in carrying this out there should be constant personal and pulpit evangelism. * * * That at least once each Sunday an invitation should be given. And that some time during the year a period of protracted services should be held."

We are pleased to echo this note of our distinguished contemporary. Incomparably the greatest work that the Christian Church can do is to save immortal souls. "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repeneth." It matters not how many churches are built, or how many pipe organs are installed, or how much money is raised for various purposes, or how many schools are established, or how eloquently her ministers may preach, or how many books they may write, or how many unregenerate persons may be enticed into the fold, if people are not brought into saving touch with the living Christ, the Church fails to fulfill her chief and highest mission, and all else achieved amounts to comparatively little. It is the soul-winning pastor and flock that are after the apostolic pattern, and who in eternity will be acclaimed the greatest and given the most lustrous crowns.

As our contemporary suggests, this was the work that made the past history of Methodism glorious, and upon it she must continue to put the chief emphasis if she would keep her place of leadership among the Churches.

Something is radically wrong with the preacher and congregation under whose labors no souls are ever born into the Kingdom. There should be among them a season of earnest heart-searching and agonizing prayer.

THE WORLD'S MOST WONDERFUL AGE.

Viewed from almost any standpoint, the age in which we are living is the most remarkable of all time. It surpasses all former centuries in splendor, and never has mankind in any preceding period made such progress in knowledge and in the mastery of nature as has been made within the past few decades. Steam, electricity, magnetism, luminiferous ether, and other agencies and forces scarcely less wonderful have been studied until many of their laws have been learned and they have been utilized for service. The rivers, the oceans, and the air are no longer impassable barriers, but have become highways for the restless millions of the race. Vastly the larger share of the world's wealth has been created within the last half-century. And never before have there been seen such battling for moral reforms and such missionary activity as are now taking place. Such educational equipment as now exists in the various lands of earth was not dreamed of by the most imperial imagination a hundred years ago, and never previously was enlightenment so widespread as it is at present. The growth of democracy has also been one of the outstanding characteristics of this phenomenal time. The thrones of despotism are everywhere insecure. The twentieth century promises to be pre-eminently the people's century.

Even in what has been done to extend geographical knowledge, the present age is an extraordinary one. Touching upon this subject recently, Dr. J. Scott Keltie made the following utterance to the Royal Scottish Geographical Society: "No period of discovery comparable to the last fifty years has been known since the half-century beginning with 1492, when Columbus revealed a new world. The two poles have been reached in the later period, and knowledge of the polar regions has been greatly increased. The Dark Continent has had its unknown two-thirds mapped, most of it having been divided among the European powers. In North America great tracts have been surveyed and occupied, and in Central and South America much territory has been explored. Asia has had its map largely reconstructed. The great unknown interior of Australia has been becoming familiar, and even Europe has furnished material for resurveys."

Undoubtedly events of the most stupendous significance are coming to pass on earth, and what is ahead we do not know. One would fain believe that the Kingdom of God is being increasingly set up amongst men and that we are steadily marching toward a higher and nobler civilization; but it must be confessed that there are not a few things going on that are quite perplexing and which tend to awaken serious misgivings within one's heart. Can it be that the Divine Kingdom is destined to come, as Christ came, crossing most of the preconceived notions of men as to what it is to be? Possibly there may be something in this suggestion, and at times we cannot but indulge such a hope.

But let us remember that much depends upon the Church's fidelity to God and seek to keep her true to her Divinely-appointed mission. She alone wields the power than can save the human soul, and which, by saving the individual, must save human society and its institutions. No civilization is too strong and splendid to go down in ruins if God be neglected and the moral foundations give way. The hope of the world lies in a pure, unweakened, and aggressive Christianity.

BETTER THINGS AHEAD.

The Ancient Greeks had a saying, "Let no one be called happy till his death." We dare not believe that death brings happiness to all men; but for the Christian it is the dawning of a grander day—the beginning of a larger and richer life.

GIVE THANKS TO-NIGHT.

By Esther Tredwell Catlin.

A spirit whispered in the fading light,
"Give thanks to-night!
For treasures lost, and sweet hopes long delayed,
For effort and denial unrepaid,
For griefs o'er which you wept, nor understood
How all that life withheld was for your good,
For joys you've missed you would, it seem aright,
Give thanks to-night!"

—New York Christian Advocate.

ALL NEED IT.

All men need prayer. None is strong enough in himself to withstand the seduction and allurements of the world. The gravitation of the world is too much even for the strongest. Our animal nature is sure to get the better of our spiritual and godlike nature, unless our godlike life is reenforced from God himself. In him we stand.

THE WORST DANGER.

By Dr. Francis L. Patton.

Really the worst danger of the day is the loss, not everywhere and among all, but the loss, nevertheless, of a deep, moral foundation, of a mighty unifying principle of right and wrong. Whether it is because of a misapplied theory of evolution or of an easy-going sentimentality, or of a softening of the moral system, we are getting away from the distinction between right and wrong. It is not uncommon to find men teaching that what is right depends upon what is expedient to-day or in our neighborhood. In some respects this kind of teaching leaves us worse off than the heathen world when Christianity came, for the heathen did have some very profound views of right and wrong and of retribution. When evolution is so applied or taught that it leaves us less foundation for moral life than the ancients had, it is not progress, but threatens a collapse. We must get deeper down, nearer to the great beliefs of the human soul, nearer to God as the over-mastering mind of all. When you ask me how and what ministers should preach at this time, I have but one answer—the Gospel of Salvation. The two great facts of our Christianity are that Christ died and rose again, and there the pulpit must find its message, its proclamation of peace for a warring world, its promise of salvation for a sinning world.

GOD'S TESTING.

A blacksmith about eight years after he had given his heart to God was approached by an intelligent unbeliever with the question: "Why is it you have so much trouble? I have been watching you. Since you joined the Church and began to 'walk square,' and seem to love everybody, you have had twice as many trials and accidents as you had before. I thought that when a man gave himself to God his troubles were over. Isn't that what the parsons tell us?"

With a thoughtful but glowing face, the blacksmith replied:

"Do you see this piece of iron? It is for the springs of a carriage. I have been 'tempering' it for some time. To do this I heat it red-hot, and then plunge it into a tub of ice cold water. This I do many times. If I find it taking 'temper,' I heat and hammer it unmercifully. In getting the right piece of iron I found several that were too brittle. So I threw them in the scrap pile. Those scraps are worth about a cent a pound: this carriage spring is very valuable."

He paused and his listener nodded. The blacksmith continued:

"God saves us for something more than to have a good time—that's the way I see it. We have a good time all right, for God's smile means heaven. But he wants us for service just as I want this piece of iron. Ever since I saw this I have been saying to him, 'Test me in any way you choose, Lord; only don't throw me in the scrap pile.'"—Sabbath Reading.

PALMETTO LETTER.

By Rev. S. A. Steel, D. D.

At our Preachers' Institute held a few days ago the question of the rural church came before us. Great attention is being paid in South Carolina to the improvement of the rural schools. In many communities in the country the public school building and the grounds around it is the most attractive place in the neighborhood, and the school is taking the place once held by the church as a community center. Now, important as the public school is, it is of vastly less importance than the church, and the only way to meet and counteract the danger of its supplanting the church is to improve the country church. The church in the country ought to be the most beautiful and attractive building that can be had. No matter how simple and inexpensive it may be, it ought to be kept in good repair, nicely painted, and the grounds about it beautiful with flowers and shrubbery. It should be a social center, and open to lectures, and whatever will promote the welfare of the community, that is not inconsistent with its character as a place of worship. It should not be made a playhouse, but ought to provide in some way for the entertainment of the young. There is great danger at this point, and I know the fallacy of attempting to socialize the Church at the expense of its spiritual influence. But unless it takes control of the social life of its young people, and provides for its healthy development, the devil will; and I still believe in a sure-enough devil. Every country church ought to have a hall connected with it, I mean located near to it and a part of it, where the people could meet for social purposes, and the young people especially could meet and have a good time, knowing that the Church sanctions and encourages their pleasures. To be everlastingly telling young people not to do this, and not to do that, while failing to provide suitable entertainment for them, is the surest way to make religion repulsive to them. God made them to be happy, and it is up to us to promote their happiness.

But, after all, Christianity is a city religion. A man living out on the prairie, fifty miles from anybody, may do as he pleases. If he wants his pigs in the front yard, and his cows fed at his back door, it is nobody's business but his own. But let him move to town, and live on a fifty-foot lot, with neighbors jam up against him, and the case is very different. Let him move into an apartment house, with one family beneath him and another above him, and all having the same rights, and the case becomes a very complicated one. Now, Christianity is intended to teach him how to live in these intimate relations with his fellow-men; and not a problem will, or can, arise which Christianity cannot solve. The simple principle of "do unto others as you would have others do unto you" will keep everything smooth and peaceful and happy. As a matter of fact, we keep things straight by the police, because we are more than half pagan. The necessity for police protection diminishes as Christianity prevails. I am talking about real Christianity, not that spurious type of it that consists in merely going to church on Sunday morning. Nobody can be a Christian on that amount of religion.

I am giving my people mid-week talks on The Acts of the Apostles. I find that Christianity was born in a city—Jerusalem; cradled in a city—Antioch; and that St. Paul, its great organizer and leader, was a city preacher. It was evidently his belief that Christianity could grapple with the forces of evil in the city, and conquer them, and subdue everything to obedience to Christ. He made the cities the centers of his evangelistic activity. Antioch, the Paris of the Empire; Ephesus, with its regnant worship of Diana; Thessalonica, then the emporium of all the country south of the Danube; Corinth, the San Francisco of that day; into all these centers of heathen darkness St. Paul plunged with the flaming ensign of the Cross and trusted to its mighty power to regenerate society. And unless Christianity can regenerate the city, it is a failure. Real Christianity can do it.

South Carolina is now under Prohibition. The law went into effect on Friday evening, and on Saturday evening one of our butchers took in $80 more than his ordinary receipts, which meant that the $80 that on previous Saturday evenings had gone to the saloon went in beefsteak to the working man's family. And yet there are people who doubt the benefits of prohibition. We have reason to believe that the law will be enforced in this State. There has been of late so much lawlessness that the people are becoming aroused to wipe out the disgrace it entails on the State by putting a stop to it.

Beware of giving an audience an opportunity to reply. Roosevelt was making a speech some time ago to an immense audience. As he scored the Republicans, the Democrats made the welkin ring with applause. Then he turned on the Democrats, and the Republicans had their chance to shout. Sitting right in front of the speaker was a brawny working-man. He arose and started to leave. Roosevelt stopped him. "Hold on, my friend," he said. "I suppose you are a Democrat." "I am," the man replied. "Well, before you leave, will you tell us why you are a Democrat?" The man answered: "My great-grandfather was a Democrat; my grandfather was a Democrat; my father was a Democrat, and I'm a Democrat." Roosevelt said: "That looks like a very good reason for your being a Democrat. But, now, let me ask you another question: Suppose your great-grandfather had been a fool, and your grandfather had been a fool, and your father had been a fool, what would you be?" The man answered, "I'd be a Bull Moose!"

A STATEMENT FROM THE EDUCATIONAL COMMISSION.

The Educational Commission held a meeting in Atlanta, Ga., on January 12 and 13 to deal with important matters concerning our two universities, the Southern Methodist University at Dallas, and Emory University at Atlanta.

The main business before the Commission on the first day of the session was the consideration of the Charter proposed for the Southern Methodist University and the confirmation and election of trustees under the provisions of the Charter.

The Charter has been framed with a view to making the University connectional and at the same time preserving the welfare of the institution as it is related to the Annual Conferences by which it was first founded and upon which it must rely for local management and support. This plan has been carefully worked out.

The Charter embodies "the purpose of forever securing the ownership and control of said institution in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South." The title to the property of the University has been vested in the Educational Commission in trust for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the administration of the institution is committed to a Board of Trustees consisting of twenty-five members, of whom not less than eleven shall be residents of the State of Texas, not less than four shall be residents of the State of Oklahoma, not less than three shall be residents of the State of Missouri, not less than two shall be residents of the State of Arkansas, one shall be a resident of the State of Louisiana, and one shall be a resident of the New Mexico Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Three of the Trustees are to be elected by the General Conference and they shall be residents of the territory west of the Mississippi River, "provided that the Educational Commission shall elect the three trustees for the General Conference to serve as such until the adjournment of the next General Conference." The other trustees are to be chosen by the North Texas Conference, the Northwest Texas Conference, the Central Texas Conference, the Texas Conference, the West Texas Conference, the East Oklahoma Conference, the West Oklahoma Conference, the German Mission Conference, the New Mexico Conference, the Missouri Conference, the Southwest Missouri Conference, the St. Louis Conference, the Little Rock Conference, the North Arkansas Conference, and the Louisiana Conference—the first seven Conferences named electing two each, and the last eight named electing one each.

By this means it was designed to secure the wisdom of the Annual Conferences in the choice of trustees, and a distribution wide enough to represent well the territory of the Church west of the Mississippi River, while retaining a sufficient number of trustees near enough to the seat of the University to secure easily and at least expense a quorum for the transaction of business at all times, and to preserve local interest in the institution.

The Charter further provides that "no trustee shall be qualified to sit, serve, or act, as such, until he shall have been confirmed by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, or by some other agency appointed and authorized to confirm or reject trustees," and it provides that "the Educational Commission shall act as such agency until the next meeting of the General Conference," in 1918.

It will be noted that while all but three of the trustees are chosen by Annual Conferences, the trustees chosen by them are not so much representatives of these Conferences as they are representatives of the whole Church selected from members of the Church resident within certain areas. Hereby it was hoped that the best possible representation would be obtained and the watchful interest of the Annual Conferences be secured.

But it was provided that "if for any reason any one or more of the Annual Conferences refused or neglected to elect trustees, then the General Conference should elect trustees" from members resident within the territorial limits of the Annual Conference failing to elect, to serve until such Annual Conference exercises its right to elect trustees.

"After the meeting of the next General Conference, vacancies shall be filled as the General Conference may provide."

Thus the Southern Methodist University has been made connectional with reference to both its ownership and government without violently rupturing the ties of affection and interest with which it came into existence.

The Educational Commission confirmed all the trustees designated by the Annual Conferences and chose Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon, Judge Joseph R. Cockrell, and Rev. William D. Bradfield as trustees for the General Conference.

The Commission regretted that the Annual Conferences in Arkansas did not choose trustees from that territory, and in obedience to the Charter chose Rev. J. K. Farris of the North Arkansas Conference and Rev. J. L. Cannon of the Little Rock Conference as trustees from that great State, feeling sure that these worthy brethren will be entirely acceptable to the Methodist people of Arkansas and to the entire connection. The Missouri Conference also failed to name a trustee, and the Commission chose Rev. C. C. Grimes, who will render the most efficient service, we doubt not.

The Commission was gratified at the reports presented to us concerning the opening of Southern Methodist University, and of the progress made in equipping and endowing the institution. The enrollment of more than 600 students the first session is regarded as a remarkable record, and one in which the entire Church will take pride.

However, a large part of the task of building this institution remains to be accomplished. This is particularly true as regards the endowment. Much of the amount credited to this fund as yet is not productive. And even if it were all productive, the necessity would remain for largely increasing the endowment and resources of the University.

We heartily approve of the plans formulated by certain of the Texas Conferences, at their last sessions, for the undertaking of the endowment of chairs in the theological department. The plans proposed seem to be very feasible and they have the sympathetic indorsement of the Commission.

Our University for the territory west of the Mississippi should have additional endowment of not less than $500,000, and this amount should be secured without delay.

The affairs of Emory University, our connectional institution for the region east of the Mississippi River, were found to be in excellent condition.

In the three departments of the University now in operation, namely, the School of Liberal Arts, the School of Theology, and the School of Medicine, are enrolled considerably more than six hundred students.

On the magnificent campus in the Druid Hills Park, Atlanta, four new buildings are in process of erection. The work of beautifying the grounds is proceeding rapidly.

It is expected that the new buildings will be ready for use by the opening of the fall term in September, 1916, when it is proposed to open other departments of the University, including "The L. Q. C. Lamar School of Law," provided all is ready to open these departments fully equipped to do the very best work. It is the fixed policy of the University not to undertake any work which it is not prepared to do well.

The Educational Commission congratulates the Church upon the fact that we have now well under way two universities, the assets of which aggregate nearly $5,000,000, and in which more than 1200 students are enrolled. And these universities are absolutely in the ownership and control of our Church. This is a good beginning, but it is no more than a beginning.

It will not be expected by reasonable people that the work of the Commission should be completed in all its details in two brief years; but much has been accomplished for which all our people may well rejoice. Much more will be achieved in the near future, and the Commission hopes to report to the General Conference of 1918 two universities so nearly perfect in organization that few, if any, material changes in their organization will be found necessary.

The Commission desires the cordial co-operation of the entire Church in carrying forward the important work with which it was charged by the last General Conference. Our great Church, with a membership of more than 2,000,000, should have, and must have, at least two universities of the highest character. No slightest heed should be paid to any who decry universities owned and controlled by religious denominations, and who assert that Churches are incapable of founding and directing such institutions. The Roman Catholic Church has its universities; and there are universities owned and controlled by States. What disability inheres in a Protestant Church for such work, while the Roman Catholic Church and American commonwealths are admitted to be capable of doing it?

Our Church can have, and we believe it will have, two universities that will take rank with the best in our country. To this end the Educational Commission invokes the active support and generous assistance of all our people.

Signed on behalf of the Educational Commission. WARREN A. CANDLER, Chairman.

NECESSITIES OF LIFE.

Interest, sympathy, and friendship must be reckoned among the necessities of life. The minds and hearts of the world's unfortunates have their hungers and thirsts, and these cannot be satisfied by impersonal and professional care for their bodies.—Rev. Matt. S. Hughes, D. D.

"HERNANDO DE SOTO"—THE GREAT AMERICAN EPIC.

Have you read this masterful poem by the late Judge Walter Malone, of Memphis, Tenn.? If not, you should do so at your earliest opportunity. Judge Malone was born at Capleville, Tenn.; was educated at the University of Mississippi, at Oxford, and lived nearly the whole of his life at Memphis. The consensus of opinion is that Judge Malone is destined to take rank among the Nation's foremost poets. He has published several volumes of poetry that have won high praise from competent literary critics, but it is generally conceded that "Hernando De Soto," upon which he wrought for seven years, is his greatest production. This superb volume was issued by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York and London; it is beautifully printed and bound and embraces 631 pages. We give below a few comments upon this great work:

Comments.

From
ALFRED AUSTIN
Former Poet Laureate of England

"I find in your verse deference to the best traditions of English poetry, and a rare power of continuous yet never tiresome narrative."

From
JESSIE B. RITTENHOUSE

"You have done a remarkable piece of work. I marvel at the way you have accomplished it."

From
THE BROOKLYN EAGLE
New York

"Mr. Malone's subject was sublime. His treatment of the subject is not merely adequate. It is calculated to stir the admiration of all lovers of genuine poesy. He has constructed an epic that ought to live and will live almost alone in the literature of a sternly material civilization such as we see around us just now in America.

"Walter Malone has made all of us his debtor in his 'Hernando De Soto.'"

From
THE MONTROSE STANDARD AND ANGUS AND MEARNS REGISTER
Scotland

"Mr. Malone has written a great poem. He has the narrative power for his story, always holds us and never palls. The poem is well entitled to be called the epic of America. Not only in narrative, not only in the grander movements which we associate with epic poetry has Mr. Malone achieved much, for his lyric gift is quite undeniable. A beautiful instance is the last song of Israel, of which we quote a verse or two. * * *

"We are of the opinion that Mr. Malone was amply justified in publishing such a poem at this time as 'Hernando De Soto.' He has certainly written one of the outstanding works in American poetry. It is a work which no lover of great literature can afford to pass."

From
THE TIMES
Los Angeles, California

"However, we think it is no exaggeration—not in the least wild or extravagant—to say that in American literature there is no poem that can be favorably compared with 'Hernando De Soto.'

"'Hernando De Soto' is a work that will not be taken up and laid aside easily. But its pleasant historical appeal, and its romantic setting, immediately make an impression. It is a memorable work which will live in the world of judicious letters."

On the campus of Emory University, Atlanta, two of the university buildings are in course of construction. The principal building is the one which will combine three in one structure—the main building in the center, flanked by the School of Theology on the left and the School of Law on the right. Work is going forward on this building and on one other included in the university plan of buildings. It is expected that this largest structure—which will include the buildings of the several departments named—and, in addition, two dormitories, will be ready for use by the opening of the fall term of 1916.

A GIFT TO EMORY UNIVERSITY.

Rev. N. G. Augustus, of Prescott, Ark., has presented to the theological library of Emory University an autograph letter of Adam Clarke addressed to John Emory, Beverly Waugh, Nathan Bangs, F. Hall, and George Sachley in response to an invitation to Dr. Clarke to visit America. The letter is dated February 6, 1832, and is in an excellent state of preservation. It consists of four closely written pages, in which are found many striking observations and earnest exhortations. Among other things, Dr. Clarke said: "As I believe your nation to be destined to be the mightiest and happiest nation on the globe, so I believe your Church is likely to become the most extensive and pure. As a Church, abide in the apostolic doctrine and fellwoship." With reference to the nation, Dr. Clarke exhorted to this effect: "Abhor all offensive wars, never provoke even the puniest State, and never strike the first blow. Encourage agriculture and friendly traffic, glorify the sciences and arts, and let learning have its proper place. If possible, live in peace with all nations." This interesting letter will be added to the increasingly valuable collection of autograph letters and manuscripts with which the School of Theology is enriched.

HAND BOOK OF ALL DENOMINATIONS.

Here it is, busy pastors! Just the thing you need! Doctrines and discipline principles and practices, facts and figures, of all religious denominations in the United States, in a most convenient volume. Mr. Phelan, the compiler, has done his work well. The diction is clear and concise, and the figures and statistics are accurate and up to date. In these times, when every day brings forth a new cult, creed, ism, ology, osity, sect or schism, one has much to do to keep posted on the "new varieties." It stretches one's imagination until it almost cracks to believe that the last twenty-five years have given birth to 49 new "cults" or "sects" in the United States, but that is the exact truth of the matter. Not every one knows, until he peruses Mr. Phelan's book, that there are 7 divisions of the Adventists, 14 of the Baptists, 21 of the Lutherans, and 4 divisions of the Catholics, etc.

One of the chief values of the book is to inform the laymen of the dangerous and insidious heresies that stalk abroad to-day in our land. For instance, he shows that "Russellism" goes under the misleading and innocent names of "Millennial Dawn," "Studies in the Scriptures," "International Bible Students' League," and "Bible House and Tract Society." The article on "Mormonism" is about the best we have seen on that dangerous and disgraceful denomination. What he has to say about the people called "Methodists" is, for the most part, accurate and discriminating, though his statistics are for 1914. He gives the Louisiana Conference, M. E. Church, South, 36,450 members and the total Methodists in the United States (all branches) as 7,328,829. And the total membership of Methodists in the world is given as 9,223,385.

The book needs no higher commendation than the words of the lamented Dr. Gross Alexander, who said: "Mr. Phelan's book gives a succinct account of the origin, the growth, and the distinctive doctrines and polity, as well as a statement of the present status and strength of each of the numerous and various sects or denominations of Christendom to-day. This is done in alphabetical order, making it easy of reference. The book is so serviceable and so convenient and so informing that I have already decided to use it as a text-book in my class in Church history in the Southern Methodist University at Dallas."

This review was not written at the suggestion of the publishers. I am neither a "B. A.," "Book Agent," nor a "B. A.," "Bachelor of Arts"—so I disclaim any motive whatsoever in this notice other than to merely call the attention of fellow pastors and lay brethren to a useful little volume. The book can be had from your Publishing House, Smith & Lamar, for the sum of 75 cents.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. B. P. Fullilove (Eliza J. McWhorter) was born in Attalla County, Miss., April 11, 1858. At the age of 12, under the ministry of Rev. J. D. Newsom, she professed faith in Christ and joined the Church. On Dec. 11, 1880, she was married to Rev. B Pope Fullilove, who had joined the Church with her when they were children. Five children blessed the union of this Christain pair, the only boy dying in infancy. The girls all married in North Mississippi, and are prosperous and happy in their own homes. All are active Christians and loyal Methodists.

During thirty-five years—thirty in the itinerant ministry—Brother Fullilove and his noble wife walked side by side, accomplishing great good in some of the most difficult fields. The wife was "a crown to her husband." Inspired by her faith and energy and loyalty, work was done that might not have been done without her. The qualities of gentleness, simplicity and firmness were beautifully blended in this good woman's character. In all relations, she bore them with becoming grace. As daughter, sister, wife and mother, she wove the golden threads of her own pure nature into the lives of others, and gave them visions of higher things.

Her constancy as a friend, her devotion to Christian duty, and her patience in affliction unite to declare that the life she lived was worth the price she paid in toil and sacrifice.

Of the grief that enshadows the home, I may not speak; but of the peace and hope that must be theirs, because of the peace and hope that were hers in life and death, and of the memory that will linger in their hearts always, because of her love, and thought, and care—I make mention, that others may follow her example. God's best gift is Jesus Christ: next to that is a Christian mother.

On the night of Dec. 19, 1915, in the parsonage at Rienzi, where her husband is pastor, Sister Fullilove breathed her last, after weeks of suffering. We buried her body, next day, in the local cemetery; and yet "the light shines out of the darkness." "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord!" Amen. J. E. CUNNINGHAM.

DEATH OF H. D. CHANEY.

Our friend is dead. Little children with sad hearts cease their play; women weep, and men stand with bowed heads.

The brave, kindly heart that was full of love for all mankind is stilled forever in the silent embrace of the grave. The kindly smile, the warm, generous greeting, the loyal friend, loving husband, father and brother will be seen and known no more among us. But of such men were the Christian martyrs, and to them there is no death. Theirs is but a passing to realms beyond; their lives are lived again and again in those who knew them best. Theirs is the inspiration that impresses the seal of a grand reality upon the yearning for immortality and leads us on to higher and nobler things and leaves earth better for their having lived among men.

Brave and Christian spirit, may thine eternal sleep be as peaceful and quiet as thine own life was pure and unafraid.

"God be with you till we meet again!"

FAITH.

By Mary Barrow Linfield.

The winds of night blow cool from out the dim
And fragrant south. A starless sky hangs low
Above the darkness of the sea, the rim
Between too faint for human eye. The flow
Of little waves against the hidden bar
Comes softly on the ear. Far out the sea
Upon its bosom bears one ruddy star:
A vessel passes there, unknown to me
Her captain and her goal. Yet sure I know
There is a guide and safely through the dark
She yet will reach her port. And it is so
With my own doubting soul, a frail bark
Whose unseen Pilot, though she seems to roam
Uncertain from her course, will bring her home.

BILLY SUNDAY ON PREACHERS' SALARIES.

John T. Smith, editor of the publication, "Veteran Ministers," received the following from Rev. Billy Sunday, which is worthy of attention:

"The penurious salaries which this country doles out to its ministers and to its school teachers constitutes a disgrace, in my mind, and a blot upon its escutcheon. Nothing is much more vital to the moral welfare of the nation than these two professions. Almost invariably these rank the strongest, the most self-sacrificing, the truest citizenship of any community. How long could any section of the country continue as a desirable place in which to live were it not for the churches and the schools? The man who wears himself out day by day in service for others should not be compelled to worry about how he will meet the needs of the body in old age. If a minister has worn himself out for the Church, it is the basest ingratitude for the Church not to care for him in his declining years. The school teacher who has given the best years of his life for the sake of the coming generation should not be allowed to go hungry and poorly clothed when the years of his usefulness have ended. Elders and deacons and church officials who carp at decent salaries paid to ministers of the gospel never are heard to question the amount of money a lawyer or a doctor or any other professional man may receive for his services. It is radically wrong when a prize fighter in fifteen minutes can earn more than a country parson does in fifteen years. A penny expended for the support of aged ministers and teachers is a penny expressing a nation's gratitude to the most faithful of its servants and the truest of its citizens."

THE GROWTH OF PROHIBITION.

By Hon. W. J. Bryan.

And now a word in politics. I am a Democrat. I began making Democratic speeches thirty-five years ago and have been in every congressional campaign since, except the campaign of 1898, when I was in the army. I have been on the firing line all these years—the only peace I have had was when I was a soldier. I have been in national politics for twenty-five years and it is now nineteen years since I commenced to run for President. I have been interested in reforms and have rejoiced to see some reforms successful, but it has taken a long time. It took twenty-one years to secure the popular election of United States senators; it took nearly eighteen years to secure an income tax amendment to the Constitution, and the fight for the initiative and referendum has been going on nearly that long. Events are moving more rapidly now, but I have never known any reform to grow as fast in five years as prohibition has grown during the last five years, and it has grown more rapidly in the last year than in the four years preceding. We now have nineteen dry States, and ten of them have gone dry within the last eighteen months.

No Democrat need apologize for being in favor of prohibition. Of the nineteen prohibition States ten of them go Democratic at every election, and other Democratic States will soon be added to the list. Republicans used to make fun of us Democrats; they used to say that they could tell a Democrat by the color of his nose or by the wobble of his walk. They can not make fun of us now. The Democratic States are leading in the fight, and the Republicans must help to make Ohio dry, if they want to be in the same class with the democrats. It will be a benefit to both parties to get rid of the liquor element which owes allegiance to no party, and is interested in no principles of government. It is solely concerned with the money to be derived from the sale of liquor. The time has come to rid all the parties of the domination of this element which disgraces the party while it controls it, and betrays it if its control is resisted.

THE POWER OF PREACHING.

Much is said about the secret of power. This implies that the source of power is always a secret, when indeed it is due to some definitely known source. We hear much about the secret of power with certain eminent preachers. Recently, much inquiry and speculation has been indulged in connection with the secret of power in Mr. Sunday. The following statements made in The Continent by Mr. Albert L. Berry, of Chicago, show a fine and keen and true sense of the power of preaching as manifested in any preacher, as well as in Billy Sunday, to whom special reference is made:

"I have read with much interest the editorial in a recent contemporary, entitled 'Study of Sunday for Pastors,' and though I am not an editor, a professor, or a minister, I am convinced that the source of Mr. Sunday's success is not only 'the load of steam he carries—his being identified with hustlers—his concentration or his going straight for men,' but that Mr. Sunday presents something that is positive, something that grips men. The world longs for precision, something that affirms. Men are weary of vagueness, hazy, indefinite things. Men want to get hold of the realities of life with a firmer grasp, they want to stand on a rock and not on the shifting, changing, swaying seaweed of German materialism.

"The steam in a man will vanish into vapor, the hustlers will tire, and the man who is full of ginger will only sputter, unless there is something more than these, unless there is a foundation on which men can build. The power, the vital force that makes any ministry successful, that brings men to a realization of their sins, and their responsibility to God, comes not from the steam of the speaker, but from one source alone, and that source is the Bible. This is the underlying source of Mr. Sunday's success.

"The Bible itself, not filtered through the liberalized minds of college professors, or adulterated with skepticism, not swinging with every change of the weathercock of higher criticism and lower faith, not dragging one's anchor on the shoals and catching only on the weirs of doubt, but firmly anchored—it is not a broader religion that men want; it is a deeper religion.

"Mr. Sunday has a permanent foundation on which his work stands. He convinces men that he sincerely believes in that foundation, and that his work rests on the Word of God. Then, with all his force, he presents his message with such an earnestness, zeal and conviction that men realize the truth of his message."—The Presbyterian.

TO NORTH MISSISSIPPI PASTORS.

Dear Brethren: The Conference Committee on Evangelism takes this method of calling your attention to our own evangelists—Rev. J. A. Bowen, Tupelo, Miss., and Rev. J. H. Bell, Columbus, Miss. We have employed these men for this work because we believe they are worthy and capable men, and because we need to accentuate evangelism more than has been done heretofore.

We hope that in making plans for your work you will correspond with them, and make the largest use of them possible. They are ours to serve you.

Cordially yours,

W. S. LAGRONE, Chairman.

Drew, Miss., Jan. 10, 1916.

A LOVED ONE TAKEN.

Dear Brother Meek: On Monday afternoon, January 10, at Lewisburg, Tenn., our daughter, Blanche Galloway Wyatt Phifer, passed on to the better land. She was born at Verona, Miss., July 25, 1886. She graduated at Grenada College in 1904. She was married to Rev. W. E. Phifer, a Presbyterian minister, on June 11, 1908. It is not too much for me to say that she was a dutiful, sweet daughter, a loving sister, a true friend, a faithful, helpful wife, and a painstaking, devoted mother. She was truly a strong, well-poised woman. We miss her; we loved her and she loved us. She sang well in this world, and now we feel confident that her lovely voice is filling a place in the heavenly choir. We gently laid her to rest on Tuesday afternoon, after fitting services at the church, amidst many weeping friends who testified to her useful life and beautiful character. We felt that the profusion of exquisite flowers betokened a fadeless crown for her. Dear Blanche! affectionate Blanche! her precious, stainless memory will inspire and encourage us, and our purpose is fixed to go to her.

Booneville, Miss. J. M. WYATT.

We are deeply grieved to learn of this sorrow that has come to Brother Wyatt and his family. They will have the sympathy and prayers of a host of friends in their sore bereavement. May the Heavenly Father bless and keep them until they shall find themselves reunited with all the loved ones gone before in the glorious City where death can never come!

SECRET OF THE LARGER LIFE.

No ship can tempt the sea and learn its glory so long as she goes moored by any rope, however long, by which she means to be drawn back again if the sea grows too rough. The soul that trifles and toys with self-sacrifice never can get its true joy and power. Only the soul that with an overwhelming impulse and a perfect trust gives itself up forever to the life of other men, finds the delight and peace which such complete self-surrender has to give.—Phillips Brooks.

WHAT INSPIRED HIM.

One of Haydn's friends asked how it happened that his church music was always of an animated, cheerful, and even festive quality. The great composer replied: "I cannot make it otherwise. I write according to the thoughts I feel. When I think upon God, my heart is so full of joy that notes dance and leap, as it were, from my pen; and since God has given me a cheerful heart, it will be easily forgiven me that I serve him with a cheerful spirit."—The Presbyterian.

SOME STRANGE VARIETIES.

The Pittsburgh (Pa.) Gazette Times says: "Two North Carolinians were shot and slashed fatally in endeavoring to decide which was to teach a Sunday school class. It would be interesting to know what they proposed to teach the class. So it would: There are many varieties of Bible instructors in this day.

A PROMISING EVANGELIST.

Rev. J. H. Bell, of Columbus, Miss., whose picture appears below, is one of the Conference evangelists of the North Mississippi Conference. He is zealous and consecrated, and possesses unusual gifts as a revivalist. Within recent years he has conducted successful evangelistic campaigns in a number of important places in North Mississippi, including Charleston, Louisville, and Lexington.

Rev. J. W. Bell, presiding elder of the Aberdeen District, wrote concerning him just after he had been with him in a series of revival services about four years ago: "Brother Bell is a strong preacher and eminently evangelical. I have not in twenty years found better help in a meeting."

When he wrought at Lexington, Rev. T. H. Lipscomb of Starkville, in a note to the Advocate, said: "He is gifted as an evangelist and has a way of getting at the hearts of the people which is quite extraordinary. Our people were pleased with him and were greatly blessed in the services."

Brother Bell has just closed a remarkably successful meeting at Blue Mountain, Miss., in which there were more than 80 conversions and one young man was called to preach. Both the Mississippi Heights Academy and Blue Mountain Female College were much benefited spiritually by the services. An account of this gracious awakening, from the pen of the pastor, Rev. R. P. Neblett, appears elsewhere in this issue of the Advocate.

In placing Brother Bell in the field as an evangelist, the Conference made no provision for his support; he is, therefore, wholly dependent upon the offerings made in his meetings for a living. So, let the brethren see that he is kept busy, and that he is not permitted to suffer financially because of his willingness to take up this needed and difficult work. It is all a notion that a good revival cannot be held during the winter season, and it is high time that our people were beginning to learn better. Death and the devil are then at work—why, then, should not the ministers of Christ be at the task of saving souls? Brother Bell is making up his slate now; so if you feel that you will need him, you had better write him at once. If you defer until later, he may not be able to come to you.

MOORHEAD FIRST.

Four years ago I received from Moorhead, Miss., seven names for honorary membership in the Ministers' Relief Association of the North Mississippi Conference. Since then the notices of assessments have been sent to the elect women and men whose names were sent in to me. Each time a post-office money order for the list, with properly listed credits, has been sent to the Treasurer by Miss Frances A. Gardner, of that community, who is one of the seven. Not one of these names has ever been lost.

I think that Moorhead is entitled to be called the First Honorary Auxiliary of our Ministers' Relief Association. It ought to be the first of many. This could be done in any organized community in the Conference. JOHN PARK, Treasurer.

THE BOY WHO FORGETS.

I love him, the boy who forgets!
Does it seem such a queer thing to say?
Can't help it; he's one of my pets;
Delightful at work or at play.
I'd trust him with all that I own,
And know neither worries nor frets;
But the secret of this lies alone
In the things that the laddie forgets.

He always forgets to pay back
The boy who has done him an ill;
Forgets that a grudge he owes Jack,
And smiles at him pleasantly still.
He always forgets 'tis his turn
To choose what the others shall play;
Forgets about others to learn
The gossipy things that "they say."

He forgets to look sulky and cross
When things are not going his way;
Forgets some one's gain in his loss;
Forgets, in his work time, his play.
So this is why I take his part;
Why I say he is one of my pets;
I repeat it, with all my heart,
I love him for what he forgets!

"WEE BOBBY."

More than a hundred years ago in a little church in sea-buffeted Haddingtonshire, Scotland, the pastor and his session were meeting. It was a heavy, oppressive gathering. The senior elder said: "Pastor, we all love you, and you know it, but do you not think you had better resign? There has not been one convert this year." They did not ask him to resign—they do not do such things in Scotland for anything except a crime; and that is rarely heard of indeed. They believe in God's call, and that when an incumbent's work is done God will open the way for a change, so they merely asked for his view on the matter.

"Brethren," said he, "it has indeed been a dull year, sadly dull to me. Yet I mind that one did come, wee Bobby, but I suppose he is so wee he does na' count."

Shortly afterwards, however, "wee Bobby" came to the minister and said, "Pastor, do you think that I could ever learn to preach? I feel something within calling me, and it would be the happiness of my life could I lead people to Christ."

"Well, Bobby, you might. Who knows? You might try!" And Bobby did try.

In 1814, at nineteen years of age, "Bobby" offered himself to the London Society as a missionary, and was sent to South Africa two years after Judson had been sent to Burma.

"Wee Bobby" died in 1883, at eighty-eight years of age, having returned to England a few years previously. He reached the homeland as Rev. Robert Moffat, D. D., the renowned missionary to Bechuanaland, the father-in-law of David Livingstone, and the man who had largely given direction to Livingston's life-work. The Queen of England arose in his presence. Parliament stood uncovered in respect as he entered their hall, and all the nation seemed to be singing the great hymn, "From Greenland's Icy Mountains."

The nobles of the land delighted to do him honor and the government awarded him a grand testimonial. The humble old minister who had but one convert in the year, and he too "wee" to count, had been dead and forgotten for many years when the world rang with the ovation to the aged missionary, but the year in which "Bobby" Moffat was converted marked the greatest work of that minister's life, and few have ever measured up to it.

Let no pastor grow discouraged and give up because God does not send him the numbers of converts that he longs for.

THE FREE LUNCH COUNTER.

The little girl with crooked legs had sat for hours on the brown front porch.

Mrs. Mullens, the housekeeper, was in the kitchen making doughnuts. Mr. Preston, the little girl's father, was in the studio across the road, painting pictures. Consequently it was deadly dull.

She had hoped Caroline and Avery Ames would come to play that afternoon. She had watched and watched the turn for sight of them, until, all weary with disappointment, she had fallen asleep.

Not five minutes later Caroline and Avery came skipping toward the house. They saw Ruth was sleeping, so, lowering their voices, they went on their toes to the back door.

"Mrs. Mullens," Avery shaded his eyes and called through the screen, "we've a surprise for Ruth, and may we borrow the ladder from the woodshed while we fix it?"

"We have to climb into the maple tree to do it," added Caroline.

"Bless you, take anything if it's going to make the poor child happy.

For twenty minutes they were busy. Then Avery climbed down the ladder, and had to admire their work—a pan heaped with suet, seeds and crumbs, fastened by wires between the big maple and the porch.

Some minutes ticked away. On a branch a chickadee lighted. He cocked an eye at the lunch. Then he flew down, perched on the tin's edge, and pecked at the mound.

"He likes it," squealed Caroline.

At the sound of voices pop went Ruth's eyelids! "Oh!" she cried, spying the pan almost the first thing, "what is that?"

"It's a s'prise." Caroline clapped her hands. "A free lunch counter for the birds."

"And when it's empty you can draw it in and fill it up again. See?" said Avery, pulling the tray toward the railing.

"One came while you were asleep."

"Look, there he is again!"

Wasn't Ruth delighted!

As the children were about to leave late in the afternoon they heard a pattering of tiny, nervous feet over their heads. They scarcely dared to take a breath. Suddenly came a quick spring, a flash of reddish brown, and a squirrel had leaped from the porch roof plump on to the lunch counter.

The little girl with the crooked legs had a different time after that. Even when her father disappeared in the big studio to paint she sat on the porch, bird book in lap, and waited for the feathered folk.

Caroline and Avery had done something to make their little lame friend happy, yet here they were getting a whole lot of pleasure out of it themselves! (That's the queer thing about kindnesses.)

Whenever they stopped Ruth had some fresh news to tell them about the birds. No two were alike. The chickadee was friendly, the jay quarrelsome. The woodpecker drilled himself a snug hollow in a dead tree. The phoebe built her nest under an old bridge. The high-hole considered ants a feast. The cedar wax wing doted on cherries.

Cold weather came. Caroline and Avery returned to their Boston home, and the little girl with crooked legs could sit no longer on the brown porch. But indoors behind the sunny bay window she watched the birds that came every day to her lunch counter, and a hundred miles away in the city Caroline and Avery watched for the postman who brought letters that told about the chickadees, the nuthatches, and the downy woodpeckers that were making Ruth's winter so happy.

THE NEW CHURCH OPENED.

Dear Doctor York: Last Sunday was a great day for our people here at Philadelphia, Miss. We held the first service in our new church, and notwithstanding the bad weather (cold and rain—the house was well filled. The attendance at Sunday school was larger than at any time during the past year. You could not find a happier man than was our [illegible] superintendent, Brother G. W. Vass.

Our church, though a frame building, is quite an imposing structure and will meet the demand for many years to come. It cost, complete, about $5000.

Now that our people are once more at home, I sincerely hope and believe the church will take on new life and recover lost ground. It has been nearly two years since our house of worship was burned and it has been difficult to properly carry on our work without a church. I wish I could get the Advocate to every home. Come to see us, Doctor. Yours fraternally,

IAS. G. GALLOWAY.

To fret because it's little."

RUSSELLISM ON THE WANE.

"Pastor" Russell has attracted much attention in various ways within the past few years, but apparently the popularity of his propaganda is now decidedly on the wane, and he is beginning to tread the path to obscurity that has been trodden by so many fakirs before him. Discussing the career of this notorious faddist in a recent issue, The Presbyterian (Philadelphia) says:

"Pastor Russell attained the height of his influence in 1914, when his followers seemed to be under the impression that the world was coming to an end, and Russell was to be translated or exalted to great power. All his predictions have failed, and desertions are following, with a falling off of believers. It is reported that their headquarters in Brooklyn have been reduced. Whereas, at one time three houses were occupied, they are now reduced to one. The moving picture show of the Creation has disappeared from most of the cities. The advertisements are growing less, and so are the lawsuits. In all ways the movement seems to have exhausted itself, and the people are now realizing the delusion and disappointment. The matter having thus collapsed in the cities, it has betaken itself to the country, and the people in the rural districts need to be on their guard. If they meet it promptly, like an infection, they can keep it out; but if it gets in, it seems to run its course. But it is weakened; its attacks cannot be so strong, and the hard-headed farmers will resist it."

A LESSON TAUGHT BY THE GREAT WAR.

Among the industries in the United States that are being made to suffer by the European war must be included the newspaper business. Photo-engraving now constitutes a practically indispensable feature of a modern journal, and the chemicals used in preparing the cuts and plates for pictures, being chiefly imported from foreign countries, are said to show advances in prices ranging from 20 to 1295 per cent. It is, furthermore, stated that the chemicals used in bleaching paper are not now forthcoming, and that, as the supply of white paper in the hands of dealers is quite limited, it is entirely within the range of possibility that our various kinds of publications will soon have to commence using unbleached paper, which will make them much more unattractive in appearance. If the existing conditions should develop such a necessity it will, of course, affect religious, as well as secular periodicals.

One of the most outstanding lessons taught by the present colossal conflict in the Old World is that no nation now lives to itself. The different peoples of the earth were never so close together and so mutually dependent upon one another as they are to-day. Indeed, so far as the great Powers are concerned it may now truthfully be said that when one suffers, they all suffer; and that the prosperity of one tends to promote the prosperity of the others. This multiplying and strengthening of reciprocal interests among the nations is one of the influences that should work mightily for the establishment and maintenance of a world peace in the unfolding future.

WELL WORTH A CAREFUL READING.

We are carrying in this issue of the Advocate a statement from our Educational Commission, which we hope none of our readers will overlook. Especially would we have them to note what is said concerning the manner of constituting the trustees of the Southern Methodist University, at Dallas, Texas. Under the Charter of that institution, the Annual Conferences West of the Mississippi River, for which the institution is specially to be maintained, are allowed to co-operate in selecting the trustees who are to have the oversight of the University, with the exception of three, who are to be chosen alone by the General Conference—those selected by the Annual Conferences referred to cannot, however, enter upon their duties as trustees until they have been confirmed by the General Conference, or some other body which it has authorized to act for it. And let it be observed that these men, though thus chosen, are the representatives, the agents, of the whole Church, which in every instance, through the General Conference (or some creature of it, to which that power has been temporarily delegated) must put its stamp of approval upon them.

This plan impresses us as an admirable one in every respect. It adequately safeguards the interests of the Church as a whole, while consulting, in a commendable spirit of democracy, the Conferences which are nearest the University, and from which naturally must come its largest patronage and support. It scarcely needs to be said that the ownership and control of both our new Universities by the Church have been made so clear and so secure that its relation to them in this respect can never in the future be questioned.

This illuminating statement by the Educational Commission concerning the plan which it has adopted for the government of our University west of the Mississippi shows how little justification there has been for the carping criticism of its labors that has come from certain quarters. But the Church is beginning to get her eyes opened to some things that have been taking place since the last General Conference and the spirit which has prompted them, and she may be fully trusted to take care of the situation.

THE SOUTH'S GREATEST HOSPITAL.

The Treasurer of the New Orleans Charity Hospital submitted his report to the Board of Administrators of that institution last week. The receipts for the year 1915 amounted to $366,221.19, a gain over the receipts last year of $33,059.81. The disbursements for the operation of the hospital footed up the sum of $331,612.99.

This is far and away the largest hospital in the South. Its annual dairy bill alone amounts to $18,000 or $20,000, and it takes from $8000 to $10,000 every year to pay for the tetanus serum administered. The patients treated reach up into the tens of thousands. To give some idea of the magnitude of the work of this institution, it may be stated that the report of the Trustees of the much-talked-of Barnes Hospital of St. Louis, a plant valued at $2,000,000, published in the St Louis Christian Advocate of January 19, showed its receipts to be $64,439, and its expenditures $108,356, which amounts are not one-third of the sums received and expended by the New Orleans Charity Hospital.

A BACKWARD TREND.

Monroe N. Work, head of the Department of Records and Research of Tuskeegee Institute, in his annual report shows that during the year 1915 there occurred sixty-nine lynchings.

Of those lynched, fifty-five were negroes and fourteen whites. This is six more negroes and eleven more whites than were put to death by mobs in 1914, when the record was forty-nine negroes and three whites. Included in the record are three women. In at least four instances it later developed that the persons put to death were innocent of the offences charged.

Eighteen, or more than one-fourth of the total lynchings, occurred in the State of Georgia.

Only eleven, ten negroes and one white, or fifteen per cent of the total were charged with criminal assault.

The full record of lynchings by States is as follows: Alabama, nine; Arkansas, five; Florida, five; Georgia, eighteen; Illinois, one; Kentucky, five; Louisiana, two; Mississippi, nine; Missouri, two; Ohio, one; Oklahoma, three; South Carolina, one; Tennessee, two; Texas, five; Virginia, one.

This list may be subject to one correction, however, since Mr. Alexander Forward, the Secretary of Governor Stuart of Virginia, has denied through the press that any lynching took place in that commonwealth during the past year.

The fact that sixty-nine (or 68) persons were lawlessly put to death in the United States within the last twelve months should be a humiliation to our people. And especially is it to be regretted that so large a number of these murders—for that is in reality what they are—took place in the South. Such outrages are wholly beyond the pale of legitimate defense, and we should leave nothing in our power undone to put a stop to them. This imperative problem is a standing challenge to the Christian statesmanship and citizenship of our country.

A NEW VERSION.

The Commoner, the organ of the Honorable W. J. Bryan, the great apostle of pacifism, got off in a late issue the following interesting bit of satire:

"When the Navy League, the Security League, and the Defense League get out their new book of censored Sunday school songs, a familiar stanza will be found to read:

"'I want to be a soldier,
And with the soldiers stand;
Ammunition in my pocket,
And a musket in my hand.'"

We are not disposed to stand with Mr. Bryan in his sweeping opposition to the issue of "preparedness" now to the front in American politics; but we regard this as a fine illustration of what may be expected to happen when secularists are allowed to give direction to the work or worship of the Chureb. One of the strange things of the times is that the followers of Christ should show such a disposition to seek counsel of men who have little of the spirit of the Master simply because they happen to hold high official place in the State or National Government. A man may be an efficient Governor or President, and yet know very little about what methods are best calculated to promote the spiritual kingdom of our Lord. For our part, we had rather have the advice of any consecrated, praying band of men or women concerning the work of the Church than that of any official celebrity on the globe who is a patron of the theater and the dance. Having the King of glory as her living head, the Church does not need to seek the condescending patron of the great and distinguished of earth. Their formal recognition and favors have helped her little in the past, and they are not likely to help her any more in the future. The truly spiritual people in a Church should govern it and endeavor, under the leadership of the Holy Spirit, to shape its course. Secularists, with secular reforms to promote, should not be permitted to lay hold upon the Church and divert her attention from her supreme work of saving the lost—of ministering spiritually to the souls of men.

THE LAYMEN'S MISSIONARY CONVENTION.

At this writing the Laymen's Missionary Convention, which began here last Sunday, is lu full swing. Dr. E. H. Rawlings occupied the pulpit of the First Methodist Church, in which the sessions of the convention are being held, last Sunday at 11 a. m., and delivered an earnest aud impressive discourse. On the Sabbath afternoon stirring addresses were delivered hy Bishop W. R. Lambuth and Dr. J. T. Hendersou, of Chattanooga. Other noted workers participating in the exercises of the convention are Dr. W. W. Pinson of Nashville, Dr. John N. Mills of Washington, Col. E. W. Halford of New York, and Dr. S. D. Gordon, who is so widely known for his heart-searching devotional talks. The ladies of the First Methodist Church gave a luncheon for gentlemen at the church at 6 o'clock on Mouday evening, and a devotional service was announced to be held at the Grunewald Hotel at the uoon hour each day. The meetings have awakened considerable interest in the city and have been well attended, a number of pastors and laymen having come in from near-by towns to profit by the occasion.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Bishop Candler passed through New Orleans en route to Houston, Texas, last Saturday. He was looking well and seemed to be in excellent spirits.

The District Conference of the Epworth Leagues of the Baton Rouge District will be held in the First M. E. Church, South, of Baton Rouge, January 29 aud 30.

Bishop Lambuth is expected to sail from New Orleans on January 29 for Panama, where he will attend the interdenominational Missionary Coufer-ence soon to be held there.

Among those attending the Laymen's Convention this week we noted Rev. A. J. Townsley, of Crowley; Rev. C. V. Breithaupt, of Houma, aud Rev. P. O. Lowrey, of Donaldsonville.

We are sorry to be informed that Mrs. White, the wife of our pastor at Plaquemine, La., Rev. George P. White, is seriously ill. Brother White requests the prayers of the Church for her recovery.

In ordering the address of his Advocate changed, Rev. M. F. Johnson, now of Fort Smith, Ark., says: "We were appointed to one of the city churches—Midland Heights—at the last Annual Conference. We are pleased with our new charge and hope to have a good year.

Rev. J. L. Hoffpauir, presiding elder of the Lafayette District, requests us to announce that the hour for the meeting of his district stewards has been changed from 1 p. m. to 11 a. m. The date and place of the meeting remain unchanged—Lafayette, Wednesday, Feb. 9.

Rev. J. W. Dorman calls for a list of our subscribers among the members of our First Church at Water Valley and states that he desires to have the Conference organ to continue to visit their homes. Would that there were more such high-steeple preachers in the land!

Rev. J. E. Cunningham states that he is delighted with things at Corinth, Miss. This is not surprising. Corinth has long been one of the choice charges of the North Mississippi Conference. It does not need to be said that the people are much pleased with Brother Cunningham.

We acknowledge our indebtedness to Rev. W. J. O'Bryant, pastor of the Lexington (Miss.) Circuit, for a club of 5 subscriptions from his charge. Brother O'Bryant is giving a good account of himself in his present field of labor, as he has long been in the habit of doing wherever he is sent.

Brother J. S. Hand, of Purvis, Miss., who is a friend to every good cause, sends us 14 subscriptions from his community. If the Advocate had in every church a layman who takes the interest in its circulation that Brother Hand does, it would soon pass the 10,000 mark.

Rev. T. J. Norsworthy is assisting Rev. J. C. Chambers in a meeting at Sumrall, Miss., which promises well. We have in hand a communication from Brother Norsworthy which reached us too late for this number of the Advocate, hut which we hope to let our readers see next week.

The registration at Whitworth College has gone past the 200 mark since the Christmas holidays. Great is Whitworth!

We extract the following from a personal note from Rev. E. H. Cunningham, our hustling young pastor at Leland, Miss.: "Our church here is giving a good account of itself as a station. We have a live prayer meeting, and men and women, too, who will lead it. The attendance is increasing every week."

Information has reached us that the people at Slidell, La., are delighted with their new pastor, Rev. T. J. Embree. He is preaching to fine congregatfons, which are said to include an unusually large number of men. The Sunday school is active and growing, and the outlook in every respect is stated to be most encouraging.

Dr. J. A. Parker, who, as was stated in last week's issue of the Advocate, has for some time been at the Touro Infirmary for medical treatment, has returned home. It is stated that his condition is hut little, if any, improved. Let the brethren continue to remember him and his anxious loved ones at the throne of grace.

Mr. J. L. Christy's family is said to hold the record for attendance upon the Methodist Sunday school at Coldwater, Miss. During the past year Mr. Christy and his son, James, and his little daughter, Martha, were present on 52 Sundays; and another daughter, Miss Floy, was present 50 times. This is indeed a noteworthy record.

Rev. Dan E. Kelly recently closed an excellent meeting at DeKalb, Miss., in which, it was stated, 37 persons united with the Churches; 17 going to the Methodist Church, 12 to the Baptist Church, and 8 to the Presbyterian Church. It scarcely needs to be said that Brother McClellan, our pastor at DeKalb, was active in this good work.

Rev. J. A. Biffle is pleased with the outlook at Eudora, Miss. He reports the death of Dr. D. S. Richmond, who has long been a pillar in our church at that place, and who will be greatly missed in the community which held him in such esteem. We regret to learn of the demise of this choice layman, and we extend sympathy to the bereaved.

Rev. J. W. Ramsey, of Heidelberg, Miss., remembers us with a club of 5 suhscriptions, for which he has our thanks. He requests us to state that he will have some time in August, September, and October that he can devote to revival work, and that he would be pleased to have the brethren who would like to have his assistance to write him early.

Writing from Webb, Miss., on the 19th inst., Rev. O. L. Savage says: "The people here have done all that could have been expected for our comfort. The work has started off auspiciously. Brother Sharp, my predecessor, wrought well in this field." Brother Savage's letter brought us a club of 5 suhscriptions, for which we extend to him our thanks.

Rev. W. L. Doss sends us two suhscriptions from Dubach, La., and adds: "One of these men said that the Advocate was one paper that he would certainly renew; that he could not afford to let it stop coming to his house, as it was a puhlication that all read there." We are grateful to Brother Doss for remembering the Conference organ in his rounds among his people.

We are giving on another page the places and dates of a series of Sunday School Institutes which Brothers Dietrich and Gladney have arranged to conduct within the hounds of the North Mississippi Conference. It is to be hoped that our pastors and Sunday school workers will give these capable specialists their hearty co-operation in making these meetings count for much.

Rev. J. T. Leggett reports that the work has hegun well in the Meridian District and that the prospects ahead seem good. As a leader of the hosts of Israel Brother Leggett ranks with the hest to be found anywhere, and he has an excellent corps of workers associated with him in his present field. So it is not surprising that the work of the Church is going forward in that section of Mississippi.

Rev. W. J. O'Bryant writes us as follows: "Mr. W. W. Lunsford and Mrs. Nannie Bushart were married at Owens' Well, Miss., on December 21, 1915. This happy couple is in the seventies. May the sunlight of love and prosperity linger along their pathway until life shall end!" The Advocate, along with their many other friends, extends to this worthy bride and groom congratulations and best wishes.

From Coffeeville, Miss., Rev. W. L. Storment writes us as follows: "On Tuesday, January 18, 1916, Mrs. Goad was buried at the Old Pisgah Church. She was the mother of Rev. J. A. Goad, of the North Mississippi Conference. An obituary will follow this notice." We regret to hear of the decease of this faithful servant of the Master, and we extend to Brother Goad and the other sorrowing loved ones our deepest sympathy.

We take the following from the Raleigh Christian Advocate of January 20: "Dr. Franklin N. Parker, now of the Candler School of Theology, but who formerly held the Chair of Biblical Literature at Trinity College, has been secured to conduct the annual revival at Trinity College this year. A wise selection has been made."

Rev. M. B. Sharbrough, presiding elder of the Port Gibson District, writes: "I have been cordially received everywhere I have gone in the district, and, though the work has generally started off slowly, we are expecting a prosperous year." This district was the first to suffer from the holl weevil invasion of Mississippi, but for the past two or three years the work within its hounds has been showing an upward tendency, and will doubtless continue to do so.

Mrs. C. M. Martin, under date of January 22, writes us as follows from Meridian, Miss.: "My husband, Rev. C. M. Martin, a superannuated preacher, fell from a wagon last Wednesday and broke his leg. We are at the Meridian Sanitarium, and the doctors state that he is doing well. We desire the prayers of all Christian people for his recovery." We regret to learn of this accident, and we sympathize with Brother Martin in his misfortune, which we hope will entail no permanent injury.

Rev. I. T. Reames, pastor of the Queensborough Church at Shreveport, La., writes: "Our work has started off better than ever before. The people seem in better spirits concerning finances and all the other interests of the church are on the advance. A more liberal support has been planned for hy the stewards, and the prospects are brightening generally. On the 2d of December my nephew and foster son, George S. Stott was married to Miss Eula Farnell, and they are now making their home at the parsonage."

A letter from Rev. W. N. Duncan, of Winona, Miss., written last Monday night, stated that Rev. G. W. Bachman, who has been so critically ill for some time, seemed to be growing steadily weaker, and that his physicians held out no hope of his recovery. This will be sad news to Brother Bachman's host of friends in Mississippi and elsewhere. But, with such a life behind him, there can he only hrightness ahead of this noble veteran, whatever may come. May the Heavenly Father ahide with the loved ones watching by his side in this anxious hour!

Dr. J.W. Beeson states that there are some strong young ministers attending Meridian College who would be pleased to assist in camp meetings or revivals in churches during the vacation season—from the last of May until about the middle of Septemher. Among these he makes special mention of Mr. Erke Howell and Mr. Robert Tyler, whom he strongly commends. Dr. Beeson thinks that his present College Faculty is the best that he has ever had, and that the institution of which he is the official head is now doing more satisfactory work than ever before.

We find that there were some errors in the report of Brother R. M. Evans' work which recently appeared in our "From the Field Department." He was represented as saying that he had "six new churches," when it should have been a new parsonage and six churches. The word "home" was also omitted in another sentence, resulting in quite a ludicrous statement. We regret these errors, for which Brother Evans was in no wise to blame except that handwriting is sometimes a little difficult to read. Fight as we may against mistakes, they occasionally creep in on us.

Rev. J. H. Smith reports hopefully concerning his work at Carrollton, Miss. He says: "We are beginning the year with good prospects. I am a much bigger preacher this year than I was last, as they have enlarged my work by adding two churches—thus 'lengthening the cords,' and I trust also that they have 'strengthened the stakes.' We are well, and are pleasantly surrounded." Perhaps the "powers that be" appreciated Brother Smith's gifts as an expositor of the Word and desired to pass a good thing around. At any rate, the congregations to which he ministers may count themselves fortunate.

We reproduce the following from "The Perry County News" (New Augusta, Miss.) of January 6: "Rev. Walter E. Tynes, recently from Texas, but now of Hattiesburg, has been delivering an interesting series of sermons and lectures at the Baptist Church here during the past week. Dr. Tynes is a scholarly man of pleasing address, and those who failed to hear him missed a great treat. Concerning his discourses, Rev. C. H. Ellis, our acting pastor at New Augusta, writes as follows: "He gave lectures on the Life of Christ illustrated in outline on a large, beautiful chart, showing the time and place of every event in the four Gospels in their harmonic order. His sermons on "The Signs of the Times," as foretold in the Bible, were clear and informing. He is commended as a good and worthy man."

Little EUNICE VIRGINIA HANKINS had lived two years and eighteen days to beautify and bless the home of Rev. and Mrs. H. P. Hankins, when on Sept. 22, 1915, she was summoned by the one who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven," and her soul took its flight from their home near Paulding, Miss. On the date above mentioned she left father and mother and two little brothers to mourn her death. Her life, though short, accomplished its mission, part of which, no doubt, was to center the affections of her father, mother, and little brothers more fully upon the home of the blest. God in his wisdom seems to take the jewels of our home and place them where he wants us to go, as in the Master's spirit you take into your arms the little ones. His own everlasting arms will encircle them and you. His blessings he will breath upon you, and enable you so to live that when you are called you may go to meet your loved ones. May the promise, "I will not leave you comfortless," sustain the bereaved father and mother.

H. R. McKEE.

Little JESSIE SHEPHERD, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Shepherd, of Rose Hill, Miss., was born on August 8, 1905, and died on August 15, 1915, being ten years and seven days old. Little Jessie had been a sufferer ever since a spell of sickness which fell to his lot some time prior to the illness which cost him his life. During his last spell he was sick for a week and suffered great pain, while the loving family waited upon him day and night, seemingly more than willing to take the disease into their own systems to relieve little Jessie, if it had been possible for them to do so. But after all that loving bands could do bad been done, the Lord said, "Come to me, Jessie;" and because God took him we must say blessed be the name of the Lord, for he gives and he takes away. We know that little Jessie is better off now. The family loved him devotedly and are sorely bereaved. How it seemed to break their hearts to see the pallbearers carry the lifeless form away to be conveyed to the cemetery! Oh, how sad it was! It made us think that we do not know how soon we may have to carry some of our loved ones away. Weep not, Christian friends; little Jessie has gone to be with the redeemed where sickness, death, goodbyes, and sorrow are no more.

H. R. McKEE, P. C.

On the afternoon of Jan. 11 our heart was made sad when we received news of the death of Mrs. CORA WHITESIDE. Mrs. Whiteside was born on Feb. 15, 1894, and departed this life on Jan. 11, 1916. She was married to Mr. Irvin Whiteside about two years ago. She professed faith in Christ in early life and joined the Baptist Church, but last year she united with the Methodist Church, of which her husband was a member. Mrs. Whiteside was one of the sweetest Christian characters I have ever met. She could find a brigbt side when everything seemed dark. She was always cheerful. She was a true and faithful daughter, wife, mother, and sister. She will be greatly missed in her home, in the community in which she lived, in the church, and in the Sunday school, of which she was secretary. The loss seems almost unbearable, but when we remember that our loss is her eternal gain, we are encouraged to live the lives of bumble Christians with the hope of meeting her in heaven to part no more. It seemed that she was warned of her death, for she said from the beginning of her illness that she would not get well. She leaves a father, a mother, several brothers and sisters, a husband, a bright, sweet babe, and a host of friends to mourn her departure. After the funeral services which were conducted by her former pastor, W. B. Baker, her remains were laid to rest in the Ebenezer Cemetery to await the resurrection. May God's richest blessings rest upon the bereaved ones!

W. B. BAKER.

Mrs. DAMARIS COMBOST was born in Jasper County, Miss., near Rose Hill, on Oct. 9, 1845, and died in the same county, near Paulding, Miss., on April 18, 1915. She was married to Mr. J. M. Combost on Oct. 4, 1865. To this marriage were given 13 children—6 boys and 7 girls. All live to mourn the mother's death except three. She had 31 grandcbildren living. She also leaves her husband, Mr. J. M. Combost, to mourn the loss of a wife. Sister Combost joined the M. E. Church, South, at the age of 13 years and lived a consistent member of that church until her death. She was 69 years old when she died. Sbe possessed a lovely character and was a good friend and a fond mother. To one of her grandsons, a local preacher, who, after a visit to her while she was sick, was taking his leave, she said: "Son, if I never see you again in this world, you will know where to find me." She bore all patiently. Though her suffering was long continued, she was submissive to the will of Him who does all things well. We have lost a friend, and her home has lost its chief member; but may the Lord visit that home and lead its members to better things in this life, so that in the end they may hear the welcome plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servants," and be permitted to pass in to meet the loved ones who bave gone before. The body of the deceased was laid to rest by the writer in the Hickory Grove Cemetery, near Rose Hill, Miss., in the presence of a large number of friends and relatives on April 19, 1915.

Her pastor, H. R. McKEE.

MRS. SALLIE L. CALHOON.

Whereas the grim reaper, Death, has invaded our ranks and carried home to heaven the spirit of Mrs. SALLIE LEA CALHOON, one of our most faithful teachers, one whose life and service has been of untold value to our Church, our Sunday school, and our community; and

Whereas her death means a great and irreparable loss to our Sunday school, though we rejoice that she lived to serve us so faithfully for so many years, and we point to her life and character as worthy of the emulation of our young people and express a desire that it may influence the members of tbis Sunday scbool to put forth a greater effort and take a more active interest, that the work done by our departed friend may not be neglected in the future, and thereby verify the truth, that God buries his workmen but His work goes on; therefore be it

Resolved by the officers and members of the Holly Springs Sunday school of the M. E. Church, South, that we express our great appreciation of the life and character of Mrs. Calhoon and extend our sympathy to the aged husband and children in this great bereavement.

Be it further Resolved, that we set apart a page of the Sunday school minute-book upon which to inscribe these resolutions.

Be it also Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and to tbe local papers for publication.

Signed: Mrs. E. L. Mosley, M. A. Greene, C. H. Curd, Committee.

Turn Hair Dark With Sage Tea
If Mixed with Sulphur it Darkens so Naturally Nobody can tell.

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grandmother's treatment, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Now-a-days, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" for about 50 cents a bottle. It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive; besides, prevents dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair.

both of which are reported to be in a flourishing condition, and growing. Brother E. E. Williamson, an esteemed member of the official board, to whom our readers are indebted for this picture, in forwarding it to us, says: "Rev. J. W. Lee has just finished four years' work here, and both the Church and Sunday school regretted to give him up. We feel, however, that we are very fortunate in having Rev. C. C. Miller and his good wife with us for this year. They have already established themselves with the people and we expect a year of activity and progress at Lake Providence." We are pleased to have this cheering message from this worthy flock in North Louisiana, and we pray that their labors during 1916 may indeed be crowned with a large measure of success.

A GREAT MEETING.

Dear Advocate: Just to let our friends who will rejoice with us know, and for the encouragement of others, I desire to tell you of the glorious revival which we have just had here at Blue Mountain, Miss., in which 82 souls were won or reclaimed for the Lord, and, we trust, for lives of service.

Our revival was conducted by Rev. J. H. Bell, of Columbus, Miss., one of our recently appointed Conference evangelists, who by his earnestness and his close walk with God profoundly impressed all who heard him. He was assisted by our own beloved pastor, Rev. R. P. Neblett of Ripley, who by his prayers, his faithfulness, and his co-operation was a great factor in winning the sweeping victory that was ours.

Truly, for those nine days did we dwell on the mountain-heights of spirituality, and, like Peter on the Mount of Transfiguration, we thought it would be pleasant to dwell there always; but we realize that these heights are given us that we may get the visions that fit us for the valleys of service, and with willing hands and glad hearts we take up with renewed earnestness the work of the Master here in our own church that we have loved and labored for during the seven years of its existence, or wherever our hands may find work to do.

Most of the new-born souls God has given us are students either in Blue Mountain College or in the Mississippi Heights Academy, and will leave us at the close of the school year, but our love will go with them, and our prayers, that God may use them wherever they may go. With a heart full of gratitude to the Giver of all good gifts, I am sincerely.

HELP FOR BRONCHIAL TROUBLE AND COUGHS

Foley's Honey and Tar Compound has a wonderfully quick way of soothing and healing the raw, tickling surface of the throat and bronchial tubes. Will G. Richmond, Inglewood, California, says: "Foley's Honey and Tar Compound has greatly benefited me for bronchial trouble and cough." For cough, colds, croup, la grippe and bronchial coughs, hoarseness tickling throat, stuffy, wheezy breathing, it acts with wonderful quickness and soothing effect.

DR. HENDERSON AT HOLLY SPRINGS.

Dear Dr. Meek: It affords me great pleasure to tell you that our new pastor, Dr. Harry G. Henderson, has already found his way to the hearts of our people. He is a polished gentleman, a splendid orator, and a forceful, thoughtful preacher. His congregations are large and made up not only from our own church, but from the town generally I hear nothing but good things said about him from any quarter. He has been very active in visiting his members, and things all point to a year of great uplift for our church here. I believe Dr. Henderson will suit Holly Springs exactly. There are few men, in my opinion, who can hold an audience better than he can. Somehow he has a way of saying things which makes his hearers anxious to know what he will say next. We are delighted with him.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

(Adopted by the Sunday school at Eudora, Miss.)

Whereas, it has pleased the Heavenly Father to remove from among us our beloved teacher, Dr. D. S. RICHMOND, who passed away at his home at Eudora, Miss., on December 3, 1915—one who had so long and faithfully served the Master, and who had showed us by his daily walk among us the sustaining power of a life spent in love to God and service to those with whom he came in contact; and

Whereas, by his decease our community has had taken away one of its most beautiful characters, leaving us with a deep sense of our loss; therefore be it resolved:

1. That by this dispensation of Providence our union Sunday school has lost a faithful teacher.

2. That we, the members of the Sunday school, extend to the members of his bereaved family our sincere sympathy in their great sorrow.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to The Times-Promoter and the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication, a copy spread on the minutes of our Sunday school, and a copy sent to the family.

Glass of Salts Cleans Kidneys

If your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you, drink lots of water.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a teaspoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTITUTES.

The Sunday School Board of the North Mississippi Conference has announced an exceedingly interesting series of Sunday School Institutes covering every county in the northern half of the State of Mississippi, one meeting to be held in each county. These Institutes are planned especially for Sunday school superintendents and pastors. The programs are unusually practical in the proposed treatment of the themes to be discussed. These Institutes are under the direct management of Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, of Sardis, Sunday School Field Secretary of the North Mississippi Conference, and Mr. A. L. Dietrich, Field Secretary of the Gulf Division, with headquarters at Meridian, Miss. The following subjects are among those that will be discussed: "The Use of the Sunday School Hour," "Increasing the Membership," "Grading the Sunday School," "Sunday School Evangelism," "The Text Book," "The Business End," "The Business of Being a Superintendent," and "The Pastor's Place In It All."

The Conference territory has been divided into two tours, and the itinerary of Tour One is as follows, the meeting being held in the Metbodist churches in towns and on the dates noted:

LOUISIANA WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Louisiana Conference will bold its annual meeting at Ruston beginning February 11, and lasting until Monday night of the 14th. LAGRIPPE USUALLY LEAVES A BAD COUGH

Both la grippe and influenza often leave a bad cough that hangs on, is weakening and exhausting. Foley's Honey and Tar Compound is a simple, quick and effective medicine for curing these bad la grippe coughs. E. C. Rhodes, Middleton, Ga., writes: "When getting well of la grippe I still had a hacking cough and for several months could get no relief. I began taking Foley's Honey and Tar and soon I was well of both cough and cold, which never returned." All druggists sell it everywhere.

A CORRECTION.

In the new Minutes the Corinth Circuit is assessed $45 for Conference claimants and is represented as having paid $25. Tbis is an error; the charge was assessed only $30, and $25 of this was paid. The assessment for Sunday school secretary is placed at $10 in the Minutes and the charge is put down as having paid only $5. Tbis also is an error. The Corinth Circuit was assessed only $5 and this amount was paid. In justice to myself and the people I served, I feel that this correction ought to be made.

A New Remedy for Kidney, Bladder and all Uric Acid Troubles.

Dear Readers:

I appeal to those of you who are bothered with kidney and bladder trouble, that you give up the use of harsh salts or alcoholic medicines and in their place take a short treatment of "Anuric." I have taken many of Dr. Pierce's medicines for the past twenty-five years with good results. I suffered with kidney trouble for some years. I recently heard of the newest discovery of Dr. Pierce, namely, his "Anuric" Tablets. After using same I am completely cured of my kidney trouble. A doctor pronounced me a well preserved woman for my age, all due, I believe, to Dr. Pierce's medical aid. Mrs. MELINDA E. MILLER.

Note:—Dr. Eberle and Dr. Braithwaite, as well as Dr. Simon— all distinguished medical authorities—agree that whatever may be the disease, the urine seldom fails in furnishing us with a clue to the principles upon which it is to be treated, and accurate knowledge concerning the nature of disease can thus be obtained. If backache, scalding urine or frequent urination bother or distress you, or if uric acid in the blood has caused rheumatism, gout or sciatica, or you suspect kidney or bladder trouble just write Dr. Pierce at his Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y.; send a sample of urine and describe symptoms. You will receive free medical advice after Dr. Pierce's chemists have examined the urine—this will be carefully done without charge, and you will be under no obligation. Dr. Pierce during many years of experimentation has discovered a new remedy, "Anuric," which is found to be thirty-seven times more powerful than lithia in removing uric acid from the system. If you are suffering from backache or the pains of rheumatism, go to your best druggist and ask for a 50-cent box of "Anuric" put up by Dr. Pierce.—Adv.

PORT GIBSON DISTRICT NOTES.

Rev. J. T. McVey, who was severely ill with la grippe a short time after his removal to his new work, seems to have fully recovered, and, as usual, is actively engaged in his pastoral duties.

Rev. J. A. Wells, who was assigned to the Oak Ridge charge at the last Conference, has been prevented from moving to his work by the illness of his wife. He has himself spent sometime there, and hopes soon to be settled for the year.

The Silver City charge at its first quarterly meeting, lately held, reported almost a full quarter's salary raised, and had made a good start on its missionary collections. Its faithful and wide-awake pastor, J. H. Foreman, stands high with his people.

The week of prayer observed by the church of Port Gibson resulted in quite a liberal offering. Both pastor and people believe practically in missions.

Rev. C. M. Chapman, who has had a severe spell of la grippe since Conference, has regained his usual health, and enters enthusiastically upon his new year's work. "REPORTER."

Calomel Makes You Sick, Ugh!

"Dodson's Liver Tone" better than calomel and can not Salivate.

Calomel loses you a day! You know what calomel is. It's mercury; quicksilver. Calomel is dangerous. It crashes into sour bile like dynamite, cramping and sickening you. Calomel attacks the bones and should never be put into your system.

When you feel bilious, sluggish, constipated and all knocked out and believe you need a dose of dangerous calomel just remember that your druggist sells for 50 cents a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone, which is entirely vegetable and pleasant to take and is a perfect substitute for calomel. It is guaranteed to start your liver without stirring you up inside, and can not salivate.

Don't take calomel! It makes you sick the next day. Dodson's Liver Tone straightens you right up and you feel great. Give it to the children because it is perfectly harmless and doesn't gripe.

The United States Department of Agriculture has conducted successful laboratory experiments in the manufacture of paper from zacaton grass, which grows from California south to Argentina.

ONE LITTLE 50 CENT BOX

of Tetterine will often cure cases of Eczema, Tetter, etc., of 10 and 15 years standing. It is because this salve embodies correct scientific principles in the treatment of skin diseases that it relieves Tetter, Eczema, Ringworm, Itch, Childblains, etc. It is the absolute master of skin diseases as thousands will testify. 50c at druggist's or by mail from Shuptrine Co., Savannah, Ga.

WOMEN SUFFERERS NEED SWAMP-ROOT.

Thousands upon thousands of women have kidney and bladder trouble and never suspect it.

Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition, they may cause the other organs to become diseased.

You may suffer a great deal with pain in the back, headache, loss of ambition, nervousness and may be despondent and irritable.

Don't delay starting treatment. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a physician's prescription, obtained at any drug store, restores health to the kidneys and is just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions.

Get a fifty cent or one dollar bottle immediately from any drug store.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention the New Orleans Christian Advocate.—Adv.

MANY FAILURES DUE TO HEADACHES.

A headache saps your energy and ambition. It kills your vigor and vitality.

Many have become not only nervous wrecks, but business and domestic failures, owing to the constant drain on their nervous systems by headaches.

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills have for the past quarter of a century proved to be the popular relief for headaches and other forms of pain. They bring the desired relief surely and quickly.

They contain no habit-forming drugs and have no bad after-effects.

People who have used them are only too glad to testify to their merits so that others may also be free from pain.

The Rev. J. A. Riley, of Trout, La., has the following to say:

"For over 10 years I have used Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills whenever I was in need of a remedy for pain, to allay fever or induce a natural sleep. I also find that they quiet the nerves. I have used them freely in my family to the exclusion of all other remedies and have always found them to do their work to perfection and never in a single instance have they had any bad after-effects. I heartily recommend them as a safe, pleasant and effective remedy."

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills are sold by all druggists at 25c for 25 doses. Your money will be refunded if they are not found to be satisfactory.

RESULTS OF ORGANIZATION AND MEMBERSHIP CAMPAIGN IN NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE TO JAN. 1, 1916.

New societies organized, 61; members gained, 960; voluuteer workers enlisted, 213; observance of Woman's Day reported from 54 churches; all-day rallies held in four out of eight districts, and splendid district meetings held in each district.

I am quite sure that we have had a gain of more than one thousand in membership. That given was reported immediately after the organization of societies, and many were organized several months ago, and I am sure have had quite an increase in members since then. Am sure, too, that Woman's Day was observed in many more churches than were reported. My secretaries have complained of great difficulties in gleaning tbis one item in particular. Several of our preachers have themselves organized societies for us.

I am rejoiced to be strong enough to give some little attention to the work again, and am deeply grateful to my beloved co-laborers for the many loving attentions shown me during my illness and convalescence. I am anxious for the approaching annual meeting at Clarksdale to be one of great spiritual power. May I not expect the women of the Conference to keep the morning watch with me to that end?

Mrs. VIC THOMPSON HOYLE,
Conference President.

SPIRITUAL EXPORTS.

America's greatest exports are not her grain and manufactures, but her finished spiritual products—men and women transformed by education and freedom and trausfigured by the gospel of Christ. These redeemed souls will carry America's business methods, liberty, equality, fraternity, neighborliness, community spirit, initiative, brotherhood, evangelistic methods, and the passion for Christian service into all the nations of the world. East, west, north, and south, American men and women, trained by the Christian churches, will be scattered as the living seed of the kingdom of God, and as residents, merchants, travelers, and missionaries will give the world tbeir best. All tbe nations of the earth want the best and without doubt will ultimately have it. Other lands, which have given good heed to the gospel of Christ and have yielded abundant harvests that are imperiled by the devastations of war, will doubtless continue to contribute their full share to the forces and influences striving for the world's redemption. But the fortunate position of America, which, it is hoped, will never become involved in international complications, will combine with all spiritual forces to enable the evangelical Churches of the new world to give to backward nations, in large measure and running over, tbe simple and true gospel of Christ, which alone can save their people from their sins and give to them individual, social, national, and international salvation.—Chas. L. White in "The Churches At Work."

NOTICE.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference will hold its annual meeting in Vicksburg, Miss., at the Crawford Street Church, Feb. 14-18. Communion service on Monday night.

NOTICE.

The anuual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Louisiana Conference will convene in Ruston, La., Feb. 11-15.

Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb, Home Base Secretary, and Dr. S. D. Gordon will be the Conference guests.

Mrs. A. P. HOLT, Cor. Sec.

This week we are publishing the notices for the annual meetings of tbe missionary societies of the three patronizing Conferences. Please do not give them a cursory glauce and pass on. We urge every woman who reads the notice for her Conference to begin to plan definitely right now for her auxiliary to be represented. These meetings are schools where valuable knowledge is gained; where Christian fellowship is enjoyed, and where inspiration and a deeper love for the work is born. It is not right that just a few should enjoy these privileges and blessings—they are for all who will come, and so, year after year, we plead for a larger representation.

In this issne we have only the notices, no further information having reached us; but we feel sure that at our next writing we can tell you more of the plans for the meetings. Louisiana, as you see, has secured two valuable speakers: Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb was for some years president of the Mississippl Conference Society and was greatly beloved. This office she retained until called to a higher one, that of secretary of Home Base, with headquarters in Nashville.

Dr. S. D. Gordon needs no introduction to our women, for he is the man who so inspired the hearts of his hearers at the Council meeting iu Little Rock, Ark., last spring. His quiet talks were characterized by a tenderness and gentleness akin to the Master's. The large audiences listened with deep reverence to his words and many hearts were made to rejoice in the power of God's love.

REPORT OF LOUISIANA CONFERENCE TREASURER.

Have just closed up our 1915 records, and find the total cash receipts $10,263.84—about $1200 more than in 1914. Am grieved to report only $3466.67 on our pledge—$658.33 short, and only about $12[illegible] more than last year.

Under our new financial arrangement, the Conference treasurer's work has been like play, compared with the four years previous. I think it is better every way. Only twenty different casb items now!

Mrs. J. J. HOLMES, Treas.

"There can be no nether springs of service without the upper springs of inspiration."

NOTICE.

The North Mississippi Conference Minutes represent the Paris Circuit, Holly Springs District, as having been assessed $8 for the Sunday School Field Secretary and having paid nothing thereon. I wish to state that I paid the assessment of $8 to Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, and hold his receipt for the same.

From the Field

Louisville, Miss.

We are beginning the year well. The people of Louisville have received us very kindly and the outlook seems to be bright. We have here a great opportunity. So much needs to be done that I hardly know where to begin. Our greatest need is a new house of worship and I think that our people are ready to build. I wish that you would please state that the Conference Minutes show that Pickens did not pay the Sunday School Assessment, which is a mistake. We paid the full assessment, as the Treasurer can testify.—J. D. Simpson, P. C.

Rose Hill, Miss.

I am glad to report encouragingly concerning the outlook in this charge. We were given a most cordial reception upon our return to the parsonage after Conference. A very fine dinner was prepared for us and we were given a valuable "pounding" at night. We seem to have some as good people as can be found anywhere. Things have moved on nicely, so far. I desire, Mr. Editor, to commend especially your editorial on "Grading Ministers," in the Advocate of November 25, and the one on "Our Country Churches" appearing in your issue of December 16. May I suggest that the brethren would do well to look up these numbers of our paper and to re-read those utterances? May the Lord continue to bless your labors!—H. R. McKee, P. C.

Cochrane, Ala.

Dear Brother Meek: Perhaps you do not remember me, but I have not forgotten you, having joined the Church under your ministry at West Point, Miss. I have been appointed to serve this charge, and my reception has been all that could have been expected by any preacher. I have found many big-hearted, hospitable people at each of the three churches on the work: Cochrane, Dancy, and Panola—all in Alabama, but embraced in the Columbus (Miss.) District. I am expecting a great year for the Master in this field, as it is "white unto the harvest." I will make a special effort to secure a number of new subscriptions to the Advocate in the near future. Remember me in your prayers as a young and inexperienced pastor who is trusting in God to lead and direct him in his efforts to build up the Kingdom.—John W. Robertson, P. C.

Eucutta, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: Since returning from Conference and entering upon our second year here, the prospects in general on the charge appear encouraging. A cordial welcome has been extended to the pastor and his family. On Christmas night we had a very appropriate service at the church, which was well attended and at which perfect order prevailed. When we returned to the parsonage our hearts were made glad to find a "pounding" had been given us. This expression of appreciation and thoughtfulness on the part of our people was very acceptable. We approach the New Year's opportunities and obligations under a keener sense of responsibility and realize our dependence on the Holy Spirit for the needed grace and power which must be ours if we are to successfully discharge the work assigned us.—Chas. E. Downer, P. C.

Corinth Circuit (North Miss. Conf.)

Dear Advocate: We have just finished our first round on the Corinth Circuit and are pleased with the present outlook. We feel like we are at home among this people, whom we have already learned to love and whom we believe to be among the best that can be found anywhere. They know how to make a Methodist circuit rider and his family happy. We had been here only a day or two when they began to shower us with all kinds of good things to eat, and gifts from them have not yet ceased to come in. The good people of Corinth have also joined with them in sending in good things until we are compelled to say, "God bless them!" And while they were filling our pantry with so many nice things, they did not neglect to bring other things, such as chairs, mattresses, granite-ware, a dining table, etc. They have brought us under many obligations to them for their kindness. We are now getting down to work and are praying and working for, and are expecting, this to be the greatest year in the history of the Corinth Circuit. May the Lord bless the Advocate and all of its readers!

A. L. DAVENPORT, P. C.

Kosciusko, Miss.

Dear Brother Meek: I arrived in Kosciusko on December 16, 1915, and entered upon what bids fair to be one of my most pleasant pastorates. The people have given a cordial welcome to the new pastor and his family and have made us feel very much at home. Our congregations have been large and appreciative. We have a splendid board of stewards, all brotherly and considerate men, with a vision of the church's needs and possibilities. We have a good Woman's Missionary Society, a live and interesting Sunday school, an Epworth League, and one of the best choirs I have seen anywhere. We have a choir director employed at a salary of $20 per month, and it is money well invested. Brother Mitchell held our first quarterly conference last Monday night. I am sure he is going to have a large place in the hearts of the people and that he will look well after the interests of the district. The preacher's salary was fixed at $1400 and the plan of weekly payment has been enthusiastically adopted by the board of stewards and church. I have been in about fifty homes up to date and feel assured that the faithful labors of my predecessor is bearing fruit in the lives of the people. I hope to increase the number of subscriptions to the Advocate, and will secure renewals as they are due. Pray for us.—S. A. Brown, P. C.

Ripley, Miss.

Dear Mr. Editor: We held the last service of our meeting at Blue Mountain on Tuesday night, Jan. 18. In spite of rain, snow, and cold, not a service was missed. The doors of the schools were open to to us and several times Brother J. H. Bell, one of our Conference evangelists, who was with us, preached to the student body. On Saturday night and Sunday afternoon services were held in the College Hall. As many of the young ladies and boys as could be accommodated at our little church attended most of the evening services. Sixteen young men were converted in a service held at the Mississippi Heights Academy, at their chapel hour, Thursday morning.

In addition to quickening the church life of the noble band called Methodists, there were 82 conversions and reclamations. But this does not begin to measure the good work accomplished. Most of the converts were Baptists, but a goodly company joined our Church on profession Sunday. One young man yielded to the call to preach and will go to Millsaps College next year.

Brother Bell was at ease and deeply interested, as well as interesting, in every service wherever we were. His quiet, frank, forceful manner, moved by a sweet spirit of consecration, took firm hold of all classes. Not a useless, foolish, or awkward thing was said or done at any time. He is truly "a man with a message" and should be used by the brethren.—R. P. Neblett, P. C.

Take Lime for Tuberculosis

In the Journal of the American Medical Association (July 27, 1912—Page 308), Dr. C. F. Disen, of Minneapolis, holds that a "deficiency of calcium" (lime) is responsible for the physical conditions which lead to tuberculosis, "and the therapy he advocates rests on this basis."

One of the reasons for the wide-spread success of Eckman's Alterative in the treatment of tuberculosis is its ability to supply this deficiency. It contains a lime salt in such combination with other valuable ingredients as to be easily assimilated by the average person. Many cases seem to have yielded to it.

We make no exaggerated claims for it, but prefer that it be tried on the same basis as any other prescription, and since it contains no opiates, narcotics or habit forming drugs, it is safe. Price $1 and $2 per bottle. Sold by leading druggists or sent direct from the Laboratory. We would like to send you a booklet containing information of value and references.

AN INTERESTING OCCASION.

On January 9, 1866, Mr. William Warren Alford was married to Miss Mary Blair Traweek at Georgetown, Miss., Rev. M. W. Traweek officiating. On January 9, 1916, they celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding. This event was one of the most interesting that ever took place in Copiah County, owing to the fact they have such a large family connection. There were in attendance representatives of the Alford, Traweek, Catching, and Bridges families. Dr. R. E. Jones and wife, Mr. Jim Eagan and daughter, Mr. W. B. Mathis and wife, Mr. Taylor, editor of the Hazlehurst Courier, and Mr. Charles Huber and wife, and many other intimate friends were on hand. There were also present five daughters, Mrs. J. L. Miller, Mrs. J. E. Lilly, Mrs. E. T. Jones, Mrs. L. C. Ramsey, and Miss Belle Alford—all educated at Whitworth College. Their splendid Christian characters attest the value of Christian education. The only son, W. B. Alford, a substantial and honored citizen, was likewise numbered among the company. Their children are all members of the M. E. Church, South, the Church that is so dear to the hearts of their parents.

Copiah County has never been blessed with a more honorable and upright citizen than Willlam Warren Alford. His word is as good as his bond. He is always found on the right side of every worthy cause. As a business man he has been successful, being one of the most extensive truck growers in the county. He is also a member of the firm, Alford & Miller, at Gallman, Miss.

Mrs. Mary Blair Alford is indeed a most worthy Christian woman. She is a devoted mother and a sincere neighbor and friend. She stated to her daughters who were arranging the program for her golden wedding anniversary that nothing must be done that would interfere with the 11 o'clock preaching service. She never misses Sabbath school or prayer meeting. The New Orleans Christian Advocate has been coming to this family for twenty or twenty-five years.

The unique ceremony took place at three o'clock in the afternoon. Everything had been happily arranged for the event and the exercises were most appropriate. Prayer was offered by the writer, and the wedding address was delivered by Dr. I. W. Cooper, who is an old friend of the family. His remarks were most felicitous and impressive. After the ceremony, the bride and groom received congratulations and expressions of good wishes. Just before the company separated, Mrs. Lizzie F. Dodds read a beautiful poem that she had composed for the occasion. Several handsome presents were given. All present pronounced the celebration a most charming one in every respect.

IN MEMORIAM.

Whereas, God in His wisdom has seen fit to remove from the walks of man, Rev. JOSEPH WILSON POSTON, for more than fifty years a faithful, consecrated, useful and unselfish itinerant preacher of the North Mississippi Conference and for nearly twenty years an active and regular member of our Sunday school; and

Whereas, though we know, from the faith that was in him, that this change has removed him to the sweet fields of Elysium, to the land of everlasting joy, peace and happiness around the throne of God, we yet fully realize that his presence among us, his kind words, his wonderful example of Christian living will be greatly missed; therefore be it

Resolved, by the officers and members of the Holly Springs Sunday School M. E. Church, South, That we make this expression of our love of a voice that is forever stilled, of a hearty hand-grasp that will not again be felt, and of our appreciation of a life so loyal, so consecrated and so useful to the Sunday school, the Church and all its institutions and to the Master.

Resolved, further, That a page of our minutes be dedicated to the memory of this departed friend and brother and that these resolutions be inscribed upon that page.

Be it also Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the wife of the deceased brother, and a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and to the local papers for publication.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

(Resolutions adopted by the Quarterly Conference of the Homewood Charge, Mississippi Conference.)

Whereas, God in his wise providence, has taken unto himself, out of our midst, one of our most efficient and faithful members, Brother SAMUEL R. WEEMS; therefore be it

Resolved, That we bow in submission to the will of our Father in heaven, and pledge ourselves, to be more diligent in the work of our Lord, for having had our dear and sainted brother with us; and, by the grace of God assisting, we will exert a greater effort to meet our dear and worthy brother in heaven. We also express to his bereaved loved ones our love and sympathy in the loss of a dear father, grandfather and great-grandfather, and commend them to the care of Him who doeth all things well. We feel assured from the good fruit that our beloved brother bore while in this life that his soul is at rest in the life everlasting.

Resolved, further, that a copy of these resolutions be placed on the Quarterly Conference Record, and a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

SPIRITUAL CULTURE NEEDED.

The minister who does not strive to deepen and enrich the spiritual life of his flock makes a great mistake. Standing before them as an example, he should faithfully endeavor to lead them steadily toward the attainment of all the Christian graces in their fullest measure. We fear that since the disappearance of the class meeting from among us the work of spiritual nurture is greatly neglected in many of our congregations. Surely we should remember that spirituality and usefulness go largely hand in hand. Wesley could never have been the prodigious and efficient toiler that he was if he had not fed and strengthened his soul daily with hours of earnest prayer and devotional study. This is a lesson that preachers need to learn and insistently teach.

A SERIOUS HINDRANCE TO EFFECTIVENESS.

The effectiveness of not a few preachers is hindered by self-consciousness and intellectual pride. They are concerned too much about the rating that may be given them as regards culture and pulpit ability. If they could entirely lose sight of themselves—become utterly disregardful of their own reputations, and mindful only of the religious effect of their discourses upon their audiences, they would speak with much more directness and power. No cause can be presented in its full strength until its advocate is swallowed up in it. Too many sermons carry evidence of a partial purpose, at least, to win commendation for the ministers delivering them. There was much sense in the prayer often heard in the days agone for the clergyman who was about to expound the Word: "May he hide himself behind the Cross, and preach Christ and him crucified!

THE SEAT OF AUTHORITY IN RELIGION.

Ever and anon the question is raised as to what constitutes for mankind a dependable authority in religion. Some seem to hold that the living Christ, apart from the Holy Scriptures, is the final authority in this realm, and that even if the Scriptures are discredited, he must yet remain supreme, and that to his will and teaching all the views of men must be subordinated. But how are we to know what the character and mind of Christ are except as they are revealed in the New Testament? Impeach the various writings which constitute that, and what can we learn of Jesus? Is he making new revelations to human beings in this day that are definite, unmistakably genuine, and satisfactory? Nay, not so. The so-called new disclosures of religious truth which claim to have been received from on high within recent decades have been anything else but well authenticated and reassuring. Before the Christ of the Scriptures we can well afford to bow, and say, "My Lord and my God," but not so before the nebulous Christ of men's imaginings.

But this is not the only new seat of authority in religion that the modernists have sought to set up. Another is touched upon in the following extract from a review of the volume by Henry Sloane Coffin, entitled "The Ten Commandments, with a Christian Application to Modern Conditions," which appears in the January Number of The Biblical Review (New York):

"At many points the ethics of the book is Christian and helpful. Much that lies open in the Bible is stated freshly, forcibly, and earnestly. But the book destroys with one hand what it builds up with the other. It loosens the foundations of ethics; it substitutes for the rocklike authority of the Word of God the shifting sand of human reason and feeling. No strong and permanent control of human conduct will be gained if 'the supreme Christian authority is the Spirit of Christ in Christian consciences' (p. 134).

"To the claims of such an authority the wicked heart of man will answer as the demon answered the false claims and pretended authority of the sons of Sceva: 'Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye?'

"'The supreme Christian authority' is not 'the Spirit of Christ in human consciences.' But, in the language of a document to which this author has publicly given his assent, 'the Supreme Judge, in whose sentence we are to rest, can be no other but the Holy Spirit speaking in the Scripture.' And 'the authority of the Holy Scripture, for which it ought to be believed and obeyed, dependeth not upon the testimony of any man or Church but wholly upon God the author thereof: and therefore it is to be received, because it is the Word of God.'"

In our opinion, the reviewer referred to, who signs himself "W. H. M.," is correct in his affirmation that "the supreme Christian authority is not the Spirit of Christ in human consciences," but "the Holy Spirit speaking in the Scripture." This is a fact which cannot be too strongly emphasized. The human conscience and reason are too uncertain and variable to serve as a standard and guide in matters upon which are hinged the eternal destiny of the millions of the race. But in God's precious Word, illuminated by the Holy Spirit, we have a lamp unto our feet which will never permit us to go astray if we will duly regard it.

STRAWBRIDGE AND THE LOG MEETING-HOUSE WIN.

On January 27, the following press dispatch was sent out from Baltimore, Md.:

"The three commissions of the Methodist Episcopal, the Methodist Protestant and the Southern Methodist Churches, appointed to settle the question of priority between Philip Embury and Robert Strawbridge, New York and Maryland, in the founding of Methodism in America, decided unanimously to-night in favor of Robert Strawbridge as the organizer of the first Methodist Society of America and of the log meeting-house of Sam's Creek, Carroll County, Maryland, as the First Methodist Church in America."

This is a vindication of the claim which the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has long made. It is also a vindication of Bishop McTyeire's accuracy and reliability as a historian. We are especially glad that the decision in the case was "unanimous."

We quote the following bearing on this subject from Bishop McTyeire's History of Methodism (pages 270 and 271):

"Robert Strawbridge, both in order of time and talent and service, stands at the head of the noble 'irregulars' who founded Arminian Methodism in America. Embury is worthy of much honor, but the builder of the log meeting-house of more. They were contemporaneous in arrival, but not in labor. Embury was a gentle spirit, modest and diffident. His candle was hid under a bushel for six years, and might have staid there had not Barbara Heck taken it off, and compelled his feeble but pure light to shine. His active period in New York extended through three years, when he removed from the city. Not so with Strawbridge: bold, prompt, zealous, he opened his house for preaching so soon as he had a house; and went to saving souls; and this employment he continued for twenty-one years. At his death, in 1781, Societies had been formed in three States, and a strong band of preachers had been raised up, who were going abroad with the glorious tidings."

The Bishop then discusses in a luminous manner the claim officially made by the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church that the first Methodist Church erected in America was built in New York—"John Street." And further on he adds: "The original log-house gave way to a better-built one, three miles southeast, on Pipe Creek; the substitute or successor was called Poulson's Chapel, built in 1783. Of all the costly temples built for the worship of God since that day by the Methodists, none may compare with that original, of log walls and board cover and puncheon seats. And yet, if they had continued in it after they were able to build better, the blessing of God would not have continued with them. In 1800 the stone church, now standing, took the place of Poulson's Chapel. Here in 1801 Bishops Asbury and Whatcoat held a Conference."

Faithful "witnesses" to his saving and keeping power are what Jesus wants—"witnesses" who testify not only with their lips, but also with their characters and their lives. Weakened as many of our churches are by wordliness and a large amount of merely nominal Christianity, there are yet among them few, if any, in which some such "witnesses" cannot be found. But oh, how sorely do we need a multiplication of their number!

AT PRAYER MEETING.

Margaret E. Sangster.

There were only two or three of us
  Who came to the place of prayer;
Came in the teeth of a driving storm,
  But for that we did not care.
Since after our hymns of praise had risen,
  And our earnest prayers were said,
The Master Himself was present there
  And gave us the living bread.

We knew His look on our leader's face,
  So rapt and glad and free.
We felt His touch when our heads were bowed;
  We heard His "Come to Me."
Nobody saw Him lift the latch,
  And none unbarred the door.
But "peace" was His token to every heart,
  And how could we ask for more?

Each of us felt the load of sin
  From the weary shoulder fall,
Each of us dropped the load of care,
  And the grief that was like a pall.
And over our spirits a blessed calm
  Swept in from the jasper sea,
And strength was ours for toil and strife
  In the days that were thence to be.

It was only a handful gathered in
  To the little place of prayer,
Outside were struggling and pain and sin,
  But the Lord Himself was there.
He came to redeem the pledge He gave—
  Wherever His loved ones be,
To stand Himself in the midst of them,
  Though they count but two or three.

And forth we fared in the bitter rain,
  And our hearts had grown so warm.
It seemed like the pelting of summer flowers
  And not the crash of the storm.
"'Twas a time of the dearest privilege
  Of the Lord's right hand," we said,
As we thought of how Jesus Himself had come
  To feed us the living bread.

A LOST OPPORTUNITY.

"Is this seat engaged?"

I glanced up into the straight-looking, brown eyes of a youth of nineteen or thereabouts, and answered "No," as I drew aside my cloak to make more room. But I am absorbed in my own thoughts, and turn again to the window. May Field McKean writes the incident in the Baptist Commonwealth.

"All tickets!" calls the conductor, for it had been the last stop before reaching Jersey City. I fumble in my pocketbook and produce mine. Perhaps my neighbor sees it, for he asks:

"This is the train from Philadelphia, isn't it?"

"Yes."

Something in the eagerness of the question prompts to more than the monosyllable answer, but held back by a foolishly timid reserve always natural toward all but the most congenial friends, but greatly increased by years of illness and aloneness, I let it pass at that. I know that the boy is looking toward me, and I somehow think of my own brother at that age, but still I am silent. Those around me are beginning to reach down bundles and put on wraps, and I put a hand out toward my own.

"Shall I assist you?"

There is nothing obtrusive in his manner as he lifts my cloak to my shoulders—simply the act of a boy who is in the habit of helping his mother or older sister.

"Thank you," I say, and smile a very little as I say it, but almost immediately he has left the seat, and is standing near the door, ready to alight as soon as the now slowing train reaches its destination.

I can see him better there than when he sat beside me. Was it fancy, or was it true, that there was a hungry, asking look in the steady brown eyes? I was sorry then that I had not spoken. Had God sent to me an opportunity to comfort or in some other way help a troubled brother on the pathway of life, and had I deliberately withheld that help? I looked steadily into the quiet face, hoping he would at least glance back toward me, but he kept his eyes the other way, and others were crowding into the aisle between us. It was too late now; the opportunity was gone, but the thought has troubled me ever since.

Why do we withhold so much of ourselves from those whom God means us to help forward? Have we not all felt it ourselves sometimes? The heart is hungry for some word of encouragement, or simply a look of recognition from a friend; it is withheld and the sunshine seems to go out of all the world, the burden of life grows heavy, and we wonder if nobody cares—we almost wonder if God cares. How do we know how much that other soul that has crossed our pathway needs the recognition of sympathy that we could give? We have God to look to. Perhaps that other one has not; what then?—The Presbyterian (Philadelphia).

"THE COUNTRY CHURCH."

In the early days of December there was held in Columbus, Ohio, a convention of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and one of the leading debates was on the welfare of the rural church. The reports of the meeting state that twenty-six speakers took part in this special debate, eleven of whom were college presidents and college professors, seven were secretaries of mission boards, two were secretaries of Y. M. C. A.'s, one a secretary of a Y. W. C. A., and one an editor. Not a single one was a farmer, a country teacher, or a country preacher. The circuit rider was not called in to say a piece. It is said that the majority of these speakers had been reared in country homes, but we are not told why they left the country, or why they remain away from the country, and now that they have become so ardently interested in the welfare of the rural region they might prove their sincerity by taking a pastoral charge composed of these unfortunate churches. It certainly will not be difficult to supply a country charge to any Methodist preacher who feels divinely called to work a rural reformation. Until these urban leaders take on their own shoulders some of the burdens they are so willing to bind on the shoulders of others they may not be surprised if sincere folks see in them a bigger "problem" than they find in the country meeting-house.

In another column of the present issue of the Advocate (the Raleigh Christian Advocate) appears an article giving a somewhat detailed account of this rural church project, and fourteen different aims are proposed. I have read them carefully, and every one of them might be achieved to the fullest degree, and yet the religious life of not a single soul be even touched. They include improvements in health, roads, schools, debating societies, sports, social functions, program-making, selling corn and potatoes, and Saturday as a half-holiday. The one thing which this crowd seems determined on leaving out is the salvation of men from sin. Their sole object is to defame the Church of Christ to the small affairs of peddlers, road commissioners, sanitary policemen, yard sweepers, and social entertainers. Well, it is cause for everlasting thanksgiving that country people are too intelligent, honest, serious, and devout to have their churches turned into any such secular organizations. They did not build them for club-houses in which to hear preachers discuss such subjects as, How to Raise Onions, When to Sell Eggs, and How to Get Holes Out of the Roads. For such purposes they take the Progressive Farmer, the Country Gentleman, or some other good agricultural paper, and one issue of such a paper is worth more than an army of faddists pestering rural saints at the meeting-house.

The question of the country church is after all a matter for the Baptist Church and the Methodist Church. There are so few country churches of other denominations that they do not seriously count. The Baptists and the Methodists have been and are still the builders of churches in the country. There was a time when the Congregationalists and some of the other denominations had country churches, but according to their own confessions this class of their work has declined and passed away. And these are the people who are now so ardent in their talk and show of interest in the "problem of the rural church." They let their's die, and they assume that the Methodists and Baptists have done likewise. It is simply the case of a mother who, by carelessness and indifference and ceaseless activity in social affairs, allowed all her own children to die, and now advertises a course of lectures on how to care for children and rear robust men. The Methodists do not need their advice, and it is made very clear that the Baptists do not intend to take it. Besides all else, until city churches become less worldly, and especially the city churches of the North, the country people here in the South will do well to resist every influence which the urban churches and preachers may wish to exercise upon them. And while our country churches may have their deficiencies, it is cause for thanksgiving that there is not a single one of them, however poor and far away it may be, that is without a pastor. Thousands of broken-hearted penitents yearly find peace with God at their altars, and from them is constantly going a stream of godly people into the city churches, and they are the very bulwark of a sound faith, a simple life, and an ever decaying urban citizenship.

And it is useless to pity the country churches on account of the type of preaching they get. It has been my fortune to keep in touch with the preaching of both city and country churches, and I know beyond a doubt that the country pulpit is, to say the least, as well filled with sound doctrine, sincere faith, unselfish devotion, and constant service as the city pulpit. It is easy to see how those denominations that supply a ministry through a method of calls can not keep their country churches supplied with preachers, and for this reason many of these denominations have lost their country churches, but this does not and can not apply to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and why we should have any concern whatever about this spell of interest which has broken out in certain self-confessed failures in the North is not easy to see. When we take part in such a movement it is much like the woman who was so crazy to be in the style that when the measles broke out in several prominent homes she borrowed a case from a neighbor that she might have a quarantine card on her door. Thanks be unto the good Lord for His favors, our church has no place in such a meeting as the one held recently in Columbus, Ohio. And I earnestly trust the preachers who are sent abroad by our Church into all regions of the land, from the mountain cabin through the dense swamps and forests of the coast regions to the happy section of agricultural prosperity, will be faithful to guard the country church against the invasion of all this modern academic quackery, and continue as they have done in the past, to preach the Word, to rebuke sin, exhort men, and bring mourners into a full knowledge of salvation through Jesus Christ. It is my candid opinion that no worse form of infidelity has yet appeared in the world than this latter day pretense of concern for religious welfare as practiced by a class of arrogant faddists.—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

SPIRITUAL DESTITUTION IN THE NAVY.

Dr. H. K. Carroll, representing the Federal Council of Churches, calls attention to the spiritually destitute conditions prevailing in the army and navy service of the United States. He states that more than one thousand soldiers, manning three forts on the eastern end of Long Island, are without a chaplain. He also states that he has a letter from a mother who has two sons in the navy. One of these reports that there have been no religious services on the battleship to which he is attached for four years, while the other son states that in his two years of service he has not heard a sermon or a prayer by a clergyman.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S VIEW.

President Woodrow Wilson delivered in New York City last week before the Railway Business Association the first of a series of addresses which he contemplates making in defense of his policy of "preparedness." The following is an extract from the President's utterance on that occasion.

"We can no longer be a provincial nation.

"Let no man dare to say, if he would speak the truth, that the question of preparation for national defense is a question of war or of peace.

"If there is one passion more deep-seated in the hearts of our fellow countrymen than another, it is the passion for peace. No nation in the world ever more instinctively turned away from the thought of war than this nation to which we belong. Partly because, in the plentitude of its power, in the unrestricted area of its opportunities, it has found nothing to covet in the possessions and power of other nations. There is no spirit of aggrandizement in America. There is no desire on the part of any thoughtful and conscientious American man to take one foot of territory from any nation in the world. And I myself share to the bottom of my heart that profound love for peace. I have sought to maintain peace against very great and sometimes very unfair odds, and I am ready at any time to use every power that is in me to prevent such a catastrophe as war coming upon this country.

"So that it is not permissible for any man to say with anxiety that the defense of the nation has the least tinge in it of desire for power which can be used to bring on war. But, gentlemen, there is something that the American people love better than they love peace. They love the principles upon which their political life is founded. They are ready at any time to fight for the vindigation of their character and their honor.

"They will at no time seek a contest, but they will at no time cravenly avoid it. Because, if there is one thing that the country ought to fight for and that every nation ought to fight for, it is the integrity of its own convictions. We cannot surrender our convictions. I would rather surrender territory than surrender those ideals which are the staff of life for the soul itself. And because we hold certain ideals we have thought it was right we should hold them for others as well as for ourselves.

"America has more than once given evidence of the generosity and disinterestedness of its love of liberty. It has been willing to fight for the liberty of others as well as for its own liberty. The world sneered when we set out for the liberation of Cuba, but the world does not sneer any longer. The world knows now what it was then loath to believe, that a nation can sacrifice its own interests and its own blood for the sake of the liberty and happiness of another people.

"And whether by one process or another, we have made ourselves in some sort the champions of free government and national sovereignty in both continents of this hemisphere. So that there are certain obligations, which every American knows, that we have undertaken. The first and primary obligation is the maintenance of the integrity of our own sovereignty—which goes as of course. There is also the maintenance of our liberty to develop our political institutions without hindrance and, last of all, there is the determination, the obligation, to stand as the strong brother of all those in this hemisphere who will maintain the same principles and follow the same ideals of liberty."

THE EARLY AND THE LATTER RAIN.

By Rev. C. H. Ellis.

Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord. His going forth is prepared as the morning; and he shall come unto us as the rain, as the latter and former rain unto the earth.—Hosea vi, 3.

For the best production the crops must have the early rain. To mature and fill out the growing grain, the latter rain is needed. Lack of rain leaves the ground dry and hard, so that deep plowing is not possible.

Unless God's Spirit is given as showers that water the earth, the heart is too dry and hard to allow suitable preparation to receive the seed in a condition for them to grow and mature. The wayside hearer represents the beaten, hard path, leaving the seed exposed, so that the birds of the air pick up the grain. So Satan takes away the Word, the divine seed, out of the heart unprepared for its reception.

Was not the Jerusalem Pentecost the early rain?

The present is a time of vast seed sowing. The circulation of millions of copies of the Bible in more than four hundred languages and dialects, the awakening interest in Sunday schools and young people's societies, the Y. M. C. A. organization, the Laymen's Missionary movement, and above all, the world-wide missionary movements of the Church—all this indicates a world-wide sowing.

Now what is needed, but the latter rain to bring up and ripen the seed sown?

Are we expecting, waiting and praying as did the Church at Jerusalem for the first rain? They were "all with one accord in one place, praying."

Later the Gentile pentecost came after days of prayer, coupled with fasting.

"Savior, visit thy plantation,
Grant us, Lord, a gracious rain;
All will come to desolation
Unless thou return again."

Dr. Lovick Pierce said: "A religious revival and a revival religion are by no means the same. The former can be manufactured by human agency—preaching, singing, etc.; but the latter God gives in answer to believing prayer."

May we not take, as final proof of spiritual progress, the contribution of much money to benevolent and church purposes and a larger increase in the membership on profession of faith? Is it not true that apostate churches have led and are leading in these things? Sad, but true!

Satan would eliminate the divine and supernatural from religion. He would undermine faith in the divine and supernatural in the great Founder of the Church, the only begotten Son of God. He would substitute the form for the power of godliness.

Read and ponder St. Paul's strong statement on this point in 2d Timothy 3:1-5: "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof."

Does not this largely suit present conditions? Ought not those who know God to unite in earnest prayer for the latter rain in its season?

"Lord, thy help is greatly needed, Help can only come from Thee."

"THE MINISTER AND THE TOILERS OF EARTH."

It is a great thing in a minister's make-up to be human enough to reveal Christ to humanity.

Some preachers have lost sight altogether of the human side of their make-up in developing their spiritual natures. They are so pious and divine that their company, to the great mass of humanity, is undesirable. They are irksome—perfect bores. They are good men—everybody says they are good—but they know nothing of the temptations of youth, the discouragements and disappointments of middle age, the loneliness and anxieties of old age, or the frivolity and fun of youth. They know nothing of the joys, the sorrows, the heart-breakings of the toilers of earth. They spend too much time in their books and not enough on their knees and among the people. I love to read books and wish I could read more; but there is one book that lies open before me every day, "Life"—"Humanity." I see something new, something interesting in humanity nearly every day.

The toilers of earth compose the vast majority of mankind. There glows within the secret recesses of their hearts "a flame"—a hope that some day they will have laid enough away for old age, for the education of the children, for comfort and ease. The storms of life sweep over them and the "flames" are submerged under the sea of time. I find in my study of them that there is a need of a gospel that will comfort and uplift them and give them a hope that will cause them to rest serenely and wait patiently while they toil on through the storms. That gospel is the Christian religion—a gospel for the poor.

The minister who can live this gospel in the presence of these toilers and reveal Jesus to them is carrying out the great purpose of God, and is doing what Jesus told John's disciples to tell him: "The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them."

I found a song the other day which to me is a source of inspiration:

"We are often tossed or driven on the restless sea of time,
Somber skies and howling tempest oft succeed a bright sunshine.
In that land of perfect day, when the mists have rolled away,
We will understand it better by and by.

We are often destitute of the things that life demands,
Want of food and want of shelter, thirsty hill and barren lands;
We are trusting in the Lord, and according to his Word,
We will understand it better by and by.

Trials dark on every hand, and we cannot understand
All the ways that God would lead us to the blessed promised land;
But He guides us with his eye and we'll follow 'till we die,
For we'll understand it better by and by.

Temptations, hidden snares, often take us unawares,
And our hearts are made to bleed for many a thoughtless word or deed,
And we wonder why the test when we try to do our best,
But we'll understand it better by and by.

Chorus—
By and by, when the morning comes,
When the saints of God are gathered home,
We'll tell the story—how we've overcome;
For we'll understand it better by and by."

CLAIM TO BE FOLLOWING AMERICA.

Bishop E. E. Hoss, in an interesting travel letter from Korea published recently in the Christian Advocate (Nashville), says of Japan's decrees forbidding the teaching of religion in the schools of Korea:

"The recent decrees concerning the Christian schools are arousing serious fear. As I have said before in these letters, these schools have been a great benefaction to the country. They were, in fact, the first movement toward real education in Korea. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been spent in founding and equipping them, and heretofore they have been suffered to proceed without serious restrictions. Now, however, the government, having begun to set up a comprehensive system of schools at the public expense and having made a sort of cast-iron schedule for them, has determined that the Christian schools, which are dependent solely on private liberality for their existence, shall be required in all respects to adjust themselves to the government standards. Who shall teach, what shall be the courses of study and the textbooks, and what the conditions of entrance aud of graduation are all to be settled by the civil authorities. The Bible in particular is to be excluded, and no religious instruction of any sort is to be allowed on the premises. With an apparent display of leniency, it is announced that the schools may have ten years in which to conform to all these requirements: but they are notified that they must begin at once to get ready for the change. With an irony which is perhaps unconscious, the authorities are proclaiming that these new measures are being taken in the interest of religious liberty and are going so far as to say that they are simply following the example of America. That is a joke. I have heard in America and even in Tennessee a good deal of shallow and silly talk against the wisdom of education by the Churches, but not even under the illuminating decision of our Supreme Court has it yet been made impossible for the Churches to set up their own institutions of learning. That may come later. But I do not believe that a vigorous and progressive nation like Japan will fail to discover that what it now affirms to be in the defense of religious liberty is really a piece of irreligious persecution."—Methodist News Bureau (Nashville.)

OUR REPRESENTATIVE CHURCH: FIELD OBSERVATIONS.

By Rev. S. S. McKenney.

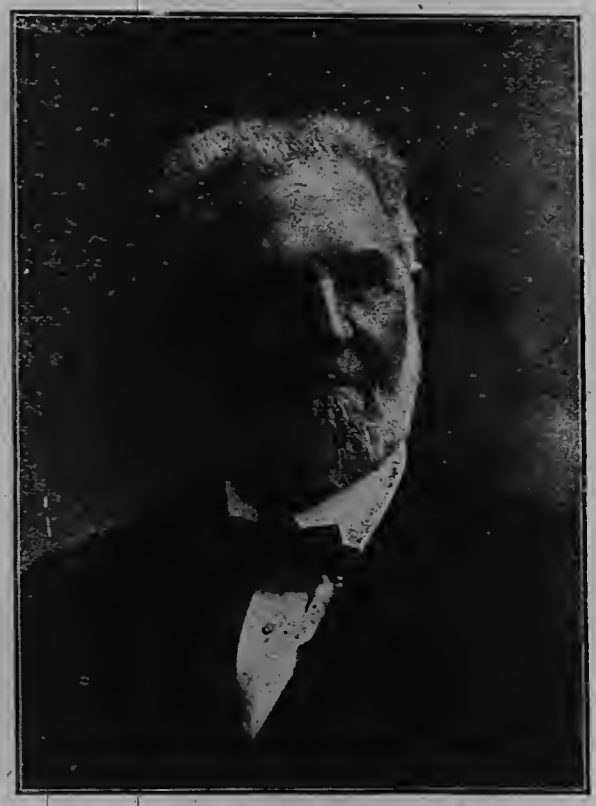
Having recently completed a round of official visits to seventeen Annual Conferences in the interest of the Washington City Representative Church, and having had sufficient opportunity to ascertain the sentiment which prevails concerning this cause, I am disposed to believe that some of the impressions received during this tour will be of general interest. Hence, I give the following brief report as an evidence of the favorable consideration with which this great enterprise is everywhere received. Since my election as Special Agent on October 10, 1915, I have visited the following Conferences: Tennessee, West Texas, West Oklahoma, Northwest Texas, Texas, Virginia, Louisiana, Western North Carolina, Upper South Carolina, South Georgia, Central Texas, Mississippi, North Mississippi, South Carolina, North Texas, Alabama, and Florida. Without exception, I have found in every one of these great bodies a spirit of optimism and enthusiasm regarding the final outcome of this enterprise, and in many of them I found a generous co-operation which was gratifying in the extreme. Twelve of the above Conferences had previously subscribed amounts ranging from $2500 to $10,000, while two others on this round pledged themselves to the task of raising $8000. As a means of paying off the subscriptions already made, some of the Conferences appointed special days to be observed during the present year: some appointed special committees, with certain plans adopted; others took personal pledges from the members of the Conferences to cover said subscriptions, while still others placed their subscriptions as regular assessments upon the Conferences. To summarize: The amounts which were definitely provided for on a systematic basis as a result of my recent tour and which will be raised chiefly during the present year will aggregate $31,000. Twenty-one Conferences to date have subscribed $111,000 in amounts which range from $1000 to $15,000, with approximately one-fifth of the entire amount paid. Moreover, other Conferences are rapidly falling into line and making liberal assessments, while hundreds of individuals in all parts of the Church are, by contributions, large and small, becoming identified with this great movement. I am almost daily receiving contributions from those whose names are on our subscription rolls. There is every reason for encouragement upon the part of those who have this enterprise in hand, and the Commission is confidently anticipating that work will begin on this building in our Capital at no distant date.

Weatherford, Tex., Jan. 19, 1916.

REV. G. W. BACHMAN TRANSLATED.

A telegram from Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, presiding elder of the Winona (Miss.) District, on January 26, brought us the information that Rev. G. W. Bachman had died on the preceding night—Tuesday, January 25, 1916. As had been stated in the Advocate previously, he had been seriously ill for some time and his decease was not unexpected. He attended the late session of the North Mississippi Conference at New Albany, which he greatly enjoyed, but returned home much fatigued and was scarcely out of the house after the early part of December. In spite of all that his physicians and the tender nursing of loved ones could do for him, he grew steadily weaker and it soon became evident that the hour of his home-going was not far away. He was rational most of the time, suffered but little pain, and, almost up to the last, recognized and conversed with visiting friends and his brethren in the ministry. Calmly and unafraid, he faced the future, and left a noble testimony to those about him.

His faithful daughter, Miss Leila Bachman, writes us as follows: "He had not a fear or a doubt. He said, "The God that I have loved and served so long is able to sustain me to the end, and to supply all my needs." She also thus refers to his last day: "He was awake most of the time, but as evening came on he grew increasingly quiet and breathed easier and more gently until 9:40 p. m. when he ceased to breathe. Brothers Duncan, Lipscomb and Wood were with us."



The Late Rev. G. W. Bachman, of the North Mississippi Conference.

Our pastor at Winona, Rev. W. N. Duncan, sends us the following account of the obsequies: "Services in honor of our dear brother, Rev. G. W. Bachman, were held in the Methodist Church here this morning, January 27, at 11 o'clock. In spite of the downpour of rain, a large number of friends attended. The pastor was assisted by Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, Rev. J. A. Bowen, Rev. J. J. Brooks, Rev. J. C. Park, Rev. J. A. Hall, Rev. J. R. Countiss, Rev. W. L. Duren, and Rev. O. W. Bradley. Brothers Bowen, Brooks, Park, Hall, and Bradley, former pastors of the bereaved family, spoke in terms of tenderest love and high appreciation of our departed friend. After these appropriate exercises, the body of God's faithful servant was laid to rest in the cemetery of this city. Deeply do we feel bereaved, but we do not sorrow as those who have no hope."

The news of Brother Bachman's death will touch with sadness thousands of hearts in Mississippi, where perhaps he was known personally to more people than any other Christian minister. His was indeed a long and useful career. He was born in Carroll County, in the same neighborhood in which the late Rev. T. J. Newell had his birth, some seventy-six years ago. He was licensed to preach at Pittsboro, Miss., in 1860, and joined the Memphis Conference at Aberdeen in the fall of the same year. His first appointment was the Lagrange Circuit, in Tennessee, which embraced sixteen churches. After this—during the stormy period of the Civil War—he wrought for four years in the then undeveloped Mississippi Delta, and helped to plant Methodism in that difficult but fruitful field. He had been in the itinerant ministry for 55 years, 54 of which were spent in the active work, and one on the honor roll as a superannuate. For thirty-one years he was in the colportage work, and in that important service he had no superior in the whole connection. He scattered all over Mississippi wholesome Christian literature, which has exerted an immeasurable influence for good. What a harvest will be reaped in eternity from that widespread sowing!

Of our brother's faith, high character, unwavering fidelity to the Master, studious habits, unflagging industry, and ardent devotion to the Church, the space is not now at our disposal to write. He wrought nobly and has left a record which speaks for itself. No one can ever faithfully write the history of Methodism in Mississippi without giving him an honored place in it.

By request of the family, Rev. J. R. Countiss is preparing a sketch of the deceased, which we hope to publish at an early date.

"HERNANDO DE SOTO"—THE GREAT AMERICAN EPIC.

By the Late Judge Walter Malone, of Memphis, Tenn.

From
THE ARKANSAS GAZETTE
Little Rock, Ark.

"Poetically considered, one of the most beautiful parts of this really great work is that in which occurs the vision of the dying explorer, when he is taken up by the spirit of Codro to heaven, where all of the past and future are unveiled and he sees the evolution of the world from chaos, the reptilian age succeeded by the human advent, the slow ascent of man from the cave dweller to the highest type of the twentieth century civilization, and the prediction of his ultimate and glorious destiny."

From
THE NEWS-SCIMITAR
Memphis, Tennessee.

"Judge Walter Malone's anxiously awaited book 'Hernando De Soto,' has made its appearance and will be hailed with delight. It is a historical romance in blank verse, that flows majestically from beginning to end, interrupted here and there by sparkling lyric ripples that give relief to the mind, which otherwise might become fatigued under the constant strain of the continued theme.

"The rich romance surrounding the life of De Soto has been woven into a texture of brilliant hues by Judge Malone and no one can begin the book without becoming absorbed in it and continuing to the end."

From
PROF. E. H. RANDLE, LL. D.,
of Mississippi

"I have just finished reading 'Hernando De Soto.' I have always regarded him (Walter Malone) as a poet whose wings time would never deign to clip, but I had never considered the lofty aerial heights to which his wings would bear him, beyond the storm clouds and the tallest mountain peaks, beyond the heights to which the sea eagle, the swiftest and most daring of sea birds, ever essayed to rise, yet he rose over all these."

Our Advocate Campaign.

At the meeting of the Publishing Committee of the Advocate last October it was decided to adopt as a goal for the year 1916—TEN THOUSAND SUBSCRIBERS. As a means of realizing this aim it was resolved to make an earnest effort early in the year to secure at least 3500 new subscriptions, as follows: Mississippi Conference, 1300; North Mississippi Conference, 1300; Louisiana Conference, 900. Dr. I. W. Cooper, Dr. J. M. Henry, and Rev. W. W. Woollard were named as a committee to co-operate with the Publisher and Editor in the execution of this plan. The three Annual Conferences at their late sessions took action endorsing this movement and accepting the apportionments of new subscribers to be secured that had been made to them. We give below some statements bearing upon this undertaking.

A Word from Dr. Cooper.

The Mississippi Conference, at Laurel, agreed to make a special effort to secure 1300 new subscribers to the New Orleans Christian Advocate. As the representative of the Conference on the Executive Committee of the Publishing Committee, I suggest the following apportionment:

Jackson District	225
Meridian District	200
Newton District	175
Seashore District	165
Brookhaven District	200
Hattiesburg District	170
Port Gibson District	165

The following brethren are requested to look after the interests of the Advocate in their respective districts: J. M. Morse, J. L. Decell, C. M. Chapman, T. W. Adams, J. G. Galloway, J. E. Gray, H. P. Lewis, Jr. I. W. COOPER.

Brookhaven, Miss.

A Statement by Rev. W. W. Woollard.

The following sets forth the action taken by the North Mississippi Conference:

Inasmuch as the Publishing Committee of our official organ, the New Orleans Christian Advocate, inaugurated a campaign to secure 3500 new subscribers for that paper, which will give it then 10,000 subscribers, 1300 of which additional subscribers the North Mississippi Conference has been asked to secure:

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves to make an earnest effort to secure this number of new subscribers and make the following apportionment by districts:

Aberdeen District	165
Columbus District	165
Corinth District	160
Durant District	160
Greenville District	160
Holly Springs District	160
Sardis District	160
Winona District	170

Resolved, 2. That we ask the presiding elders of the several districts to bring this apportionment to the attention of the pastors and recommend that at the District Stewards' meeting an apportionment of these assignments be made to the several charges on such basis as will best secure the full number of subscriptions.

The Secretary of the Conference sent out the above apportionments to the presiding elders, with a view to enabling the district stewards of the several districts to indicate what is expected in the way of new subscriptions from each charge. My district stewards authorized me to make such a distribution of the 165 subscriptions apportioned to this district as in my judgment would secure the best results. I will seek to enlist the hearty co-operation of the pastors and some good worker at every church and endeavor to see that the matter is given prompt attention. In some places I am going to try to get started the plan of having the churches subscribe for a number of copies for the membership. I do not know whether this would succeed, but I am going to give it a trial. Especially ought all the officials of a charge to take the Conference organ. How would it do to revive the plan of carrying on an "Honor Roll" the names of the charges in which every official receives the paper" W. W. WOOLLARD.

Columbus, Miss.

Brother Woollard's statement is a very suggestive one. We will take pleasure in reviving our "Honor Roll." Let it be understood that the term "official" in this connection is limited to stewards. We should also be glad to print a list—a still better "Honor Roll"—of the pastors and charges that may succeed in placing the Advocate in every Methodist family.

Brother Woollard's proposed plan of having a church take a number of Advocates for its membership strikes us as a good one. Dr. E. G. B. Mann has for some years been advocating this method as the final solution of the Church paper problem. Be that as it may, it is worth a trial. Certainly a church ought at least to help its poorer members in this respect. We are often asked to send the Advocate gratis to some member of a congregation who is not able to pay for it. Why should a Church of several hundred members shift that expense to our struggling Conference organ, when it could easily bear it?

There are two or three other things that we wish to say:

1. If we are to reach our goal of 10,000 subscribers, the matter of securing renewals must also be faithfully looked after. Let every pastor send to the office and get a list of the subscribers in his charge. If his members receive mail at more than one place, let all post-offices be given.

2. It is our purpose to print in the last number of the Advocate of each month, after January, an exhibit showing what each district and charge has done in the way of securing renewals and new subscriptions.

3. Any plans that may be adopted for the furtherance of this campaign are not intended to interfere with individual effort in behalf of the Advocate. Let our patrons, if they wish to do so, continue to send in their subscriptions direct (if there is no better way than that), and we shall appreciate anything that any friend may help us to do toward securing renewals or new subscribers in their communities. These will be placed to the credit of the districts and charges from which they come in the exhibits that we shall, from time to time, make. If you are pleased with the Advocate, tell your neighbors about it, and urge them to subscribe for it. If we are to conserve and promote the interests of Southern Methodism we must get our Church papers into the homes of our people, into which not a little poisonous literature is going. There is no more important work than this.

ACTION OF THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

From the Forthcoming Conference Journal.

"New Orleans Christian Advocate.—Dr. J. M. Henry presented the following resolution, which was adopted:

"In keeping with the action of the New Orleans Advocate Publishing Committee,

"Be it Resolved, That we heartily approve of the effort to raise the subscription list of the paper to 10,000, and that we will undertake to secure 900 net increase, our pro rata of this addition."

The following has been suggested as an equitable division of the 900 new subscriptions to be secured in Louisiana among the several districts of the Conference:

Alexandria	125
Baton Rouge	110
Lafayette	110
Monroe	125
New Orleans	125
Ruston	150
Shreveport	125

AN INTERESTING VOLUME.

"The Traitor's Son" has just come from the press. It is a story of unusual interest. The literary and artistic talents of the authoress, Mrs. Ruth Shartel McVoy, are strongly pronounced. This is her first book and evinces a creative power which is the promise of other. Her faculty in presenting situations which are unexpected and which arouse the most intense interest is marvelous. There is not a dull page in the whole volume. The movement from beginning to close is graphic and animated. While dealing with historical and touches on scenes north of the Mason and Dixon line, there is a Southern coloring to it which can not but please and entertain a large circle of Southern readers who eagerly welcome the productions of those among them who are possessed of literary genius. I predict for this book a large sale. S. H. WERLEIN.

CHURCH EXTENSION AID.

Brethren interested will please remember that no application will be considered by the Board of Church Extension at its Annual Meeting May 7, that has not been approved by the Conference Board or its Executive Committee. These Conference Boards, or their Executive Committees, meet early in March to approve applications and transact such other business as comes properly before them.

When writing for application blanks information should be given as to whether aid is desired for church or parsonage, and as to the purpose of the trustees to apply for aid to the General or Conference Board, or both. A line to this office will secure application blank accompanied by detailed instruction.

Delay in preparing applications, and therefore failure to place same before the Conference Board, does not constitute an "emergency case." All concerned will please take due notice and govern themselves accordingly.

Louisville, Ky. W. F. McMURRY,
Corresponding Secretary.

LOUISIANA CHURCH EXTENSION BOARD.

The Executive Committee of the Church Extension Board of the Louisiana Annual Conference will meet in the First Methodist Church of Shreveport on March 14, at 9 a. m. All applications for aid from the General Board should be in the hands of Rev. C. D. Atkinson (the secretary) by March 12 so that he may have everything in readiness for the meeting. We cordially invite the presiding elders, and all others who may have business with the committee, to be present. Application blanks can be had by writing to Rev. C. D. Atkinson of Shreveport.

One of the greatest national questions of the present time is whether or not the United States will keep the Philippine Islands. The Democrats hold to the view that they ought to be set free and the Republicans to the view that they ought to continue for some time to come, as they are at present, under the control and protection of our Government. Senator John Sharp Williams of Mississippi is an able defender of the Democratic side of the controversy and his arguments in its behalf are very impressive.

A trunk full of little gifts showing their appreciation for what has been and is being done for them by the American people was recently sent to President Wilson by the Belgian children. Dolls, pictures, busts of the Belgian royal family, and embroidery were included among the presents. According to Mr. P. H. Chadbourne, a representative of the Belgian Relief Commission, the greatest need of the Belgians at the present time is clothing. Many of the children are forced to wear flour sacks for shirts, holes being made in them for their head and arms to go through. The relief of the Belgians is a worthy cause and all Americans who can, ought to contribute to it even if they have to make a sacrifice to do so.

The American people seem to be well supplied with butter. A special train of twenty-five cars loaded with this product made the trip from Chicago to New York in two days so that the consignment, which is said to have been the largest single shipment ever made, could be loaded on two vessels sailing for Russia, where it is probable that butter made in America has never been shipped before. On Jan. 1 there were 39,338,000 pounds of butter in storage in the forty-five warehouses in New York City, this being ten million pounds more than the amount in storage there one year ago, and large quantities are ready to be shipped to New York from many of the inland cities as soon as a place for it can be made in the refrigerator plants located there. If this country's annual output of butter can find a good place in the world's market, it will be a great thing for the American people.

PEACE AT ANY PRICE.

By J. D. Barbee.

Dear Mr. Editor: Observing that you advertise in your personal columns of this week's Advocate the last number of the Missionary Voice, the pacificist number, as a free gift, I yield to a temptation which I had put aside, and now enter my protest against the whole business.

When I read the number of The Voice in question I felt indignant and humiliated that such a publication should be issued to represent our Church. It displays John Bright, a Quaker, who might be excused on account of the demands of his religion for advocating peace at any price, when it might have quoted his great contemporary, Mr. Gladstone, said to be "the greatest Christian in the world," in quite a different sense. Mr. Gladstone stood for peace, but he also stood for war.

The Voice does not truly represent that Church whose coreligionists and predecessors followed Washington in the Revolution, Jackson in 1812, Taylor to the halls of the Montezumas, Robert E. Lee to Appomattox, and Joe Wheeler to Cuba. Perhaps it represents Andrew Carnegie, whose warfare has been of a different type.

The same mail in which I received The Voice brought me the North American Review for January, and in one of its editorials I found the following paragraph which is commended to The Voice and those whom it represents: "We have known some churches and foreign missionary societies to deprecate 'militarism.' They have told us how many missionaries could be supported, or how many copies of the Bible could be printed and circulated in heathen parts, for the cost of a single warship. Yet whenever a 'Boxer' outbreak occurs, or mission stations anywhere in the world are in danger of attack, none are more prompt and exigent than they in asking for and in confidently expecting speedy and efficient succor from the navy and army of the nation. How can that succor be given if the Government does not provide the means which they have been opposing?"

MRS. SALLIE MARKHAM MOUNGER—AN APPRECIATION.

She was a little girl when I first knew her. My father's family came to be neighbors to her father's—"the plantations joined." She was a radiantly beautiful little girl, with bright eyes, rosy and dimpled cheeks and curling hair, and was joyous in her life, and loving, hence loved by everybody. Her presence was ever a ray of sunshine. Her singing, while yet a girl, created a sensation in the rustic little church that we built and used after the Federal soldiers had destroyed the more pretentious "Featherstun's Chapel." I can hear her now with memory's clear hearing, and I see her in visions of that long ago.

She grew to womanhood without losing the beauty, charm and sweetness of her childhood. I left the parental home and the community with its rustic church, while she was yet a girl, and when I saw her again she was a mature woman, a wife and mother, still lovely in face and spirit.

Later, after years of widowhood, she became the wife of Dr. E. H. Mounger, and I felt that there was a peculiar fitness in that union. I was in course of time a guest at sundry times in their home, and found that my thought was to the fullest extent a true one. To me she was, to the last, the radiantly beautiful Sallie I had known so long ago—only grown older and maturer, but none the less lovely in life and features.

Her going, when I read of it, came as a distinct shock to me, and the sensation lingers. One by one the lovelinesses of the long ago are passing. I am beginning to understand that sigh of our poet:

"O for the touch of a vanished hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still."

Many fair hands and sweet voices from the old community, where first I met our Sallie, are "vanished" and "still."

My sympathies and prayers are for my beloved and scholarly brother, left lonely by her going.

The Home Circle

NAUGHTY BETTY.

By J. G. Cronback.

A naughty girl, called Betty Roy,
Would laugh and sing, and shout for joy,
And toss about her golden curls,
When she could play with other girls.

But my, oh my, how she would shirk,
To help her mother do some work,
She'd pout and cry, and stamp her feet,
Upon the floor so white and neat.

One day, dear mother bade her stay,
And with her little sister play;
While she went out to see Miss Payne,
Who lived across the little lane.

This was too much for Betty dear,
To be alone with sister here;
She stamped her feet and closed the door,
Then threw herself upon the floor.

And there she lay and kicked and cried,
And rolled around from side to side,
When lo! the door wide open flew,
And many beasts came rushing through.

Lions and tigers, mules and cows,
Horses, bulls and even some sows,
Round Betty now they marched and tramped,
And, just like her, they stamped and stamped.

With open mouths and glaring eyes,
They told the naughty girl to rise,
The lions roared, the horses neighed,
The mules said "he haw"—she afraid.

They rushed on her with heated breath,
All bent on crushing her to death;
A moan, a cry, a piercing scream,
And she awoke—'twas but a dream.

She rubbed her eyes, then looked around,
For lo! she heard another sound;
The door again wide open flew,
And mother dear came rushing through.

In eager haste she quickly rose,
And in her arms she nestled close,
She told the awful dream she had,
And said, "I'll ne'er again be bad."

"Yes, father," answered Bob, hastily gathering up his books.

"What about your sum?"

The boy flushed. "It will take only a few minutes."

"Then you have not finished!" said Mr. Barker, sharply. "When will you learn to speak the truth, Bob? I can never rely on your word."

He left the room, and, after hesitating a few minutes, Bob followed.

Downstairs he found Arthur waiting.

"They have gone on. What's kept you?" he asked.

Bob looked glum. "Father's been rowing me because I hadn't finished my lessons for tomorrow"—

He stopped, flushing as he realized that again he was not speaking the exact truth. "At least, I mean—oh, bother! Never mind! Look here, I've brought a ball. Let's play catches as we go along."

Their fathers had business at a farm three miles away. At the gate Farmer Brown was waiting. The boys were told they might go where they liked, look at everything, and help themselves to the gooseberries in the garden.

The farmer and his visitors went away, and Bob and Arthur, looking round for amusement, saw an empty hay-cart on its way to the field.

"Let's go down in it," said Arthur, "and come back on the next."

They enjoyed themselves in this way till something fresh caught their fancy.

"The cows are coming in," said Bob. "Perhaps they will let us milk them."

The man was quite agreeable, and, when the animals were in the shed, gave the boys their first lesson.

"I shall be a farmer when I grow up," said Bob. "It's jolly interesting."

"Will you?" replied his friend, doubtfully. "I should like it for a time, but not for always. I say, let's go for some gooseberries. Mr. Brown said we might. I'm thirsty."

They soon found the kitchen garden. The gooseberry and currant bushes were well covered with fruit. After feasting for a few minutes, Bob made another discovery. "Look at those cherries! Let's get some."

He was about to pluck some, when there was a crash of broken glass. A cucumber-frame which stood close against the wall of the house was broken into shivers.

At this moment the farmer came round the corner with his visitors. "Hullo, who's done this?" he demanded, as the boys approached.

"I didn't," said Bob. "I was too far away."

"And I didn't," repeated Arthur.

"Balls can travel a good distance," said the farmer, grimly, as he stooped down and took one out of the frame. "I'm afraid one of the young gentlemen isn't telling the truth."

"Hold hard, farmer!" said Mr. Bruce, sharply. "That's no proof. There is more than one ball in the world."

"Perhaps the young gentlemen can show theirs," said Mr. Brown, shortly. "I saw them playing with one as they came up the road."

Both boys felt in their pockets for the ball they had been using, but to their astonishment and uneasiness, no ball was forthcoming.

"We must have dropped it somewhere," said Bob, nervously.

Mr. Bruce spoke slowly. "I don't understand it, Mr. Brown. I see your side of the question, and quite admit that most people would give the boys credit for having done it; therefore I will give half toward the repairs. But you understand it is a gift—I'm not paying. When my boy says he hasn't done a thing, he hasn't done it. I can trust his word."

Mr. Barker looked at Bob, who was shifting from one foot to the other, and said briefly, "I will pay the other half."

It was not a cheerful walk home, and at the Barkers' gate they parted. Bob followed his father into the sitting room.

"Father," he broke out, as soon as the door was shut, "it was too bad of you! I said I hadn't done it. Why did you pay Farmer Brown?"

Mr. Barker looked sadly at his son.

"Bob," he said, "I would willingly have given three times the amount to have been able to say as Mr. Bruce did, 'I can trust my boy's word;' but, unfortunately, I couldn't."

Bob flushed scarlet. But at this moment there was the sound of wheels, and Farmer Brown was seen descending from his trap.

"I have come to beg your pardon, sir. The young gentlemen were telling the truth, after all. My little youngster's nursery is just above the cucumber-frame, and my wife tells me he had a ball while the nursemaid's back was turned, and dropped it out of the window. I found your boy's ball in the stable soon afterward. I saw you didn't believe his word, so I thought I had better come at once for fear he got into trouble."

"Are you going to Mr. Bruce's?" inquired Mr. Barker.

"Well, no, sir. The fact is, I'm very busy, and he seemed so very cock-sure of his son that I thought it wouldn't matter. Perhaps you will explain when you see him, and return his share of this."

He placed the money on the table as he spoke, and hastily retired.

"I have misjudged you, my boy," said Mr. Barker, putting his hand on Bob's shoulder.

Bob looked up at the kind touch and tone, and spoke impulsively. "It's my own fault, father. I'm very sorry."

Then he added, rather shyly, "I would like you to speak of me as Mr. Bruce does of Arthur. I will try to do better."

The time came when Mr. Parker also could say, proudly, "I can trust my boy's word!" C. E. Thouger, in "Chatterbox."

TEACH THE CHILD A SONG.

Encourage your little one to sing. Music lessens care and heartache. Often and often the words of a song, the sweet melody, linger in the heart after the voice is silent, and keep alive the courage which has almost died; anxiety and heart pain cause heart disease, and after that quickly comes death. Song sweetens toil, and it is imperative that parents and teachers should aim to increase this means of happiness for the children, if for no other reason than to strengthen their minds and hearts for the labors to be borne in mature years.—The Presbyterian.

Editorial

A WHOLESOME UTTERANCE.

Bishop J. H. McCoy is quoted as having made the following utterance:

"The minister ought to save himself for the higher and weightier work of his ministry. Preachers who cease to be prophets and become business managers are bleached and empty when they come before the people. A man can't preach who gets his inspiration out of the Ladies' Aid Society supper. The pulpit is the preacher's throne of power. The preacher who forgets this is cheating the laymen at both ends. He is taking work they should do and giving them nothing on Sunday. If we are to hold the future, we must learn the lesson of putting some things in other hands and giving ourselves to the ministry of the Word."

In our opinion, the foregoing advice is sound and timely. To be sure, a minister cannot afford to become indifferent to the various assessments upon his charge for benevolent causes; nor can he wholly disregard the social claims that are made upon him. He must to some extent keep in touch with all proper interests and activities of the Church; but there is still left considerable room for the exercise of judgment in determining upon what he shall chiefly expend his time and strength. And there ought to be no hesitancy in admitting that a pastor's highest and most important duty is to minister spiritually to the souls of men. This must be done by pastoral visiting of the right kind and by effective work in the pulpit. Neither of these forms of service can be dispensed with without the impairment of a preacher's efficiency as an ambassador of Christ, and a consequent loss to the cause; but it is not always easy to strike a correct balance between the two. This, however, every pastor should faithfully endeavor to do.

Careful preparation for the work of the pulpit is a necessity, if a man wishes his ministry to be successful in the truest and fullest sense. The importance of preaching as a means of extending the Kingdom is clearly set forth in the Scriptures, and to neglect or minify it is to depreciate the method upon which God has placed the chief emphasis. The wise pastor will cling to his habits of study and his seasons of devotion, that he may be able to feed his people and build them up in Christ. He will seek so to organize and arrange his work that he will be able "to put first things first." This was what the Apostles did when they had deacons constituted to serve tables and look after the business of the Church, that they might give themselves "continually to prayer and the ministry of the word." We are inclined to think that better results would be achieved by the Church in this day if there were less disposition to start laymen to preaching and to have preachers perform the work that laymen ought to do. We believe in a divine call to the ministry—in men specially commissioned and set apart to be God's spokesmen and to minister in holy things. The notion spreading among us that there is no difference between a minister and a layman as regards their relation to God's work is Campbellism—not Methodism.

But did not Wesley have lay preachers? Yes—but Wesley's lay preachers belonged to the laity only in the sense that they did not have the ordination given to its clergy by the Established Church, of which Wesley was a minister, and to which he gave his allegiance. Never were men more truly called of God to preach than they were, and most of them devoted their whole time to the work of the ministry.

But are not many of the pulpits of the British Wesleyan Church filled every Sunday by laymen? This is stated to be true; but why adopt the methods of a Church which is declining—which for eight or nine years in succession has had a decrease in membership? For our part, we prefer to have an unsecularized ministry to study and expound the Holy Scriptures and consecrated laymen to look after the business interests of the Church and to do personal work for the Master. This we conceive to be the more Scriptural and the wiser way.

THE DEMOCRATIC PRIMARY IN LOUISIANA.

In the Democratic primary election, held in Louisiana on January 25, Colonel R. G. Pleasant was nominated for Governor over Lieutenant Governor Barret, the opposing candidate, by a phenomenal majority of more than 50,000 votes. As most of our readers perhaps know, the question of prohibition figured largely in this contest, Mr. Barret being committed to the extension of the voting unit on that issue from the parish to the Congressional District, and to letting the voters of the State during his term, if elected, pass upon the proposition to suppress the sale of liquor throughout the entire commonwealth, while Colonel Pleasant vigorously opposed these measures. As a result, the triumph of the latter, together with the representation that the liquor forces will be stronger in both Houses of the new Legislature than they were in the preceding one, has caused it to be proclaimed abroad that the prohibition cause has been struck a very severe blow in the State—one from which it will not soon recover.

We do not, however, concur in this view. We believe that the prohibition movement in the State would have been appreciably strengthened if Mr. Barret had won, and that very likely it will suffer in some measure as a result of the failure of the effort that was made to extend it; but, in our opinion, any check that it may receive will be only temporary. "No question is ever settled until it is settled right." Moreover, it is admitted on all sides that the prohibitionists were divided in the late contest and that the vote polled by Mr. Barret by no means represented the full strength of the cause. Because he had always voted against saloons in local option contests, Mr. Pleasant was in a position to confuse the issue and to command a considerable following from among the temperance people of the State. He was also perhaps aided somewhat in this by the fact that he has just led the voters in the rural parishes in a successful fight against the New Orleans ring to prevent the calling of a constitutional convention. Having won their confidence in that battle, he apparently did not suffer at their hands because of his new alignments to the extent that he would likely have done under ordinary circumstances.

We desire, in this connection, to express the earnest hope that any differences of opinion that may have existed among prohibitionists as to the wisdom of the course pursued in the late campaign will now be brushed aside, that an unbroken front may be presented in battling against the rum traffic, which is Louisiana's greatest curse. The recent effort of the Anti-Saloon League was not an attempt to settle the question of "license or no license" in a party primary election, as some of the secular papers have affirmed; it was an endeavor to lay a predicate for securing such legislation as would give the people the privilege of registering their will concerning the dram-shop issue in non-political elections held for that specific purpose. The police juries in many parishes were denying them this right. We had, so to speak, in some sections of the State local option, without the option. This widespread refusal to permit expressions of the popular will concerning an issue that is attracting attention throughout the whole civilized world, was largely responsible for the late contest.

For our part, we have not the slightest disposition to find fault with our leaders because of what was done. Their motives were high and patriotic, and we are far from admitting that they blundered in adopting the policy that they did. Such a general sowing of good seed as took place cannot but bear a large measure of wholesome fruit in the coming years.

We have known several superintendents of the Anti-Saloon League work, but none that we considered superior to Rev. A. W. Turner in poise, tact, and the elements of leadership. In him we can safely repose confidence; so let us rally to his assistance and faithfully hold up his hands. If we will do our duty, we shall yet see this fair commonwealth freed from the blighting reign of the legalized saloon and the white banner of prohibition waving over every foot of its soil.

THE RIGHT VIEW.

The Presbyterian of the South says: "We want to be sure that our (educational) institutions are Presbyterian. We want to see that they have the trademark burnt into the walls, so that our boys and girls will not be contaminated by the milk-and-water variety. * * * We want schools that will send our boys back to their homes better and truer Presbyterians than they were when they were sent to them." We commend this utterance of our worthy contemporary. An educational institution maintained by a Church should be loyal to its ideals and teachings. Otherwise, it can scarcely be said to be keeping faith with those who are putting their money into it, or with those who are trusting their sons and daughters to its care, or with the general public.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. W. W. Jones, of Lula, Miss., states that he has found many good people in his new charge and that he is highly pleased with the prospect.

Professor G. L. Harrell, of Millsaps College (Jackson, Miss.), says: "The Laymen's Convention here has been a great success, and I think that much good will result from it."

Rev. J. O. Bennett, of Jena, La., says: "The work is moving along nicely in the Jonesville charge, and we are hoping for a successful year, both materially and spiritually."

Rev. K. W. Dodson continues to have a notably fruitful pastorate at Lake Charles, La. New members are being received at nearly every service, and all departments of the Church are prospering.

Bishop Murrah will hold the Cuban Mission Conference, which will meet at Cienfuegos on Feb. 2, instead of Bishop Hoss, who after his strenuous trip to the Orient, is said to be in urgent need of a season of rest.

The New Orleans District Conference will be held at Bogalusa, La., April 25 and 26. It will open on the evening of the 25th, and continue through the 26th, adjourning that night—thus embracing two evenings and one day.

Rev. J. H. Hoffpauir, of Gueydan, La., writes: "I am well pleased with my new field of labor. Everything seems to be moving on nicely. Our congregations are good, and increasing. The future seems promising, and we are praying for and expecting success in the Master's work."

Rev. George P. White, of Plaquemine, La., has lately been prevented from meeting some of his preaching engagements by the serious illness of his wife, but he was able to occupy his pulpit last Sunday. We are happy to state that Sister White is now rapidly improving and that it is thought she will soon be entirely well.

The Woman's Missionary Council of the M. E. Church, South, will open its annual session in First Church, Atlanta, Ga., on April 12.

Rev. A. J. Gearheard, of New Orleans, is conducting a Church News Department in The Daily States. Brother Gearheard has a great fondness for newspaper work.

Gov. Sllands, who now resides in this city, presided over the closing session of the Laymen's Missionary Convention at the First Methodist Church on Wednesday evening, January 26.

Bishop Thirkield entertained Bishop W. R. Lambuth at dinner one day last week. The Rev. Mr. Butler, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the well known missionary to Mexico, was also a guest on that occasion.

The Minutes of the Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences have come from the press and been distributed. The editors are to be congratulated upon the superior merits of these publications.

Dr. H. R. Calkins, of Evanston, Illinois, who won distinction by his service as a missionary in India, occupied the pulpit of the Rayne Memorial Methodist Church, this city, last Sunday at 11 a. m. He is a thinker and a speaker of considerable force.

We make grateful acknowledgment to Rev. L. P. Wasson, of West Point, Miss., for several subscriptions to the Advocate, recently sent us. Referring to his charge, he says: "We are having good congregations and the outlook is encouraging."

Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., continues to do telling work for the Conference organ—a letter written on Jan. 25 brought us two additional subscriptions. We appreciate this good service. No interest of the Church suffers in Brother Doss's hands.

Rev. J. S. Renshaw, an esteemed superannuate of the Memphis Conference, is spending the winter at the home of his son, Mr. Paul Renshaw, of this city. No truer or more worthy man than Brother Renshaw ever wrought in the itinerant ministry.

Rev. C. T. Floyd, of Holcomb, Miss., writing on Jan. 25, forwards us a club of 5 subscriptions, and sounds an optimistic note concerning his work. He says: "Things are progressing favorably with us. We have some as good people as can be found anywhere. We are expecting a great year."

The Southern Methodist Handbook for 1915 is on our table. It compares most favorably with the preceding issues of this annual, and contains many features that they did not. It ought to be in every Methodist home. The price is 25 cents. Order of Smith & Lamar, Nashville, Tenn., or Dallas, Texas.

From Shaw, Miss., Brother M. K. Scruggs writes us as follows: "I am serving my fifth year as the superintendent of our Sunday school here, of which I am proud, for it is a good one. Brother Galceran, our new pastor, has made a favorable impression upon the members of his church here and all others with whom he has come in contact."

Rev. W. N. Dodds is much in love with his surroundings at Verona, Miss. He speaks in high terms of his people, and states that his section of Mississippi has good roads and is forging forward generally. The condition of his church is encouraging. We are grateful to Brother Dodds for a club of six subscriptions, with a check to correspond.

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions sent in within the past few days: Rev. J. H. Smith, Carrollton, Miss., 2; Rev. H. P. Lewis, Madison, Miss., 2; Rev. R. E. Rutledge, Vaughan, Miss., 2; Dr. I. L. Peebles, Wesson, Miss., 5; Rev. J. W. Raper, Honston, Miss., 7.

Rev. F. H. McGee, in a letter bringing us 7 subscriptions, says: "I am beginning on the Cockrum (Miss.) Circuit with bright prospects. We are among a good people. Our first quarterly conference was held last Saturday and Sunday, Jan. 22 and 23, Rev. J. H. Holder, our new presiding elder, being with us. He acquitted himself like a veteran and won the hearts of all present."

Several of the Methodist churches of New Orleans made an "every-member canvass" last Sunday afternoon, and, though the results are not yet fully known, the indications are that a good showing will be made. Under the progressive leadership of the gifted young presiding elder, Rev. W. W. Holmes, the Methodism of New Orleans is exhibiting a commendable spirit of activity.

We take off our hat to Rev. J. Lloyd Decell, of Waynesboro, Miss., who, on the 24th ult., delighted the heart of the Publisher with a club of 15 subscriptions. Brother Decell, who is one of the most capable young ministers in the Mississippi Conference, refers, in his communication, to his work as follows: "The year in every respect has started off better than any previous year of my life."

A correspondent sends us the following on a postcard: "Present in the Tupelo Sunday school on January 30 (in the church), 835; Sunday school collection on the same day, $76.31. How is this?" Great is Tupelo.

Bishop W. O. Sheppard, of Kansas City, Mo., one of the chief pastors of the M. E. Church, spent last Sunday in New Orleans. He preached at the Eighth Street Church of his own denomination at 11 a. m., and at the First M. E. Church, South, at the evening hour. His discourses made a profound impression. Bishop Sheppard was en route to Panama and other South American countries.

The work of repairing the injury done to old Felicity Church of this city by the severe storm last September has begun and it is expected that it will be ready for use within 60 days. Under the capable leadership of the pastor, Dr. F. R. Hill, Sr., this congregation is prospering, its various activities having gone steadily on in spite of the interference resulting from the wrecking of its house of worship.

Rev. C. R. A. Brantley, of the Okolona (Miss.) Circuit, reports that the parsonage in Okolona belonging to his charge has been sold and another one purchased at Wren. He further says: "Everything in this field is looking upward. I am striving hard to secure 100 subscribers to the Advocate within the bounds of my work, and I will forward a list to you soon." Brother Brantley is a good friend of our paper and its interests are always well cared for where he labors.

The birthday of the late Judge Walter Malone, of Memphis, Tenn., will be celebrated at Capleville, Tenn., his birthplace, on February 19. A complete set of his writings will be place in the School Library there, and an address will be made by Dr. Frazer Hood, of Memphis. It is indeed fitting that this celebration should take place. The South is too little given to honoring her sons who possess genius. If Walter Malone had been a Northern man, his name ere this would have blazoned all around the world.

Rev. J. H. Rogers, who is well remembered in North Mississippi, writes us as follows from Chelsea, Oklahoma, his new home: "At the last session of our Conference Bishop Mouzon moved me to this station. This is a good town and our church is strong. We have one of the most intelligent congregations in our Conference and the best Woman's Missionary Society in it, as is attested by the fact that it holds the loving cup." Brother Rogers sent a remittance to have the Advocate to continue to visit his home.

Rev. O. L. Savage, of Webb, Miss., is keeping up his good habit of circulating the Church paper in his present field. He has already given us 12 new subscriptions. We are pleased to know that Brother Savage's parishioners are showing their appreciation of him in a substantial way. He says: "My people have papered five rooms and the hall of the parsonage, have built one brick chimney, and have screened the entire house. And, besides this, they have placed in it some nice furnishings." As a preacher, singer, and worker, this hustling itinerant ranks very high. And he is not lacking in avoirdupois.

Rev. Marvin E. Scott, of Marietta, Miss., sends us the following message from his field: "We are in place and the people have been very kind to us. They compare very favorably with those I have met at other places. We have among our members some good Christian men and women and young people. The Sunday school work is being carried on under the management of a most excellent Christian gentleman, who is the superintendent. We are praying for a great ingathering of souls this year." Brother Scott has our thanks for a club of 6 subscriptions to the Advocate.

Dr. I. L. Peebles, of Wesson, Miss., writes: "Our work here has opened favorably this year. The North Wesson and Wesson churches have supplied the inmates of the parsonage with extras in the way of provisions. Such kindness is much appreciated even when the preacher's salary is sufficient, but much more so when his salary is meager. May God greatly prosper our people in religion, health, and money matters, and help them to hate sin with such bitterness that they would prefer death to its commission." We are pleased to know that Dr. Peebles is so pleasantly situated. He deserves all the kindly things that are being done for him.

Rev. G. D. Purcell, in a note to our office, instructs us to send his Advocate to Plain Dealing, La., instead of Bienville, La. His communication also contains the following statement: "My presiding elder has released me from the Bienville charge, because it would not furnish a support upon which my family and I could live. I have never had a more trying experience than I have undergone to-day (January 19) in packing and leaving a work that needs me as much as this one does." Brother Purcell's ministry has been a remarkably fruitful one spiritually, and it is much to be regretted that circumstances necessitated this change.

Rev. J. R. Conniss, President of Grenada College, under date of January 29, writes as follows: "Bishop Atkins, the Conference Board of Missions, and the presiding elders of the Conference have been holding a meeting here for the past two days. All phases of the work were discussed and I am sure that good results will follow their faithful planning. The Bishop will be with us here tomorrow and we will take a collection for the College. We are getting very good returns from the Conference subscription. 'College Day' was not largely observed. I am very optimistic as to securing the $50,000 in subscriptions this year, though it may take longer."

Colonel J. M. Johnson, of Acona, Miss., after a long illness extending over several months, passed to his heavenly reward on Thursday, January 27. He was a citizen above reproach and a most exemplary Christian gentleman. He was a gallant Confederate soldier and carried with him to his grave bullet-marks attesting his faithful service to his country. Nearly all of his life he was an active official of our church at Acona, Miss., and gave generously of his means for its support. He was the eldest son of the late Rev. Stephen Johnson, of Carroll County. He is survived by his wife, three daughters, and three sons, one of whom is Rev. W. J. Johnson, pastor of Grace M. E. Church, South, at Dallas, Texas.

Bishop W. R. Lambuth did not sail for Panama on Saturday, January 29, as he had expected to do, but delayed taking ship until Wednesday of this week. This kept him in New Orleans for several days, including the Sabbath, and our pastors worked him quite freely while he was here. He preached at the Carrollton Avenue Church last Sunday morning at 11 a. m., spoke at St. Mark's Hall in the afternoon, and discoursed to the Felicity Street congregation at the evening hour. On Monday morning he attended the Methodist Ministers' Meeting at First Church and delivered a helpful and much-appreciated address. That Association then adopted a resolution declaring that New Orleans ought to have a resident Southern Methodist Bishop, and Bishop Lambuth was cordially invited to make his home in the Crescent City. He promised to give this invitation careful consideration.

Rev. W. W. Mitchell, presiding elder of the Durant District, in forwarding to the Advocate a list of additional appointments, refers as follows to the work in the territory under his supervision: "After a prolonged and rather serious attack of la grippe, I entered actively upon my work on January 1. I have visited Brown, Rogers, Oakes, McGehee, and Curtis. A spirit of optimism prevails and the outlook seems bright. Bradley has entered cheerfully and earnestly upon the work here at the hub and is having the hearty co-operation of the people. The indications are that the new church, so opportunely launched last year, will be finished before another Conference rolls round, and it may possibly be completed in time for the district conference, which is to convene here. We are planning for the large things in the district, and we shall faithfully endeavor by God's help to accomplish the utmost that is possible."

Rev. D. R. Wasson, pastor of the Jonestown and Belen charge (North Miss. Conf.), sends us the following note: "Mr. G. C. Jones, of Belen, Miss., passed to his reward on Friday morning, January 21, 1916. Accompanied by a host of friends, we carried his body to the Jonestown Cemetery, where it was laid to rest on Saturday afternoon, January 22. Brother Jones was a faithful steward in the Methodist Church, and Methodism has suffered a great loss by the death of this good man. He is survived by a daughter, Miss Lula, and his faithful wife, who is widely known for her good works." The Editor of the Advocate knew Mr. Jones personally and was frequently a guest in his home when he was presiding elder of the Greenville District. He was indeed a true and worthy citizen and could always be counted upon to do his part in carrying forward the work of the Church. He served as sheriff of Quitman County and was held in high esteem by all who knew him. We sincerely regret to be informed of his death, and our heart goes out in tender sympathy to his sorrowing loved ones. May the Heavenly Father be consciously with them in this trying hour!

MINISTERS' RELIEF ASSOCIATION—NOTICE.

The Rev. G. W. Bachman, who passed to his reward on the 25th inst., was a charter member of the Ministers' Relief Association of the North Mississippi Conference. He has paid promptly every assessment since 1879.

Assessment number 13 is now due. Send to Sardis, Miss. JOHN PARK, Treasurer.

At the residence of Mr. J. H. McNeely, in Colfax, La., on December 27, 1915, Mrs. FRANCES WALDEN departed this life. She was born on October 26, 1831, and lived to be a little more than 84 years of age. Aunt Frances, as she was familiarly known to all the people of the town of Colfax, spent the last thirty years of her life with her nephew, Mr. J. H. McNeely. She had been a widow for about forty years. Sister Walden united with the Methodist Church early in life and gave her heart and time to the service of God. She taught a class in the Sunday school for twenty-five years; and her most earnest desire was to see her class grow up and make Christian men and women. She was kind and affectionate and the children loved her. The funeral service was held at the family residence, after which her body was carried to Pineville, La., and laid to rest until the resurrection morn. Aunt Frances is gone, but not forever; we will see her again in the city of our God. Blessed are those who die in the Lord!

H. B. PERRITT, Pastor.

At his home in the town of Colfax, La., on December 18, 1915, Brother M. E. SWAFFORD departed this life. He was born in Grant Parish on September 7, 1859, and when about twenty-five years of age united with the Methodist Church, of which he continued to be a consistent member until his death. He served acceptably on the board of stewards of the church in Colfax for eight or ten years. Brother Swafford had the confidence of all who knew him, as was shown by the fact that he had great influence in the community. He served his parish in public office for several years. He was a man of integrity. A good and useful man is gone. The funeral was held in the Methodist Church, after which we laid his body to rest in the Colfax Cemetery to await the resurrection morning. He leaves a wife and several sons and daughters to mourn his departure. May the God who doeth all things well help the sons to live as their father lived, and take his place in the church and community! Our loss is heaven's gain. H. B. PERRITT, Pastor.

On the 6th of December, 1915, sadness came to the home of our fellow-townsman and brother, Captain A. J. Ervin. The seat by his side is vacant; the companion of his youth, his maturer manhood, and declining years has gone to rest. For more than 52 years Sister Ervin was his true helpmeet, gladly sharing his burdens as well as his joys. She had been lingering on the border-land for some time and was conscious that she could not stay here long. Only a few nights before her last illness she told her husband that she thought the next sickness would take her off and made some wifely requests. One was that she wanted him to promise her he would not grieve immoderately for her. And she, as she had done many times before, evidences of her perfect preparation for the future.

Sister ELIZA HALLIE ERVIN was born on Oct. 18, 1842, in Lowndes County, Miss., where she spent her life. She joined the Methodist Church in early childhood and developed into a strong Christian character, loving the Church and its ordinances, being always loyal to its doctrines and rules, and delighting in attendance upon the services in God's house. She was happily married to Captain A. J. Ervin on September 29, 1864. Most of the time since, they have lived in Crawford, Miss., where many deeds of love and kindness have been done by them, especially for the poor. Several colored persons have said to the writer, "We have lost our best friend." In addition to leaving a weeping husband, Sister Ervin is survived by an only daughter and five sons who loved her with undying devotion. Her motherly admonitions and prayers followed them in an unceasing current to the end and will not be forgotten by them. The high esteem in which she was held in her community and county was evidenced by the longest procession following her remains to the Crawford Cemetery ever seen on a similar occasion, and after the funeral services were conducted by the Rev. Mr. Frierson, her grave was literally banked over with beautiful flowers. May the husband, daughter, and sons overtake her in the home prepared for God's people!

RESOLUTIONS OF SYMPATHY.

Adopted by the Rienzi (Miss.) Missionary Society.

Whereas, God in his all-wise providence has seen fit to remove from our Society one of our most faithful and beloved members, Mrs. B. P. Fullilove, our pastor's wife; therefore be it resolved:

1. That truly we have lost not only the senior member of our Society, but a "Mother in Israel," who was always an example to us in Christian sacrifice and service.

2. That we recognize God's overruling hand, and that we will strive to emulate the true, faithful, humble spirit which was always predominant in her life.

3. That we all feel drawn closer to God and that we will strive to be more faithful to the work she has left behind.

4. That we, as a Society, extend our prayers and sympathy to the bereaved family.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, on January 4, 1916, while all was sunshine and joy, the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Butler and took in his cruel embrace the soul of our beloved KATHRYN; therefore be it resolved:

1. That we, the members of this Sunday school, have been bereft of one of our brightest and sweetest members, and that, while our hearts have been made to bleed under this sad providence and her departure at this tender age has cast a gloom over our entire community, we can only bow in bumble submission to Him who gave and who taketh away.

2. That we, the members of this Sunday school, will be more faithful in our daily duties, so that if death should come to any of us, suddenly, as it came to Kathryn, or otherwise, we, too, may be ready for the summons.

3. To her beloved parents, brother, and relatives, we extend our love and sympathy, and commend them to the loving kindness of our Heavenly Father, who is too wise to make a mistake; we hope that they can see even in this sad hour the overruling hand that doeth all things for the best.

4. We request that a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of our Sunday school, that copies be forwarded to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and Winston County Journal for publication, and a copy sent to her family.

Signed: Lamar Parks, Mabel Suber, Suzelle Tomlinson.

Ladies! Darken Your Gray Hair

Use Grandma's Sage Tea and Sulphur Recipe and Nobody will Know.

The use of Sage and Sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's time. She used it to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy and abundant. Whenever her hair fell out or took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is mussy and out-of-date. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," you will get this famous old recipe which can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair and is splendid for dandruff, dry, feverish, itchy scalp and falling hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, it becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and abundant.—Adv.

THE GOOD MY BOOKS HAVE DONE.

Dear Doctor Meek: My first publication was "Falling From Grace and Baptism." I published it by request of the brethren of my charge. It has not only done great good to the laity but to preachers. Once, while riding on a train, a gentleman came to me and asked if I was Brother Peebles, and after knowing it was I, he informed me that my tract had converted him and his whole family to Methodism and that he and his family had left the Baptist Church and had joined the M. E. Church, South. His case is a sample of what it has done.

I sent "Politeness on Railroads" to headquarters and called special attention to the chapters on permits and dogs, and hence, through that book got the dogs out of sitting rooms of railroads and out of passenger coaches, and also that binding obligation out of permits that made preachers nobody when using them for a rebate. That booklet did much good besides.

My book on "Water Baptism" has not only strengthened the Presbyterians, Methodists, and converted Baptists on water baptism, but it has furnished preachers materials for sermons on water baptism.

Brother McClelland tells of a young lady in our Church who was so upset by a Baptist on Baptism that she returned home regretting that she would have to quit her Church that she loved so well and join the Baptist Church in order to be right. But before she retired that night she came across my work on Baptism and read it and became so satisfied that she went to bed rejoicing that she was a Methodist and went to sleep perfectly satisfied and has been satisfied ever since.

"Can Not and Can Fall From Grace" has enlightened many as has no other work on apostasy and silenced the mightiest batteries of the side "Cannot Fall From Grace." Giving and selling my pamphlet on "Infant Baptism" has stirred up a great interest in the baptism of infants and has enabled me to make a record in advance of that of any other preacher of whom I have heard. The last year that I was in charge of South Side, Meridian, I baptized 103 infants; in Wesson in 1891 I baptized 121, and in Wesson in 1915 I baptized 142.

My book on "Objections To Foreign Missions Answered" has not only converted unbelievers to missions, but it has furnished ministers with data for missionary sermons. Other writings of mine have been reported as having done much good—fifteen publications in all. They have not only been well circulated in the Mississippi Conference, but to a limited extent all over the United States. Indeed, a brother from the Indian Territory declared that he saw them all over that territory.

On and on I might thus continue, but I have written enough for it to be seen as Paul said, "Seeing that many glory after the flesh, I will glory also." (2 Cor. 11:18.)

Not only have my productions done others good, as they will likely continue to do good after I am in heaven, but they have done me good in this: by enabling me to contribute to causes to which I could not have done otherwise and also to keep out of debt to men. No one can say I bought his meat and not only did not pay him for it, but insulted him by denying my account; neither can any one say he presented accounts to me and I put up such a poor mouth as to force him to give them to me; nor can any one say that I borrowed money from him and not only never mentioned it to him again, but when he himself called attention to it forced him to lose it.

However, despite my dread of debts and rigid economy against them, I have become involved with our House by freely giving my publications to preachers and to the poor and not getting all of my promised salary the last year I evangelized that I was so confident of getting; but thanks to God our Father, although I have stocked our Conference so well with my works and although my present salary is not as much as that of a single missionary, I yet hope by God's grace to come out all right, though three are depending on my salary besides me. Yours in Christ,

ISAAC LOCKHART PEEBLES.

STATISTICAL SECRETARIES NOT TO BLAME.

Dear Dr. Meek: Please allow me a word in defense of the Statistical Secretaries, whom some of the brethren seem disposed to criticize in the Advocate of the 27th inst.

With reference to the claims of Brother Simpson, formerly of the Pickens Charge, and Brother James, of Paris, I will say that both of the brethren failed to show on the reports handed in to the Secretaries that their charges EVEN CARRIED an assessment for Sunday School Secretary; nor is there any item on their reports to indicate that ANY amount was paid on this claim. We respectfully suggest to these brethren that a treasurer's receipt is not sufficient to have these items included in their reports, although it is evidence that the money has been paid. If they desire the printed Minutes to carry a full report of their work it is necessary that they see that every item of finance is embraced in their reports as given to the Secretaries, as the figures in the Minutes are compiled from the reports handed us, and not from treasurer's receipts.

Referring to Brother Northington's "notice of error," I wish to say that the assessments referred to were furnished by his presiding elder, on a blank sent him for this purpose, and we supposed that the same were correct, coming to us over his signature, and we let them stand as given by him.

Fraternally yours,

JAS. J. BAIRD.

New Strength for Lame Backs and Worn-out Conditions.

Dear Mr. Editor:

I suffered from lame back and a tired, worn-out feeling. Was unable to stand erect and scarcely able to get around. It would usually come on at first with crick in small of my back. I took one box of Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets and my back commenced to get better soon after starting to take them. I did not have to walk doubled over as I did before using the "Anuric." It is the best remedy I have ever taken for what it is intended to relieve. I hope those who are in need of such a remedy will give these Tablets of Dr. Pierce's a trial.

Yours truly,

A. G. DRAKE.

Note:—When your kidneys get sluggish and clog, you suffer from backache, sick-headache, dizzy spells, or the twings and pains of lumbago, rheumatism and gout. The urine is often cloudy, full of sediment; channels often get sore and sleep is disturbed two or three times a night. This is the time you should consult some physician of wide experience—such as Dr. Pierce, of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y. Send him 10 cents for large trial package of his new discovery—"Anuric." Write him your symptoms and send a sample of urine for test. Experience has taught Dr. Pierce that "Anuric" is the most powerful agent in dissolving uric acid, as hot water melts sugar. Being so many times more active than lithia, it clears the heart valves of any sandy substances which may clog them and checks the degeneration of the blood-vessels, as well as regulating blood pressure. "Anuric" is a regular insurance and life-saver for all big meat-eaters and those who deposit lime-salts in their joints. Ask the druggist for "Anuric," put up by Dr. Pierce, in 50-cent packages.—Adv.

SIX-YEAR-OLD HAD CROUP.

"I have a little girl six years old who has a great deal of trouble with croup," writes W. E. Curry of Evansville, Ind. "I have used Foley's Honey and Tar, obtaining instant relief for her. My wife and I also use it and will say it is the best cure for a bad cold, cough, throat and croup that I ever saw." Those terrible coughs that seem to tear one to pieces yield to Foley's Honey and Tar.

ANOTHER WONDERFUL RECOVERY FROM KIDNEY TROUBLE.

For nearly nine years I was a great sufferer from what my doctor said was Kidney trouble and my blood was out of order; enduring all that time excruciating pain in my back and across my bowels. I was drawn down so that I could only walk with my hands on my knees. My doctor said he could do nothing for me. I tried many kinds of medicine, but all to no avail. A friend told me about Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and as I had tried everything else that I heard of, I bought a bottle of Swamp-Root and it did wonders for me. I prize it higher than any other medicine and I shall recommend it to my friends. I wish to add right here that after using Swamp-Root for two months I began to straighten up and am now sound and well, and feel like I might live a long time yet to tell what your medicine has done for me.

Yours very truly,

STATISTICS OF THE CHINA MISSION FOR 1915.

At the China Mission Conference held at Soochow, September 22, the following statistics were reported: Missionaries, 76; native assistants, 343; Chinese members, 6049; received during the year, 1,314; probationers, 10,404; received during the year, 4,290; total members and probationers, 12,530; adults baptized, 1277; children baptized, 329; Sunday schools, 146; teachers, 863; pupils, 11,107; average attendance, 7,899; Senior Leagues, 60, members, 2319; Junior Leagues, 20, members, 834; total, 3153. Bibles sold, 2558; portions of Scripture sold and distributed, 133,278; other Christian books, 14,106; tracts distributed, 44,254.

The above is published here for the information of our Sunday school workers, who should be much interested in all missionary news from China, that being the special field for the missionary operations of our Sunday schools for the year 1916.

And in this connection I want to call attention to the special three months' study courses prepared by Dr. Edward Leigh Pell for use in our Southern Methodist Sunday school classes. There is one for intermediate classes—"Heroes of Faith in China"—and one for senior and adult classes—"A New Light in An Old Land"—and they are both as interesting as any story books you can find—I've read them. They are divided into "Lessons"—thirteen in each book—and the design is for classes to use them at some time during the year (the earlier the better) either as the main lesson material for the class or as supplementary lesson work. They are only fifteen cents each (Smith & Lamar—Nashville, Dallas, Richmond), and every intermediate, senior and adult class should take the course—it is like a continuation of the Book of the Acts of the Apostles, brought down to date.

The story of Chang Po-ling, the college president, who said, "I want everybody to know that Chang Po-ling has become a Christian," shows the ardor with which the Chinese accept Christ. The story of Hu King Eng, the Chinese girl who became a wonderful physician (the Chinese called her the "Miracle Lady"), shows how determined the Chinese can be in accomplishing their purpose to serve Christ. Both books are filled with intensely interesting information from cover to cover.

HATTIESBURG DISTRICT NOTES.

A movement of considerable interest has been put on foot by the Methodists of Hattiesburg. Presiding Elder Thompson has placed Rev. J. W. McAfee in charge of a mission work located at 479 Bushman Street. The pastors of the Broad Street, Main Street, and Court Street Churches, with all the Methodists and friends of the city, are backing up the movement. The man put in charge was formerly the Captain of the Salvation Army post at this place. He is now a local preacher in our Church. He is well and favorably known in Hattiesburg. The object in the movement is to supply the people who do not belong to any of the churches of the city with the privileges of the Gospel, and to do more than has been done heretofore to meet the needs of the poor and neglected.

Rev. W. A. Terry and family have had a hard wrestle with la grippe. Brother Terry, however, has been able to carry on his work. Brother K. T. Moore and some others of the Broad Street Church are live wires, and keep things moving even when the pastor is sick.

Rev. C. W. Crisler, the popular pastor of the Main Street Church, has fully recovered from his spell of la grippe. He looks better than ever. His treatment of rest cure for three weeks has worked wonders for him. He has gained fully a quarter of a pound of flesh. He is in danger of having his work interfered with from obesity.

Rev. H. J. Moore has made a very fine beginning at Lucedale. He has already held a splendid revival meeting in his church. Thirteen persons were received into the Church, and the spirit of the congregation was greatly improved. "Jack" is a hustler, and makes things move wherever he goes.

Rev. Jno. C. Chambers is in the midst of a fine meeting at Sumrall. The preaching is being done by Rev. Thos. J. Norsworthy. About 65 persons have already joined the different Churches, and the meeting is still going on. This is Brother Chambers' second year at Sumrall. He and the church were greatly pleased with his reappointment. T. W. A.

A NOTE FROM BROTHER NORSWORTHY.

Dear Mr. Editor: On the 9th instant we began here in Sumrall what has proved to be, in some respects, one of the most remarkable meetings I have ever known. Of the fourteen days which the meeting has continued, not one has been favorable, while most of them have been most unfavorable indeed. Notwithstanding this and other hindering conditions, the campaign has taken strong hold upon the town and most gratifying audiences have greeted the evangelist at every service. Not a service has been called in, nor has there been an uninteresting one.

Thus far 54 persons have professed salvation and have given their names for church membership. The meeting is all the more remarkable in view of the fact that an epoch-marking revival was held in this church just a year ago, conducted by Brother Kelly.

The Methodists of Sumrall can boast of one of the most splendid houses of worship to be found anywhere. It stands as a monument to the liberality and industry of the splendid men and women who constitute our church here, and the wise and persevering leadership of Rev. L. E. Aiford, during whose pastorate it was erected. The building has, not only an abundance of space for the accommodation of the large and growing Sunday school and congregation of to-day, but will meet all demands for years to come. The building is a gem.

Rev. Jno. C. Chambers is the pastor of this enterprising congregation, and is, as many of your readers know, a live wire. He is not only a graduate of one of our best colleges, but he is a student—a student of books and of men and things. Down here—or up here, as you may take it—the folks believe in him and love him, and gladly follow his enthusiastic leadership. It is no wonder, therefore, that all departments of the work of the church are well up. The Sunday school enrollment exceeds the church membership.

But I was about to forget to say that we are just getting started in this campaign. To-morrow we will enter on the third week and will continue until the victory is complete. Brethren, pray for us.

Last year I was compelled to decline quite a number of invitations to conduct meetings because they came too late. I would greatly prefer to work in Mississippi or Louisiana than to go to other States. I would be glad, therefore, if these brethren who desire my services during the year would communicate with me before I am obligated to pastors elsewhere. My address is Yazoo City, Miss.

Yours sincerely,
THOS. J. NORSWORTHY.

BOON TO FISHERMEN

The majority of people suffer from Rheumatism more or less. Fishermen and hunters are especially afflicted with this nerve-racking ailment. Mr. Frank Legler of Nashville, Tenn., is a great hunter and fisherman and is a firm believer in "RENWAR." He writes in part as follows: "I took a few doses of "RENWAR" for Rheumatism and want to say that it gave me quick relief. As I am exposed considerably in hunting and fishing I am subject to occasional attacks of Rheumatism, but with "RENWAR" always on hand I have no fear as I know it will quickly drive away that tired Rheumatic pain." If your druggist does not sell "RENWAR" we will send you a bottle paid for fifty cents and refund the money if you are not satisfied. Prepared and guaranteed by Warner Drug Company, Nashville, Tenn.

Cured His RUPTURE.

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that quickly and completely cured me. Years have passed and the rupture has never returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell, but will give full information about how you may find a complete cure without operation. If you write to me, Eugene M. NOTICE.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Louisiana Conference will convene in Ruston, La., Feb. 11-15. The first session will be held at two o'clock in the afternoon of the eleventh. The meeting will close on the night of the fourteenth, but on Tuesday, the 15th, all officers and district secretaries are requested to remain for an Executive Committee meeting.

Mrs. W. R. Pratt, Ruston, is chairman of the Committee on Entertainment, and all delegates' names should be sent to her as soon as possible. Let every auxiliary make an effort to be represented at this meting, and all who come are urged to be present at the opening session that they may catch the inspiration that comes from the first hours.

Mrs. ABEL BLISS, President.
Mrs. A. P. HOLT, Cor. Secty.

Last week it was announced that Dr. S. D. Gordon, of New York, would he one of the guests of the Louisiana annual meeting. Mississippi and North Mississippi also planned to have Dr. Gordon, hut at the last moment he found it would be impossible to fill these dates, a decision which is sure to cause much disappointment to the three conferences.

However, other good speakers have been obtained and the disappointment will not be felt so keenly. Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb will be the honor guest of the Louisiana Conference, and we know that she will receive a cordial welcome from her coworkers. She will be a wonderful help and inspiration to all the women present, and Mississippi rejoices that she will come from the Louisiana meeting to theirs, for in Mississippi she has long been loved: and the memory of her sweet, consecrated life will ever linger in the hearts of her sisters, who will always claim her as their very own.

Mrs. Abel Bliss, the president of the Louisiana Missionary Society, writes us of several other splendid features of her program. You will have an excellent opportunity to find out what your deaconesses are doing, for Miss Kate Walker, of Houma, Miss Eliza lles, of St. Mark's Hall, and Miss Grace Gatewood, of First Church, Shreveport, will all be present. Each line of work presented will be varied in character and quite full of incidents which will demonstrate to the most skeptical the wonderful power of the Holy Spirit in transforming lives dwarfed and made ugly by sin into others full of beauty and usefulness.

Rev. N. E. Joyner, of New Orleans, will preach the anniversary sermon on Sunday morning. Mr. Joyner is widely known throughout Louisiana, and, having served for many years in Mexico as a missionary of the General Board, is eminently fitted to deliver a missionary sermon of soul-stirring depths. Miss Maria Capers, also from Mexico, will be in attendance and will present her phase of the work.

Mrs. Geo. Sexton, of Shreveport, will conduct the noon hour devotionals each day: she will also conduct the opening devotional exercises on Friday afternoon, and Holy Communion will be administered at this time.

All the pastors of the Conference are cordially invited to be present.

Just what the plans are for the other two conferences we do not know at this time, hut we feel sure they will be along the same lines as in Louisiana. We know that all three Presidents have been working and planning for weeks to make these meetings instructive, helpful, inspirational, and, above all, deeply spiritual. Surely God will crown their efforts with success. We ask the entire membership to remember them constantly at the throne of grace. They need the Father's guiding and sustaining Spirit as they come to preside over our conferences. May each woman in each conference do her part to make her meeting the very best ever held!

A CORRECTION.

In the Louisiana Treasurer's report which appeared in these columns last week, a slight error was made. Mrs. Holmes writes us that the pledge was $3462.67, instead of $3466.67. The four dollars difference helonged on the Young People's pledge and was inadvertently added to the adult. We hasten to make this correction, but are sorry to see the figures of the adult pledge lessened.

HOW THE PLEDGE STANDS IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mrs. B. F. Lewis writes: "In figuring on the pledge, I find that we have paid to date $3984, and when the second half of Miss Olive Lipscomb's salary is paid, which Mrs. C. E. Cochran pays, but is credited to Central Church pledge, we will have paid $4359.48, which is not such a dreadful deficit, considering we did not have but $4500 pledged at the last annual meeting." We made the pledge $5000, hoping that the auxiliaries not represented would do their part. Some doubtless have responded, and perhaps. some who pledged failed to meet their ohligation in full. Be that as it may, our pledge was not paid up. It is a sad fact, but let us waste no time in idle repining, hut look the matter squarely in the face and then determine that, with the Father's help, a similar record shall not face us at the close of 1916.

CO-OPERATIVE HOME AT CORINTH CROWDED.

Miss Daniel writes as follows: "At present we are overflowing. With a capacity of twenty-five, we're caring for. twenty-eight girls, having curtained off an end of the hall and put in a bed there, and are utilizing our linen closet by putting in a cot. My one aim now is to see Corinth build a Home suitahle for her working girls, and I believe truly that it will be realized some day." And may that day speedily come! That the need for a larger home is imperative is readily seen when we read that even the linen closet is being utilized for a sleeping apartment. The Home is fortunate in having one as resourceful as Miss Daniel in charge. Aside from her resourcefulness, she is doing a wonderful work for the Master—making a happy, Christian home for twenty-eight girls.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and 1-4 oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off

Meat Cause of Kidney Trouble

Take Salts to flush Kidneys if Back hurts or Bladder bothers.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rhematic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.—Adv.

EXPERIENCE IS THE BEST TEACHER OF ALL.

"The proof of the pudding is in the eating." One is far more apt to believe a man who tells what he has done, than a man who tells what he could do. So it is with medicine. The real proof of the merits of Dr. Miles' Restorative Remedies lies in the fact that they have been used beneficially for over a quarter of a century and thousands have actually testified to benefits they have received.

We know that Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills will relieve all aches and pains because thousands have found this to be proven by actual experience.

The Rev. W. D. Barger, of Hagerstown, Md., has stated:

"Voluntarily and unsolicited I wish to bear witness to the high character of Dr. Miles' Restorative Remedies. To me personally they have been a great blessing, especially the Nervine, the Anti-Pain Pills and the Liver Pills. In case of headache or pain of any kind they act like a charm. I have given many of them to the suffering and the results have always proven gratifying."

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills have no unpleasant after-effect. They are not constipating. They do not contain any of the dangerous habit-forming drugs. We do not claim that they remove the cause of the pain, but we do claim that they bring quick relief in a harmless manner.

They are sold by all druggists at 25c a box, containing 25 doses. If not satisfactory your money will be cheerfully refunded.

How to Fight Tuberculosis

Dr. J. W. Carhart, of San Antonio, Texas, says. "Since lime salts constitute three-fourths of all the mineral substances of the human body, they must be supplied in the foods or supplemented in mineral preparations, or natural starvation ensues, with tuberculosis unchecked. The spread of tuberculosis and other preventable diseases is due largely to decalcified (lime lacking) conditions of multitudes throughout the civilized world."

Since lime is one of the ingredients of Eckman's Alterative, much of its success doubtless is due to its combination in such a way as to render it easily assimilable.

Eckman's Alterative has effected remarkable results in tuberculosis, which in many instances, apparently has yielded to it, and since it contains no opiates, narcotics or habit-forming drugs, it is safe to try. Price $1 and $2 per bottle. Sold by leading druggists or sent direct from the Laboratory. We would like to send you a booklet containing information of value and references.

From the Field

Houston, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: My work is in a fine condition. We have had our first quarterly conference. The presiding elder was with us and commended the start which we have made in this good field. There has been a substantial increase over last year in the pastor's salary. We have the best Sunday school in the district, under the efficient management of Brother P. W. Shell. The good women have improved the parsonage. We have large congregations at preaching and two good prayer-meetings are in operation.

J. W. RAPER.

Leland, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: Rev. E. H. Cunningham has made a splendid beginning here, and his people are well pleased with him. Already he has done a lot of pastoral visiting, has received several new members into the Church, and has gotten the work well in hand. He is a fine fellow, and his good sermons have favorably impressed the people generally. The Church is delighted to have the full time of a pastor, and the outlook for the year is very promising. Rev. G. A. Klein and the Wisdom sisters are to be here for a meeting in March.—L. W. Cain.

Crawford, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: We have had quite a siege of la grippe on my work since Conference. I am in the fourth week of sickness from it, but fortunately I have been able to meet all of my appointments. All things considered, we have entered upon the new year in a very satisfactory manner. As you know, we lost our beautiful church here, which was destroyed on the 13th of last September by lightning. It was fortunate for us that I had the church insured after I came here. We have collected our insurance and will build as soon as the weather will permit.

I expect to send you a good batch of renewals to our paper soon, and I hope to be able to send some new subscribers also. The boll weevils were so bad in this section of the State that we gathered only one-fourth of a cotton crop last year, but we will press on, hoping for better success in the future.—D. W. Babb, P. C.

Grady's Chapel (North Miss. Conf.)

Dear Mr. Editor: I like to read the letters which appear in the "From the Field" department of the Advocate; some of them are very encouraging. As I have not seen anything from Grady's Chapel, I will make my first attempt at writing. We are very much pleased with Brother Brantley, our new pastor. He preached for us on the second Sunday, which is our regular preaching day. He seems to be well qualified for his duties and we are glad to have him with us. He will occupy the new parsonage just purchased at Wren. We have a flourishing Sunday school, of which we are very proud; its attendance is gradually increasing and we hope that this will always be the case with it. Mr. E. D. Cunningham, our new superintendent, is giving great satisfaction by the manner in which he fills his important position. Brother Cunningham seems to feel a deep interest in the upbuilding of the Sunday school. We are hopeful of a good year in every respect.—Martha.

Benoit and Beulah Charge (N. Miss. Conf.)

I feel that it is due the people of the Benoit and Beulah charge to say of them that no people could do more to make their pastor feel welcome than they have done since my arrival here. Not a day has passed without some kindness being shown me. Even in the pastor's absence they continue those things that will minister to his comfort and happiness. For example, while I was away at the District Stewards' Meeting last week, the ladies of Benoit came to the parsonage, entered the suite of rooms which I occupy by bachelorization and left them very much beautified with curtains, drugget, spark rug, library table, table covers, vases, fruit bowls, pictures, and many other articles of service. To go with this was fruit and nuts from my Scouts and others of the school children, together with divinity fuge from the young ladies.

I take great pleasure in saying to this splendid people, through the Advocate, that I am profoundly grateful for these favors shown me, and, furthermore, that these kindnesses have turned into an inspiration, which, in turn, has stimulated me to greater service for them in the work of the Kingdom.—J. D. Wroten, P. C.

Vancleave, Miss.

Dear Brother Meek: Perhaps a few words from this charge will be of interest to some of the readers of the Advocate. At our last Annual Conference the Bishop and his cabinet saw fit to return this pastor for a third year's work on the Vancleave Circuit. We were received with good wishes and words of encouragement and entered upon the new year's work without losing any time. A few days after our return a number of our friends brought us many good things to eat, for which we were very thankful. After nearly two months' work our presiding elder, Rev. J. R. Jones, came to hold our first quarterly conference and made us glad by his presence and helpful preaching. He preached to the delight of all. He gave out no uncertain sound, but cried aloud and did not spare. We will look forward with pleasure to his coming among us again. Our next quarterly conference will be held at Red Hill and we are eagerly but patiently waiting for that time. The assessment for the support of the preacher was made the same as that of last year. I am glad to say that we have succeeded in clearing the assessment for the Bishops' fund, and that leaves the way open for the other things that need to be looked after. We are looking forward to making this the best year's work of the three. To this end we ask for an interest in the prayers of all that our expectations may be more than realized. I will close by saying that since the Annual Conference we have organized a Woman's Missionary Society, and we hope to have others in operation before the year is out.—W. L. Blackwell, P. C.

UGH! A Dose of Nasty Calomel

It salivates! It makes you sick and you may lose a day's work.

You're bilious, sluggish, constipated and believe you need vile, dangerous calomel to start your liver and clean your bowels.

Here's my guarantee! Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone and take a spoonful to-night. It it doesn't start your liver and straighten you right up better than calomel and without griping or making you sick I want you to go back to the store and get your money.

Take calomel to-day and to-morrow you will feel weak and sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day's work. Take a spoonful of harmless, vegetable Dodson's Liver Tone to-night and wake up feeling great. It's perfectly harmless, so give it to your children any time. It can't salivate, so let them eat anything afterwards.—Adv.

Renew Your Health At Nature's Fountain

Without the Expense and Loss of Time Necessary for a Visit to the Spring

THE CRISIS

There comes a time in the life of practically every man and woman when their digestive or eliminative organs, or both, fail to respond to drugs prepared by human skill. In fact drugs seem to do them about as much harm as good for their systems rebel against all drugs. These are the cases which physicians call "stubborn" and "chronic" for the reason that they persist in spite of drug treatment. I do not refer to incurable diseases such as cancer and consumption, but to that larger class of functional disorders which we meet every day, where the organs of digestion and elimination are impaired.

For this class of cases our best physicians and our big city specialists send their wealthy patients to the mineral springs where, in the great majority of cases they are permanently restored or decidedly benefited. But what about the poor man who has not the money or the busy man or woman who cannot spare the time to spend several weeks or possibly months at a health resort? Shall circumstances deny them the restoration to health which Nature has provided? Read my answer in the coupon at the bottom of this page.

I have the utmost confidence in the Shivar Mineral Spring Water for to it I owe my Restoration to Health and probably my Life. It has made me tens of thousands of friends in all parts of America and even in foreign countries, whose faces I have never seen. Yet I count them my friends for the Shivar Spring Water has bound them to me by lasting gratitude.

I ask you to read their letters, a few samples of which I publish below for your benefit, and if you find among them any encouragement as to your own health do not hesitate to accept my offer which has no limits or conditions except those shown on the coupon. If you could read the letters that come to me daily, numbering about ten thousand a year, and the vast majority of them similar to those printed below, you would not wonder that I make this offer displaying my absolute confidence in the restorative powers of Shivar Mineral Water.

INDIGESTION

Savannah, Georgia.

I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well, and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy.

La Grange, Ga., Nov. 25, 1914.

I feel it my duty to suffering humanity to make public announcement of the benefits I have derived from Shivar Spring Water. I have been a sufferer for the past twenty-five years from indigestion and dyspepsia. After one week's trial of Shivar Water I commenced to improve, and after drinking it for four weeks I gained fifteen pounds. I feel better and stronger than I have in twenty-five years. I strongly recommend this Water to any one with stomach trouble of any character, and truly believe it will cure ulcer of the stomach. I am writing this voluntarily and trust it will fall in the hands of many who are so unfortunate as to be afflicted with indigestion and nervous dyspepsia.

C. V. TRUITT.
President Unity Cotton Mills.

Johnston, S. C.

I wish to add my testimony to the wonderful curative powers of the Shivar Mineral Water. For a number of years my wife has been a sufferer from indigestion and nervous debility, and her condition had reached such a stage as to baffle the skill of our most eminent physicians. Her extreme nervousness and heart troubles at times were alarming and she had become almost a nervous wreck. The latter part of last May she began using the Shivar Water, which she has continued to this date with most satisfactory results.

DYSPEPSIA

Blaney, S. C.

I have suffered for many years from gastric troubles, stomach puffed and food sour. I have tried many remedies and a good many waters. Some have helped, but none have given me such relief as your Spring Water. I use it and recommend it to my patients.

W. D. GRIGGSBY, M. D.

Baltimore, Md., April 30, 1914.

For many years I suffered with stomach trouble as a direct result of asthma. I consulted the very best specialist in this country, and spent quite a large sum of money in my endeavor to get relief. However, I had about come to the conclusion that my case was hopeless, but by accident I happened to get hold of one of your booklets, and decided to try Shivar Spring Water. After drinking the water for about three weeks I was entirely relieved, and since that time have suffered but little inconvenience from my trouble. I cheerfully recommend the use of your Water to any one that may be suffering from stomach trouble.

RHEUMATISM

Leeds, S. C.

I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will produce a permanent cure. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter.

C. A. CROSBY, M. D.

Fredericksburg, Va.

Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints upon her hands, caused by rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement.

WM. C. CARTER.

I am anxious to get more of the Water. It has done me more good than anything I have ever tried for rheumatism.

MRS. H. C. EDWARDS.

Florence, S. C., Dec. 1, 1911.

I suffered with indigestion and kidney trouble, and a year ago was stricken with acute articular rheumatism; was helpless for months, and since using your Spring Water I am walking without any crutch and improving daily. Indigestion much relieved. I wish I could write Shivar Spring Water in the sky so that the world could become acquainted with it.

MRS. THEO. KUKER.

MRS. JAMES R. CARTER.

BILIOUSNESS

Greenville, S. C., Feb. 26, 1914.

For over two years, following a nervous breakdown, I have suffered with a liver so torpid that ordinary remedies were absolutely powerless. Under such circumstances, I came to Shivar Spring, and began drinking the Water. Upon advice however, the first night I took a laxative; the second night a milder one. Since then I have taken none at all. The effect of the water has been remarkable—its action on my liver most marked, and my health and spirits greatly improved. I am satisfied that the laxative, followed by the Water, was the proper treatment in my case. My condition is now perfect.

S. A. DERIEUX.

Buena Vista, Va., Oct. 2, 1914.

It is a great pleasure to tell you that your Water has been a great benefit. I may say a great blessing, to me. My wife says it has helped me more than anything else I ever tried. I have been, for thirty years, a sufferer from stomach trouble.

REV. E. H. ROWE,

LIVER AND KIDNEY

Ohoopee, Ga., Aug. 21, 1914.

I feel that it is due you that I should give my testimony, unsolicited, as to the benefits derived from the use of your Shivar Springs Water. I was unable to do my work, and had been under the treatment of physicians for six months for kidney and liver troubles when I decided to try your Spring Water, and now after using it for about thirty days I am able to do my work, feel good, and have gained about twenty pounds. I most heartily recommend its use to all who suffer from disorder of the liver and kidneys.

RENAL AND CYSTIC

Colmbia, S. C.

I suffered for eight years with kidney trouble and inflammation of the bladder to the extent that I would have to get up during the night some five or six times. After using this water only a few days, I am entirely relieved and suffer no more effect of the trouble whatever.

Your Water has done me more good than anything I ever tried for bladder trouble.

S. B. D.

High Point, N. C., Oct. 6, 1914.

My wife has had a bad kidney trouble for several years. She has been using the water only about three weeks and it has already made her a new woman. Her color is much improved her appetite is all that she could wish for, her digestion seems to be perfect. We give Shivar Springs credit for it all.

GALLSTONES

Greenville, S. C.

Shivar Spring Water cured my mother of gallstones, or, I might say, it snatched her from the hospital door, as the doctors had said nothing short of an operation would do her any good. After drinking the Water she was able to get out of bed, and is today stout and healthy. I hope these few lines will be of help to some one suffering as my mother did.

W. J. STRAWN.

Williamston, N. C. Oct. 8, 1914

My doctor said I would have to be operated on for gallstones, but since I have been drinking your water I haven't had to have a doctor.

W. H. EDWARDS.

Columbia, S. C.

My wife was a chronic sufferer from gallstones. She was stricken critically ill, and nothing but morphine seemed to relieve her pain by rendering her unconscious. My physician, who is a good one, seemed to do very little good. Rev. A. J. Foster, pastor of Shandon Baptist Church of Columbia, S. C., advised me to take her immediately to Shivar Spring. On consulting my physician he agreed that it would be best to do so without delay. In about three days after arriving at the Spring she was apparently relieved and had regained her appetite. She has suffered no ill effect of the trouble since. Please publish this for the benefit of sufferers

NEW ORLEANS
CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

Vol. 63—No. 6. Official Organ of the Louisiana, Mississippi, and North Mississippi Conferences, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Whole No. 3129.

ROBERT A. MEEK, Editor. NEW ORLEANS, LA., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1916. CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Publisher.

Editorial

"Go forth, and Labor! A crown awaits
The faithful servant at heaven's high gates.
Work with thy might ere the day of grace
Is spent, ere the night steals on apace.
The Master has given his pledge divine,
'Who winneth souls, like stars shall shine.'"

The following are some itches that are exceedingly difficult to cure: the itch for notoriety, the itch for something new and novel, and the itch to be accounted scholarly. None of these afflict the man whose life is fully "hid with Christ in God."

If one is not able to do much, one should do the little that one can. God may make even small things far-reaching in their influence. With the five loaves and two fishes carried by a lad, Jesus fed the vast multitude. What an ordinary deed done in his name may result in, none can tell.

German Christianity did not fail because it was not extensive enough, but because it was not intensive enough. A Christianity that does not make Christlike the hearts of those who embrace it is too superficial to amount to much. Spreading abroad a surface religion that merely pronounces the shibboleths of the Christian faith is not really Christianizing mankind. Much of this kind of so-called evangelism is going on in this day.

Is it not as much out of place to sing in a church service so that the congregation does not understand a word of the song, as it would be to preach in an unknown tongue? If not, why not? We are inclined to think that some pastors will be held accountable in the judgment for the manner in which they allow worshipers to be tortured by wholly unintelligible vocal gymnastics. Nothing should be allowed in a public service in a house dedicated to God that is not calculated to be spiritually helpful to the people in the pews.

God is not working for the moral and spiritual betterment of mankind in this age in precisely the same manner that he did in the Apostolic period, but he is working notwithstanding. He is not now making any new revelations concerning his own nature or the things of eternity to men, but the Holy Spirit, whom he has sent to earth, is here to energize His written Word, to regenerate and purify human hearts, and to empower and lead those who enlist in Christian service. The dying Wesley did not say, The best of all, God WAS with us, or WILL BE with us; but he said, "The best of all, God IS with us." They who work apart from the great Helper need not hope to achieve large results, but they who labor in co-operation with him will never toil in vain.

THE PANAMA MISSIONARY CONGRESS.

We are indebted to the "Church News Association" (New York) for the following statement concerning this much-advertised gathering:

"The official delegates to the Panama Congress, which opens at Panama Feb. 10, will be 310. The number of visitors has been restricted to some extent, it being determined to make it a working and not a social congress. Most of the delegates have departed, owing to a desire to inspect the canal, and to the fact that transportation facilities by any one route are not great enough to carry all at one time. Delegates are going by half a dozen routes, and some ten days in advance, to accommodate themselves to conditions of travel.

"It has been decided to issue a daily newspaper in connection with the congress, and so important is the congress regarded that news association reports of its doings are to be sent daily by cable. The President of Panama is to make the address of welcome, and practically all leaders in societies having work in Latin America will be there to hear it. Some of the extension conferences planned to follow the principal one will not be held, but those to be held are Lima, Peru; Santiago, Chile; Buenos Aires, Argentine Republic, and Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

"The plan of the Edinburgh Conference is to be followed, in that eight reports have been submitted to delegates in advance, to be read by them in full before the congress opens. These are to be discussed on the eight days the congress is in session, having been presented beforehand, and on the evenings platform meetings are to be held. The reports are upon the topics of present conditions, financial support, women's part, education, literature, and co-operation, and Bishop Brown of Virginia, Bishop Stunts of Buenos Aires, and Harry Wade Hicks of the Missionary Education Movement are among the chairmen in charge of these reports and the decisions following the congress."

It is conceivable that much good may result from this interdenominational conference if it is kept within proper bounds and a due regard is shown for the rights and convictions of the Churches that are supposed to be represented in it and which would be affected by the plans adopted. Some measure of co-operation in seeking to occupy needy fields yet unreached by the Gospel in Central and South America would, it seems to us, be helpful and expedient; but there is, in our opinion, a limit to the extent to which Methodists can safely mix up with denominations from which they differ doctrinally concerning matters of fundamental importance in the maintenance of theological schools, publishing plants, and other evangelistic enterprises. And the question of uprooting our Church in fields in which for decades we have been laboring and expending money to establish it, is not one to be lightly disposed of by Mission Boards in a theoretical manner. Such a thing ought at no time to be done without a full consultation with both the native Methodists involved and the Church at home which has been supplying the funds to carry on the operations and maintain the enterprises that are to be abandoned.

The trouble with nearly all interdenominational councils, unions, commissions, etc., is that they are self-constituted or have been originated by some outside agency, and are self-perpetuating, and, in consequence, are not truly representative of the Churches for which they assume to speak and act.

Whatever may be the conclusions reached at the Panama Congress, we hope that, so far as they may relate to our denomination, they will be given the widest publicity possible among our people, that they may know definitely what is in contemplation and have ample opportunity to discuss all the issues that may be involved. This much, at least, is due them.

NOT FROM THE WRITTEN PAGE.

Nearly all the authorities on the subject teach that the highest type of oratory is extemporaneous, so far as putting the thoughts of the speaker into words is concerned; yet when a remarkably brilliant orator appears it is difficult to make people believe that his best flights of eloquence have not been carefully written out and committed to memory beforehand. Of many this is doubtless true, but not by any means of all. We have often heard men tell of how the late Senator L. Q. C. Lamar was accustomed to write and rewrite his great speeches, some even going so far as to state that he practiced them before a mirror; but in Mr. Mayes' admirable life of the great statesman and jurist he is quoted as saying that he had never written an address completely out in his life.

Another illustration of how people may be mistaken in this respect was recently furnished in Zion's Herald by Bishop J. F. Berry, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who wrote as follows:

"Bishop William A. Quayle is extraordinary. So everybody says. And everybody is right. There is nothing ordinary about his personality and work—nothing like anybody else on earth. Those who have frequently heard my friend have wondered how he could go right on producing new lectures and addresses on such a variety of themes. The supposition has been that he wrote extensively and memorized. So I thought. I was talking to the Bishop the other day, and expressed surprise that in the midst of his wide travels and strenuous life he was able to write a new lecture every few weeks.

"'I do not write them,' he said. 'It would be of little use, for I have no verbal memory. I read everything I can find that is really worth while, and fill up. I think my theme through, become saturated with it, and pay no attention to language until I begin to speak.'

"In other words, the marvelous Quayle vocabulary is a case of spontaneous combustion."

THE GOSPEL OF THE ETERNAL KINGDOM.

By Bishop John C. Kilgo.

"In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you."—John 14:2.

The questions and issues which the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ settles are eternal questions and issues. In making this statement it is not intended to convey the impression that the gospel is utterly foreign to earthly orders, having no influence upon the course of human history or relation to the daily affairs of men. Such an assumption would be an intolerable fanaticism, having not a single word in the teachings of Jesus to justify it. His gospel is as truly a gospel of righteousness as it is a glorious gospel of eternal salvation, and a professed devotion to Him which does not manifest itself in an abundant righteousness is the sorest denial of both Him and His teachings. "By their fruits ye shall know them," is the lasting criterion for estimating the genuineness of one's piety and the strength of one's faith. From this there can be no escape, and the history of His followers has at all times and in all places been the unanswerable proof of His doctrines.

The Kingdom Supremely Eternal.

But the kingdom of God which He came among men to establish is not an earthly empire, exhausting itself upon earthly questions and the promotion of merely earthly interests. It is supremely an eternal kingdom, having its sources outside all mundane things and its goal infinitely beyond all temporal spheres and orders. From the beginning of His ministry among men Jesus placed the utmost stress upon the eternal. In His own consciousness it was at all times the central and sovereign sense, making itself felt in every word and showing itself in every movement. He gave constant care to make His disciples realize that in Him they were face to face with eternity. He was not among them as a mere teacher, adding His utterances to those of the prophets and giving His opinions upon the vexing difficulties of this present life. To know Him they must raise their thoughts far beyond all these things and become through Him students of heavenly orders and prepare themselves for a life in an endless kingdom. The basis of all this is His self-consciousness of a life prior to His coming in the likeness of men, a life whose unbroken experience stretched backward through all time and all ages into the very beginning, back of which there is no other beginning. He had come out from the Father, with whom He was united by the vital life forces of the Godhead in the eternal beginnings of God. "Before Abraham was I am," gives an insight into the depths of His time consciousness, a consciousness which originally was absolutely free from all temporal limitations and experiences.

It is only in the light of the eternal sense in Him that we can understand the absoluteness, finality and solitariness which He emphasized in all His teachings. He discarded the common terms of human speech because He did not arrive at truth by the processes of human reasoning, but spoke out of the eternal assurance of truth as a fact of His inner self, and He delivered it in the forms of authority and finality. "Verily, verily, I say unto you" are not words of one who, by the methods of investigation and speculation, comes timidly to venture an opinion, but are the assertions of a supreme mastery and possession which do not admit of discussion. Truth to Him is never a new thing just discovered by tedious study; it is His eternal experience, and He utters it in its vaster and fuller forms and aspects. Out of His own sense of absoluteness He declared, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." The whole vast system of material things shall run out their course and come to an end. Suns shall burn out, moons shall cease to be, planets and stars shall crumble into dust, but up out of this universal wreckage His word shall rise without the loss of a single syllable or the change of a single accent. The shock and crash of a falling universe cannot shake it from its everlasting foundations. With their disappearance His words shall rise into their regal forms and take on the shape of a kingdom which shall never be disturbed by changing events or the limits of time.

Other-Worldliness.

As He came near to the close of His earthly ministry His mind was deeply concerned with the purpose to raise the thoughts and the faith of His disciples above world thoughts and world hopes, and to fix their faith far away in the heights of eternal things, back into which He was Himself about to enter. He assured them of a perpetual conflict here, and that it would arise out of the simple fact that they were no longer of the world, but that He had chosen them out of the world, and between them and the world, as between Him and the world, there were inherent differences which the world could not understand and would not tolerate, and, therefore, it would hate them, as it had hated Him. Gloomy enough was the picture He drew for them in the ministry to which He was about to send them, yet this world gloom was more than offset by the disclosures He made of the eternal kingdom into which they had been brought by Him and to which they were to look for staying power and final reward. He ran up the curtains on eternity until heavenly scenes came within full view of them, and He fixed their gaze and their interest supremely upon His Father's house, back to which He was about to ascend. These thoughts were the logic with which they were to comfort their hearts, and in which they were to find ample satisfaction because of His departure from among them. Their own last end would be a like ascension up to the heights of His own ascension, for He would receive them unto Himself, that where He was they should also be. And He crowned His departure with a demonstration of glory not only as a fitting climax to His own incomparable history on earth, but as a final demonstration of the things He had taught them and a full proof of the hopes He had inspired in them. The culmination of His redemptive mission to earth is not to be a temporal glory, and the faith and hopes of the saints in all ages have been centered on things far beyond all these changing scenes up to where He sitteth at the right hand of God.

The Secularizing Spirit of the Age.

But in the face of these positive and plain teachings of Jesus there has come among us a widespread disposition to secularize the gospel and to engage the thought and activities of the Church with earthly affairs. This is not, as it proudly boasts, a new and advanced interpretation of the gospel, but a reversion to the mistaken views of the Jews as to the mission of the Messiah, with the addition of some features of Buddhism. The fatal error of this popular perversion of the gospel permeates the whole body of our religious thought and enfeebles every force in Christian character. In the place of the solemn duties of Christian life it proclaims a gospel of amusement as the only sane way to secure and maintain, in an age like ours, the sympathies and allegiance of the young, and in keeping with this reckless assumption the Church and the ministry are called upon to furnish playhouses and all sorts of worldly entertainments. Seemingly they utterly forget that the gospel is not a system of world sports, but the dreadful power of God unto the salvation of sinners, a task full of all the solemnity of an everlasting destiny. It is a gospel born in blood, and the tragic notes of Calvary's agonies are never out of it. Shall the summit of this blood-stained mountain be graded off for a baseball diamond, and the garden of Joseph be rented for a place of Sabbath loafing and worldly gayeties? Shall the emblems of His broken body and sacrificial blood be removed from the sacred table and it devoted to the careless whims of the whist club? No amount of witty sneers or cheap mockery from the lips of a worldly ministry are sufficient to prove that the grave countenances and solemn spirits of our fathers were pharisaical airs practiced in the name of Jesus. These men were profoundly sensible of eternity and their religion had in it a becoming dignity and a heavenly majesty. And if it be true that the young of these times cannot be saved except by making a sport out of the gospel, then their destiny is sealed; the issue is settled. The atoning mission of Jesus among men is not to furnish earthly amusements, but to save sinners from death and eternal doom.

The Cheapening of the Gospel.

The apostles of secularism have reduced the kingdom of God to a world-condition, the gospel to a social asset and the Church to an organization whose end is earthly betterment. In keeping with their perversions of truth they seek the defense of our religion in the social values to be derived through it, and employ the resources of the Church for the promotion of all sorts of schemes which they deem helpful to civilization and human comforts. As the inevitable outcome of such a blunder there are widespread confusion of thought, conflict of efforts, shallowness of conviction, increasing defeats and a growing sense of insecurity of faith. They tell us that the kingdom of God must come in the world, that the New Jerusalem is to be among men and that Christ has already come among men. And every human ill or earthly evil in society, industry or government they charge to the account of the failures of the Church to meet the world's present needs. They disturb God's saints and deadbeat their benevolence for the care of fads and projects out of which futile commissions make a living for a short while. They encourage infidels, thugs and criminals to charge to the Church the shame and sufferings of their own creation, and inspire a far-reaching hatred against our holy religion. With a slim attempt at wit they say, "That religion is worthless the benefits of which one must die to gain." To this vain sentimentalism it is proper to reply, "That religion is a conceit and a fraud which proposes to remove human ills and transform the world into a scene of heavenly peace and undisturbed joy." Our Lord knew that the faith centered in eternity and the soul inspired by the hopes of everlasting life constitute the one spirit which might be trusted to feel for sinners, help the poor and oppose the ravages of sin. It is not the time-possessed soul, but the heaven-ruled spirit into whose hands may be trusted the care of the lambs and the feeding of the sheep.

The Triumph Over Time.

But the shifting of the emphasis from the eternal to the temporal has robbed the saints of the immovable foundations of hope and shut up the springs of their lasting joys. Amid earthly scenes they must bear many ills and suffer many disappointments, from which no escape can be devised. Lazarus still sits at the gate, the widow still follows her son to the grave, the truly faithful are still mocked and hated, poverty still finds its way to the homes of the truest followers of Christ, the tongues of the wicked are still busy decrying a holy ministry, and down to the end of time wars and rumors of wars will be in earth. It is through these strifes the man of God must make his way out of the world. He has his deepest concern in what is beyond. Daily his heart is steadied under some heavy burden by the glorious truth of finally reaching the Father's house, where he shall find release from strains, grief and defeats. Even the tired old colored woman at the spring branch, doing the week's washing, finds more joy in humming in her own weird way,

"When I can read my title clear
To mansions in the skies,
I'll bid farewell to every fear
And wipe my weeping eyes," than she gets out of the dream of a better wage and a larger house. And she is in the footsteps of the great apostle, who declared amid the sore scenes of his eventful life, "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal. For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Who will call Saint Paul a fanatic? His eyes were fixed upon the invisible and the eternal, and the impact of his faith is felt in every region of the world where this gospel has gone. The world's master spirits who have given permanent shape to the course of history have always been those whose faith was fixed upon the heights whither the Lord hath ascended, and out from these sources they have drawn inspiration and force for the most heroic labors. They have not hesitated to make full and bold profession of their faith. Like Abraham they have been steadily moving toward a city whose builder is God, and following their Master they have been stirred by the joyous hope of things set before them. Untinged with sophistry the simple saint tells the whole story of his faith and hopes when he says, "I want to serve God here, and, dying, go home to heaven. Pray for me, brethren, that I may hold out to the end." That is plain enough, and, thanks be to God, it is voluminous enough. The final triumph of our gospel is a triumph over time, a victory over earth, an ascension along the dizzy heights which our victorious Lord went up to His Father's house to make preparations for the redeemed, and the consummation of our hopes is not within created boundaries, but far above principalities, and powers, and dominions, where He sitteth at the right hand of God. Point the saints to that glory, and remind the sinners of eternity, and there will come a revival of mighty power among men.—New York Christian Advocate.

TURNING THE OTHER CHEEK.

By Rev. W. S. Harrison.

"Whosoever smiteth thee on thy right cheek turn to him the other also." It is surely fair to view this precept in the light of its author's example when he was himself struck by an officer in the court of Annas. He did not literally turn the other cheek. That probably would have angered the bully and provoked another blow. To have done this, knowing the natural result, would have made him too much the instigator of the second outrage. Knowing the character of Jesus, such provocation, is of course, inconceivable.

Such considerations must be taken into account in each case. Any ostentatious presenting of one's self in an attitude to receive another blow would not only suggest further aggression, but might be construed as a dare, which is always provoking. Of course, Jesus did nothing like this when he was struck. Therefore, we conclude that in this 'saying' he simply teaches non-resistance. But he appealed to justice and reason: "If I have spoken evil, testify of the evil; but if good, why smitest thou me?" This was the most effective non-resistance; an appeal to the ultimate principles of right and justice, on which alone conduct can be justified. This is the way Jesus turned the other cheek.

To understand this saying we must understand Jesus himself—his nature and his life. We must get his point of view. On the high moral plane where he lived, loving every man, respecting the rights of every man, wishing only good to every man, and seeking the best interests of every man, it is not conceivable that any man would ever strike him for any cause, other than his righteousness. There could, in fact, be no other cause. Men hated him because his life was so superior to theirs; because by his life and teaching, he testified that their ways were evil.

The same in a measure will be true of every man who lives on this same plane. The man who lives strictly right gives no real offense; therefore, if he is smitten in anger, whatever the pretense, the true cause will be his correct life. It is persecution for righteousness' sake, and on this ground Jesus forbade resistance.

We can, therefore, best obey the spirit of this injunction by so living as never to be smitten unless it is for doing just what we should do. It is possible, and therefore our duty, to so live. Then our manner of life, our avowed principles and admonitions testify to the evil lives of evil men. This may cause them to hate us, suspect our motives, and slander us. Our own pure lives are our best defense, and even if we suffer blows, they are still our best defense. We can best serve the cause for which we stand by appeals to the principles by which our lives are regulated.

But it is so against the grain of human nature to take a blow and not give one in return. So it is; but Jesus meant to cross this very nature. It is hard for the strong man, because he feels so able to give blow for blow. The weakling appeals to justice, and is right in doing so, but he may be making this appeal because he can make no other. The strong man has the chance to make it on the high ground of superior courage. That would be turning the other cheek.

Which is greater in human affairs—physical or mental force? On which shall the world ultimately stand? The world has glorified physical force. Might makes right, has been the slogan. Therefore, wars have made history. But always, after men have fought to exhaustion, they have relied on wisdom to repair the damages. It is to the shame of the race that we have been so slow to see the power of wisdom in shaping the destinies of men.

Our Bible clearly predicts a time when the "nations shall learn war no more." Then, we can do without war, but we can never do without wisdom. In every misunderstanding, national or personal, wisdom is the force which ultimately restores harmony. Jesus, in preaching the doctrine of non-resistance, is clearly on the plane of the world's ultimate civilization. His is the final word of wisdom to which the world through hard experience is ultimately to come.

This precept, therefore, is for the ages. The world is ripening to its wisdom. When the world by wisdom learns to behave itself, and human reason comes to its own, then the great majority of men will appreciate this saying as one of the brightest stars in the great galaxy of wisdom's shining products.

But one so hates to be called a coward. It is better to be called a coward than to be one. From the view-point of Jesus men are expected to live so they will never be struck except for the fact that they are righteous. Then they are to suffer wrong for conscience's sake. The heroes of faith who have suffered were not cowards, but manifested the type of courage God approves and men admire.

Courage is noble and ennobling. It gives strength to the soul and temper to the mind. So far from discounting it, Jesus demands its highest exercise, himself setting the finest example. This precept tends to develop in us the best type of life, and also gives for its defense the most efficient weapons known in earth or heaven—wisdom, justice, moral strength, and godly patience. In the crucial tests, where characters rise or fall, where destiny is wrought by the subtle preferences of the human will, we have the sure means of victory. This precept is on the line of cleavage between brute and mental forces. Obedience puts us on the winning side, the side where Jesus conquered and the saints of all ages have triumphed.

THE LAYMEN'S MISSIONARY CONVENTION AT JACKSON.

The Laymen's Missionary Convention which was held at Jackson, Miss., Jan. 27-30, inclusive, was one of the most successful and inspiring missionary gatherings it was ever the privilege of this writer to attend, and the general opinion is that it not only marked an epoch in the lives of most of those who heard the illuminating speeches and discussions, but that it will also mark a decided advance in missionary zeal and liberality among the laymen of all the Churches represented. It means much when business men in this busy age are willing to leave their stores and shops and offices, and spend two or three days in taking counsel together concerning the sublime task of evangelizing the world. This convention, which was one of a series of seventy-five, was held in the spacious and beautiful auditorium of the Galloway Memorial Church, and was attended by several hundred laymen, and by a goodly number of preachers and elect women of the various Churches. Among the prominent speakers present were: Bishop W. R. Lambuth, of our own Church; Bishop Theodore Bratton, of the Protestant Episcopal Church; Lieutenant-Colonel E. W. Halford, of New York City, Vice-Chairman of the Laymen's Missionary Movement; Dr. John M. Mills, the noted traveler and lecturer; Rev. J. A. G. Shipley, missionary to China from our Church, and Drs. W. W. Pinson and E. H. Rawlings, our General Secretaries.

Denominational conferences were held on two afternoons, at which plans were made and resolutions adopted to conserve the results of the Convention. In another column will be found the resolutions unanimously adopted at the conference held under the direction of the Mississippi Conference Board of Missions. The addresses delivered were of a high order, and it would be impossible to do them full justice in a brief report like this. A convention such as the one just held does much to promote brotherliness and Christian unity among the various denominations affiliated with the Laymen's Movement. It is being realized as never before that the task of evangelizing the whole world is too big to be undertaken by any one Church alone, and hence the Protestant denominations are co-operating with each other in the great enterprise of Christian missions, and are generating missionary enthusiasm among young people and business men hitherto undreamed of. The laymen of the Church constitute a Niagara of spiritual power that is just beginning to be harnessed into service. It is significant, as one speaker pointed out, that our Lord did not command his disciples to be one, but put Christian unity upon a far higher level when he prayed that they might all be one.

At the inception of the Laymen's Movement the Protestant Churches of North America were contributing about $11,000,000 a year for foreign missions. Last year the contributions to missions from this source reached a total of $18,000,000—an increase of $7,000,000 in nine years, and it was predicted by one of the speakers that at the present rate of progress, in ten or fifteen years more the Protestant Christians of North America will be contributing $50,000,000 a year to missions, and that we will have a force of 50,000 missionaries in the field. "The evangelization of the world in this generation" will then no longer be a dream of the imagination, or an impossible goal, but will become an accomplished fact.

From first to last, the Convention was characterized by the spirit of intercession, strong emphasis being placed upon the vital relation between prayer and the progress of the kingdom of God. The many fervent volunteer prayers that were offered evidenced the presence of the Holy Spirit, and the tides of spiritual power generated by the Convention will be seen and felt far and wide among the Churches. With remarkable unanimity, the speakers put deep emphasis upon the fact that the heathen world is a waiting, expectant world. Some startling incidents illustrating this fact were brought out by Rev. George T. McKee, missionary to Africa from the Southern Presbyterian Church. Delegations are coming to the mission stations in the Congo region from villages from 300 to 500 miles away asking for teachers and preachers to go back with them, and the missionaries are forced to tell them that they have no one to send, bidding them to wait a while longer. The question that invariably comes is,

"White man, how much longer must we wait? A year—two years?" Each of us in the home land must help to give the answer. The Churches of North America are rich and increased in goods, and have abundant resources with which to finance the kingdom of God. Hundreds of choice young men and women are saying to the Church, "Here am I—send me." "The fields are white unto the harvest." The one thing lacking is the means to support the laborers. As one speaker impressively said: "There is no such thing as selfish Christianity. Such a phrase is a contradiction in terms. We might as well talk about 'hot ice,' or 'dark light.' Unselfishness is the very essence of the gospel. To try to keep Christ in America for ourselves alone is to lose Him. Hence to 'give is to live.'"

REPORT FROM HOSPITAL DAY.

Every mail is bringing a bunch of reports from pastors and Sunday school superintendents who have observed Hospital Day. Some send the amounts collected, while some others on circuits tell of their beginning the work and promise to present the cause to each Sunday school and church. Many report "more to follow," and many are inviting the Field Secretary to visit the charge and complete the work. Hence, the Secretary's schedule is rapidly filling.

The influence of the Hospital Issues of our Church papers is evident. Many are reporting sermons preached on the subject and thank the papers for suggestions received. Some contributions have come from individuals who had no chance to contribute to a church collection, one coming from far Virginia.

The following have been reported to date:

CHURCH DEDICATION AT ATHENS, LA.

Some time since I received an invitation to attend the dedicatory services of the new church at Athens, Claiborne Parish, La., to take place Jan. 30. Dr. J. M. Henry was to deliver the dedication sermon, and I was asked to preach at the evening hour. I recalled the dedication of the former building in 1893 when Bishop Key preached the sermon and I occupied the pulpit at night, and was pleased to do as I had done on that occasion.

This church was organized at Athens by the writer in 1891 and was for many years known as Foster's Chapel, but with the changes of time the name is now merely Athens Church. I missed many of those who twenty-five years ago made possible the church of that day, and was much pleased to find a memorial window to my old friend, "Tom Baker," as all knew him. He was one of God's noblemen, a genuine gentleman, plain, simple, upright, and regular in step. His friendship was a pleasure and its simplicity a lesson quite refreshing.

The new church occupies the most commanding site in the town, being in the fork of two roads and looking down the main street of the little city. From its point of vantage on the little slope of the hill, about two and a half squares from the railroad, it is in full view of and overlooks the business part of the community, though located in the heart of the residential section.

I was a guest of old friends and the conversation was quite largely of the past. It was a pleasure to find that after the lapse of so long a time I was so kindly remembered. I had the pleasure on Sunday of dining in the home of the only person whom I have ever been called upon to baptize by immersion. Her views have changed, for the good lady asked me to rebaptize her by sprinkling. Her husband was a Baptist, but is now a Methodist steward.

While in transit I called on Sister Blaylock, one of the elect ladies of the Gibbsland charge. She is now in her ninety-ninth year and is in full possession of all her faculties. She remarked that physically she was as well as at any time in her life, save for feebleness. Yet she goes where she chooses about the house and is young in spirit. Her little sister who cares for her is eighty-six, and fully capable of doing all that is required in the way of ministration. On the trip I had pleasant fellowship with Brothers W. H. Coleman and J. G. Sloane.

Dr. Henry rose above himself in preaching, and his sermon on "The Stability of the Church" was good unto edification. A small indebtedness and sufficient funds to pay the fire insurance premium for the next five years were soon raised, and the Church was set apart to the glory of God. The structure is quite an honor to a community the size of that at Athens, and will so be for the next quarter of a century. These brethren have done well in anticipating the growth of the future and in dedicating to divine worship so excellent a temple. I found Brother Kleinschmidt to be in fine favor with his people, and should their pastoral relationship continue, I feel sure that both pastor and people would be pleased.

JNO. F. FOSTER.
Shreveport, La., Feb. 3, 1916.

FROM THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE TRAINING SCHOOL.

Dear Doctor Meek: Thinking that you would be glad to hear from the Mississippi Conference Training School, at Montrose, I will write you briefly concerning it. We have nine young preachers here (the writer being one of the number) and all of them are doing good work, studying hard throughout the week and exercising their vocal organs on Sunday when they can find a congregation to listen to them. We have a good man as President of our school in the person of Rev. J. S. Purcell, who is loved and admired by all of us. In fact, our whole faculty is second to none, being composed entirely of Christians who are deeply interested in church work, as is shown by the fact that they take part in it. We have had several distinguished gentlemen to visit us since the opening of the present session, among these being Rev. Robert Selby, presiding elder of the Brookhaven District, Revs. J. Lloyd Decell, Benj. L. Sutherland, Hugh C. Castles, of the Mississippi Conference, and Rev. J. L. Evans, of the Louisiana Conference. All of these brethren brought us a word of cheer and left us with a greater determination to prepare ourselves for the battles of life. We thank them one and all and ask them to come again. But the greatest treat that we have had were the lectures that were delivered to us by the beloved Dr. Isaac L. Peebles, of Wesson, Miss. Rev. W. W. Graves, who was our pastor last year, secured Dr. Peebles in a revival at this place that began on Oct. 17, 1915, and lasted eight days. Dr. Peebles preached at 11 o'clock a. m. and 8 p. m. each day. He brought us messages full of information and inspiration. The meeting did everybody good and will not soon be forgotten by the people here. The young preachers, backed by Brother Purcell, asked Dr. Peebles if he would not lecture to them in the afternoons during his stay in Montrose and he kindly consented to do so. He gave us several lectures on the "Preparation and Care of the Body." He also gave us some of his experiences which were very interesting to us. He performed a service that was very much needed and every one appreciated it. The Doctor is not very strong physically, but mentally and spiritually he is a man among men. His fatherly advice and admonition to the young preachers who heard him will live in their hearts and memories after he has long since been transported to Canaan's happy shore. He placed a good many of his books and pamphlets on different subjects with the people here and they are likely to do much good.

Dr. F. P. Culver, pastor of the First M. E. Church, South, of Waco, Texas, has been on a visit to Alabama, his home State. Dr. Culver is a minister of unusual gifts, of whom much may be expected in the coming years.

The Wesleyan College (for young women), at Macon, Ga., has an enrollment of 131 students. In the person of Dr. C. R. Jenkins this institution has a magnificent President. It is an A-grade College and is probably not surpassed by any institution for the education of young ladies in the South.

Dr. W. F. McMurry, according to reports, has lately been an appreciated visitor in Texas and Arkansas. He is known everywhere in Southern Methodism and magnifies his office in a manner to win universal commendation. He is Missouri's best gift to the Church since the time of Bishop Marvin.

The General Methodist of January 27 (Lexington, Ky.) contained a picture of Dr. E. G. B. Mann and another brother taken at Wessington Springs, S. D., when the thermometer was 30 degrees below zero. We should think that such weather would be rather too much for even a Kentuckian.

The Texas Christian Advocate recently contained an editorial extolling Bishop Mouzon for the fine service which he is rendering in behalf of the movement to endow the Theological School of Southern Methodist University. It was also stated that the Bishop is making a great impression by his preaching wherever he goes.

The vote of the members of the Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church on the question of having "Bishops for races," up to the present, lacks a little of having secured the necessary two-thirds vote. The proposal to give the Bishops a veto power has thus far fallen short of a majority, to say nothing of the required two-thirds.

Bishop Kilgo is the revival chief pastor of Southern Methodism. It seems difficult for him to keep out of a meeting. He has lately conducted a series of services at Emory College, Oxford, Ga., and it has been announced that he will lead an evangelistic campaign in Saulsbury, N. C., in March. He has also lately been doing some unusually good writing for the religious press.

Rev. Caspar S. Wright, Vice-President of Southern Methodist University, has, with the assistance of Bishop Candler and Bishop Mouzon lately secured in the Houston (Texas) District $20,000 for the endowment of the Theological School of the fast-growing institution with which he is connected. Mr. Wright seems to be giving a fine account of himself in the responsible position which he holds.

DR. CARROLL'S CHURCH STATISTICS.

For a number of years Dr. H. K. Carroll has been giving in the month of January exhibits of Church statistics, which have come to be looked forward to with more than usual interest. He is now the Associate Secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and his summary has been issued as a "Bulletin" from that organization. We quote from it as follows:

"The European War did not, apparently, seriously affect the prosperity of the Churches of the United States in 1915. A net increase of nearly 651,000 communicants, says Dr. H. K. Carroll, the ecclesiastical statistician, speaking for the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, if not unusually large is certainly not abnormally small. It is fairly distributed among the larger denominations, excepting the Lutherans, who report a loss of nearly 11,000 for the year, much of which may be explained perhaps by faulty returns. The Catholics added nearly 188,000 to their numbers, the Methodists upward of 144,000, the Baptists nearly 131,000, the Presbyterians over 69,000, of which the Northern body had nearly 53,000 and the Southern almost 22,000. These last are quite unusual gains. The Protestant Episcopal Church is larger than it was by 25,648.

"An interesting fact is that the gains in the South were quite extraordinary. The Southern Baptists had an increase of 116,000 and more, and the Southern Methodists of 66,000; adding the Southern Presbyterians, the net increase of these three bodies was more than 204,000, or well on to a third of the aggregate gains for the year. The returns for the Disciples of Christ for 1915 are not yet ready. They would probably add materially to the increase of the year.

"A remarkable feature of Dr. Carroll's statistics, which will be published immediately in the Federal Council Year Book, is that there has been a net decrease, instead of the normal increase, of churches. The actual loss is not large, only 158, but in 1914 there was a gain of over 1300. The Lutherans quite unaccountably appear to have lost nearly a thousand churches during the year, partly due, perhaps, to defective statistics. Even in the South, which had so large an ingathering of members, there was little increase in churches. The Southern Baptist Convention reports losses as about offsetting gains; the Methodist Church, South, had a net increase of 96 and the Southern Presbyterians of only 8. The Northern Methodists gained 183. Several of the Presbyterian bodies, which enjoyed an unusual increase in communicants, show a falling off in the number of churches. The Northern Church, for example, has a net loss of 138.

"Doubtless the hard times that seem to have come upon the churches in the rural regions, and which have led to the closing of a number of churches which were formerly flourishing, and to the consolidation of many others, accounts at least in part for the decrease.

"The grand totals of ministers are 180,607, an increase of over 1700; of churches, 225,334, a decrease of 158; and of communicants, 39,380,718, a gain of 653,640.

"In their finances the Churches generally have not suffered. The total income for foreign missions was $1,600,000 greater in 1915 than in 1914; that for home missions shows a falling off of about $730,000. A very large amount in the aggregate was contributed through the Churches for war relief of one kind or another.

"The increase for the quarter century since 1890 is very large. Denominational groups of 100,000 communicants and upwards, embracing all but about 2,100,000, have nearly doubled their numbers. Having 19,328,000 in 1890, they now have 37,255,000, indicating a net gain for the twenty-five years of nearly 18,000,000, or more than 98 per cent."

In Dr. Carroll's tabular exhibits the numerical strength of the leading denominational families in the United States is given as follows: Roman Catholic, 14,079,208; Methodist, 7,172,108; Baptist, 6,307,055; Lutheran, 2,434,181; Presbyterian, 2,101,039; Disciples of Christ (Campbellites), 1,522,821; Protestant Episcopal, 1,051,696; Congregationalist, 771,362. The Latter Day Saints (Mormons) are credited with 397,000 members, and a net gain of 22,000. The Spiritualists are given as numbering 200,000; the Unitarians, 70,542; the Universalists, 55,000; the Theosophists, 1714. It is stated that the Christian Catholic Church (Dowie) has for years refused to give statistical information, and that the Christian Scientists, who are estimated at 85,096, have furnished no statistics since 1907. The Catholic statistics are taken by "population," which includes children who have not been admitted to their first communion. So in the figures given for the Catholics Dr. Carroll has followed the rule of deducting 15 per cent from the "population" statistics.

One of the most interesting tables furnished by Dr. Carroll is that which shows the percentage of growth in the United States of the denominations having over 300,000 members between 1890 and 1915—25 years. We give these figures in part: Roman Catholic, 125 per cent; Methodist Episcopal, 63; Southern Baptist, 111; Methodist Episcopal, South, 71; Baptist (Colored), 50; Presbyterian, Northern, 90; Disciples of Christ, 113; Baptist, North, 56, Protestant Episcopal, 96; Lutheran Synodical Conference, 130; Congregationalist, 50; African Methodist Episcopal, 37; African Methodist Episcopal Zion, 63; United Brethren, 68; Presbyterian, South, 118; Latter Day Saints, Utah, 77. The population of the United States in 1890 was 62,622,250; it is now estimated at something over 95,000,000, which would indicate an increase of between 60 and 70 per cent. So, it will be seen that the religious denominations are growing faster than the population of the country. The fact should not be overlooked, however, that some of these organizations can not be classed as sound and evangelical.

The British Government recently allowed 150 packages of powdered milk manufactured in the United States to be shipped from New York City to Germany and Austria-Hungary for the relief of suffering German babies.

RUSTON DISTRICT NOTES.

The Ruston District last year showed an increase in membership of 304. The benevolent collections showed about $700 gain over the year before, though in too many places the gifts to these causes were pitifully small. The works should remember that "up yonder" no credit comes to a work for paying its preacher and presiding elder. That is just paying your laborers. When you look over the statistics, of too many it can be said, "no credit."

Let the preachers make an effort this year to pay everything in full. There is not a work in this district that can not pay all of its claims, but for the same old reason—no, not reason, excuse. Sometimes I think that the whole "Can't family" joined the Methodist Church. I would like to letter some of them to others.

There was some material development. Jonesboro, Minden, and Sibley made additions to their houses to accommodate their Sunday schools.

Near the close of the year we suffered the loss of our building at Dubach. Brother McCain and his worthy flock there went to work immediately to rebuild. On the second Sunday in January I had the pleasure of preaching in their new brick church. It is a beauty, and could be an honor to many a place larger than Dubach.

Every preacher has started off well, except one, whom for reasons I released from his work. I am in need of a preacher for that point. We have thirteen new preachers in the district this year. Let us all go forward and make this the greatest year of ingathering that this district has ever had. Some time in March, as early as possible, we will have a missionary Institute. During April, Brother Coleman will hold three Sunday school institutes in the district: one at Minden for the west side and the L. and A. Railway, one at Gibbsland for the points along the L. and N. W. and Arcadia, and one at Ruston for the Rock Island and Simsboro.

Our district conference will be held in Sibley beginning the afternoon of July 25. Let all preachers take note and put no meetings for that week. To this we invite the Editor of the Advocate.

THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE.

By J. E. Pennebaker.

Bible study in childhood and youth brings into the life a blessing immeasurable. Parents who neglect the training of their children in a knowledge of the Bible are robbing them of a priceless heritage, because in this book we find the mind of God, the state of man, the way of salvation, the doom of sinners and the happiness of believers. Its doctrines are holy, its precepts are binding, its histories are true, and its decisions are immutable.

Read it to be wise, believe it to be safe, and practice it to be holy. It contains light to direct you, food to sustain you, and comfort to cheer you. It is the traveler's map, the pilgrim's staff, the pilot's compass, the soldier's sword, and the Christian's inspiration. Here paradise is restored, heaven is opened, and the gates of hell are disclosed. Christ is its grand subject, our good its design, and the glory of God its end. It should fill the memory, rule the heart, and guide the feet.

Read it slowly, frequently, prayerfully.

It is a mine of wealth, a paradise of glory, and a river of pleasure. It is given you in life, will be opened at the judgment, and be remembered forever. It involves the highest responsibility, it will reward the greatest labor, and it will condemn all who trifle with its solemn injunctions.

A visitor to a penitentiary once asked the chaplain if he thought that the five hundred men incarcerated there had been surrounded by Christian home influences in their childhood. The chaplain's reply was that most of them were there because of the woeful lack of home training. The world will never outgrow the living truth of God's Word. Read it.

The poet has beautifully expressed it in these words:

Study it carefully
Think of it prayerfully,
Deep in thy heart let its pure precepts dwell:
Slight not its history,
Ponder its mystery,
None can e'er prize it too fondly or well.
Accept the glad tidings,
The warnings and chidings
Found in the volume of heavenly love;
With faith that's unfailing,
And love all prevailing,
Trust in its promise of life evermore.

IT GREW.

A little boy made him a wee snowball,
And rolled it about in the snow;
And it gathered the crystals and clung to them all,
And O how that snowball did grow!
O my!
You've made one, of course, so you know!

A little boy whispered a word one day,
Unkind, of some one he knew,
And each one who heard it repeated his way
The story, till O how it grew!
O my!
And a heartache was caused by it, too.

Two little red mittens the small ball rolled
That grew in such magical way,
And a little red tongue was the one that told
The tale that grew big in a day.
O my!
Be careful, wee tongues, what you say!

ITS USE.

By Catha Wells.

Mother, Leslie offered me her new hat, to wear to the house party. Isn't that grand?"

"It certainly is generous of Leslie; but you did not accept, I trust."

"Of course I did. It is so becoming; and it just matches my blue suit."

"Eunice, you know I disapprove of borrowing. It is not honest, wearing other people's clothes as if they were your own; and it is a great responsibility and risk. I thought losing Betty's necklace would teach you that."

"O mother, that necklace is a perfect nightmare yet! Why, just think, I wore old clothes and went without treats for a year to replace it. But a hat is different; it cannot come unclasped and slip off without my knowing it. Now don't worry. I'll bring Leslie's beautiful hat home as good as new."

All during the visit the memory of her mother's words clung like a shadow in Eunice's mind. When home-going time came she stood before the mirror thoughtfully pinning on the borrowed hat. It was becoming; yet, after all, it had not been the satisfaction she had expected. She had winced every time anyone had praised it.

"That hat is certainly a dream, Eunice," said her hostess. "Where did you ever come across it?"

The girl turned with her mind half made up to explain, when a shout broke in on them. "Hurry up, Eunice, we're going down to the springs for a last drink."

She kissed her hostess and ran down the stairs and out through the yard after the others. At the first bend she saw they had chosen the bramble path where the trees and brush crowded one another for space. It was too late to go back to the house with her hat, so she hung it on a fence post and hurried into the thickest after the others.

One last drink of spring water, one last singing of "Auld Lang Syne" and the party trudged up the bramble path and out into the open.

Eunice glanced at the empty fence post. "Why, where's my hat?"

"Where did you leave it?" asked one of the boys.

"On the post."

"Well, Eunice," he started on a run, "don't you know that that is the calves' pasture? They will eat anything from chocolate drops to tin cans." He bounded over the fence and picked up a crumpled mass of straw and mud. "Is this your hat, Eunice?"

"Yes," Eunice gulped hard. She didn't intend to cry here before everyone; besides, crying never would restore that hat. She reached for it.

"Oh, they have chewed and pawed it till it is of no earthly use."

"Yes," said Eunice bravely, "it is of use: it's going to be worth thousands of dollars to me. I think I'll put a glass cover the kind you see over cheese in grocery stores over it and keep it till till—well, to tell you the truth," though she laughed, there was a sob just beneath the surface, "till I learn to mind my mother and not to wear things that belong to other people."—Christian intelligencer.

THE BLIND ALLEY OCCUPATIONS.

"It is now twenty-five years since I began to ride with you," I said to an elevator man yesterday.

"Yes," he replied in a melancholy way.

After twenty-six years' experience he runs an elevator no better than in the first year. In twenty-five years this man has passed from boyhood into full maturity.

In twenty-five years, moreover, he has lost rather than gained in strength. Happy hopefulness has passed into the sadness of non-achieving. The possibility of doing something worth while has faded into a fixed certainty of comparative failure.

At the age of eighteen he had entered into a blind alley, and for twenty-five years he has been coming nearer and nearer to its dark, impenetrable wall.

What should this man twenty-five years ago have done?

What should the tens of thousands of boys, who are thinking of how to earn a living, or of choosing a vocation, do? They should put before themselves formally and constantly the thought of entering a calling in which the demand is for power to work hard and even harder, for a brain ever clearer and stronger, for a resoluteness higher, and for a capacity always becoming deeper and broader. They should require of themselves the best that lieth in them. They should spurn the easy job. They should covet a hard one. They should transmute possibilities into powers and powers into achievements. The late Booker T. Washington said to me once: "It is a very good thing for a man to have a very hard job."

These boys should also set their faces toward a calling of increasingly progressive returns. Their earnings they should double every decade.

They should choose a work of which the demands become severer the longer it is pursued.

They should follow a calling which allows a better doing of its work every year and which makes the laborer a better man each year of his labor. Such a work responds with values in money, in direct results, in the regard of friends, and in the respect of the community.

The advisers of youth—parents, teachers and ministers—owe to boys a high duty in making keen and distant the difference between an occupation which is a blind alley and an occupation which is an avenue leading to larger opportunities, wider vision and richer service.

They should ever uphold the ideal of a calling which demands the noblest qualities of intellect, of heart, or will, and of the whole character.

The blind alley cannot lead to positive destruction. Its end is not a precipice, but rather the blind alley is a prison in which the higher life is both smothered and starved.—Charles F. Thwing, President Western Reserve University, in Detroit Tribune.

MRS. LILY MEEKINS.

Mrs. Lilly M. Meekins was born in Covington, La., November 12, 1819, and died January 9, 1916, at Mary Werlein Mission in New Orleans, La. Her parents were Ethan A. and Melinda M. Colton. She was married quite young to Mr. John Meekins and had one child, an invalid, Nellie Meekins, who died just a few months previous to her mother's death. She has been a widow and resident of New Orleans for forty years. Sister Meekins was one of the best and most successful among the Christian workers of the Southern Methodist Church. Her niece says of her: "She was sometimes called impractical, but she might better have been called 'impractically practical,' for after all she took the shortest cut to accomplish her work, getting straight to the hearts of her people by Christ's method of unselfish devotion and service. Her methods often appeared impracticable and strange because they were so rare and unusual in their absolute unselfishness."

My first acquaintance with Mrs. Meekins was in my early ministry, when I was pastor and she a member of Louisiana Ave. Church. I soon realized that I had in my flock there no one more consistent and true in the Christian walk, and none more zealous in efforts to win souls. Ever ready in prayer and active labor to seek and save the lost. Always in her place at divine service, she frequently brought with her fresh material of unsaved persons that they might be converted. In those days the call to the altar for prayer was scarcely ever omitted, and when mourners were called Sister Meekins was always right there, kneeling with the penitents and helping them to find the Savior.

When she was put in charge of the Tchoupitoulas Street Mission, as it was first called, all who knew her declared that no better choice for a manager could have been made. Her whole career in that needy and spiritually dark section of the city was one of splendid success, as she went about and into the homes of the neglected, and the afflicted, and the sinful, carrying her heart of intense affection and telling of her one desire to help them to a better life, and inviting all to come to the Mission and find the Man of the Cross—always ready to sympathize, heal and save unto the uttermost. It would scarcely be possible to count the great number of people helped, saved, and made gloriously happy in that modest little Mission, always bright with the presence of the Master. Sister Meekins was the center and inspiration of the good work, and difficult indeed will it be for another to fill her place.

She hath done what she could; her record is on high, and her crown is studded with stars. Suddenly called home, she was ready; and the quiet, consecrated, loving, faithful and ever-at-work Christian fell on sleep, and awoke in glory.

Editorial

A REGRETTABLE OCCURRENCE.

We inferred from the press dispatch sent out from Baltimore, Md., last week that the Commission appointed to pass upon the question of priority between Philip Embury and John Street Church in New York and Robert Strawbridge and the Sam Creek Log Meeting-House in Maryland had held a harmonious session and had reached a unanimous conclusion. But the New York Christian Advocate of February 3 discloses the fact that this unhappily was not true. It now appears that of the seven men who represented the Methodist Episcopal Church on the Commission, the three from New York, Dr. W. V. Kelley, Dr. H. K. Carroll, and Dr. J. S. Chadwick, presented a statement calling attention to the action of the College of Bishops of the Northern Church advising that no meeting of the Commission be held until after the approaching session of their General Conference, and affirming that the action which they (the Bishops) had taken was "in effect an impeachment of the fitness and competency of the Commission to make a fair and impartial historical inquiry and reach a decision that would command respect." These gentlemen, furthermore, declined to participate in the proceedings of the Commission or to accept its findings.

Undeterred by the withdrawal of the New York representatives, the other members of the Commission, including four representatives of the Methodist Episcopal Church, since all were on the ground, decided to proceed with the task which had been committed to their hands. Fourteen members were present, as follows: H. M. Du Bose, W. F. Tillett, and J. B. Myers, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; H. L. Elderdice, W. H. Litzinger, J. M. Sheridan, Frank T. Little, Daniel Baker, W. A. Atwood, and T. W. Donoho, of the Methodist Protestant Church; W. F. Conner, J. F. Goucher, C. W. Baldwin, and E. L. Watson, of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Dr. H. M. Du Bose was elected chairman, and Dr. E. L. Watson was named as secretary. After giving a whole day to the consideration of the evidence, which included more than two hundred volumes and manuscripts, at a late hour at night a vote was taken by secret ballot, the result being, as was stated in the Advocate last week, that every commissioner present declared in favor of the claim of priority for Strawbridge and the Sam Creek Log Church.

It is much to be regretted that the Commission was unable to discharge the work which it was constituted to do without the unpleasant development brought about by the members from New York and the Board of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church. For the Bishops to have named the representatives of their denomination on the Commission, which was duly authorized by their General Conference, and subsequently to have joined in "impeaching its fitness and competency," before it had even assembled, seems to us to have been a strange course of procedure for that dignified body.

We are also sorry to note the following language in the brief editorial mention made of the work of the Commission in the New York Christian Advocate: "The case of New York was not presented, and the Joint Commission (composed with one exception of men from Maryland and the farther South), after deliberation, voted unanimously in favor of the Maryland contention." Did the mere fact that these men happened to be "from Maryland and the farther South" disqualify them for being honest, fair, and accurate in making a purely historical investigation? The one member from elsewhere, presumably from the North, who served on the Commission does not appear to have been controlled by sectional prejudice in the vote which he cast; and it seems a pity that the members from the "farther South" should in advance have been pronounced incapable of rising to that level. It may also be well to note that, though the "case of New York" may not have been "presented" by special advocates, it was carefully probed into and considered by the scholarly and capable men conducting the inquiry.

But regrettable as was the withdrawal of the New York members of the Commission, under the attending circumstances, the decision which that body reached will, in our opinion, carry with it much weight and be generally accepted as finally determinative of the questions at issue. A paper from the pen of Dr. Goucher which is said to deal exhaustively with the subject has been promised the public in the near future, and will doubtless be awaited with much interest.

HOLDS TO HIS MOTHER'S FAITH.

We are reproducing from the New York Christian Advocate this week a remarkably forceful and pertinent sermon by Bishop J. C. Kilgo, which we hope none of our readers will overlook. Our distinguished contemporary refers as follows to this vigorous discourse:

"Bishop Kilgo's sermon is of a quality that will commend it to a wide circle. Complying with our request for a discourse for publication in The Advocate Pulpit, he wrote: 'You will find at least that I still hold to a calico theology. I confess I got it from my sainted mother, and after all the studying I have done, I have come back to her faith, the faith in which she lived her beautiful life and went away with joy and assurance. I do feel that we are suffering from the delusions of a secularized faith. If you decide to publish my effort at a written sermon, I pray it may help some toiling saint along the road to the city of our God, where I hope to get some day, I trust, before the sun goes down.'"

A MOST IMPORTANT AND URGENT MATTER.

No institutions in Mississippi and Louisiana are doing a nobler work than our two Orphanages at Jackson and Ruston. Both of them are making records that deserve hearty commendation, and they should be kept well supplied with the means and facilities to discharge efficiently the sacred task of caring for the orphan children of the Church, which has been committed to them. What they most need is a REGULAR income sufficiently large to cover their monthly expenses as they become due. With perhaps more money in the treasury at one time than is immediately needed and none at another time, our Superintendents find it difficult to keep in operation such a system of management as they desire. Borrowing money is always an unpleasant and hazardous thing for an institution that is dependent upon voluntary benevolence for its maintenance. If our churches and Sunday schools would adopt the plan of making on one Sunday in each month an offering for the Orphanage which it is expected to help, measuring up to a certain pledged amount wherever it is possible, the annoying financial problems which so often confront the Managers of these institutions would be effectively solved. Recognizing this fact, the two Mississippi Conferences at their recent sessions adopted the following resolution:

"Realizing the need of adequate financial support for our Orphanage and the necessity of a systematic plan for contributions to meet the monthly obligations of that institution,

"Resolved, That all our pastors, Sunday school superintendents, and other members be urged to observe one Sunday in each month for regular contributions to the Methodist Orphanage, and that the same be sent promptly to the District Secretary of the Home in each presiding elder's district, or to Rev. J. B. Randolph, Manager, Jackson, Miss."

We are informed that a copy of this resolution has been mailed to every Methodist pastor and Sunday school superintendent in the State of Mississippi, and it is to be hoped that they will without delay act upon these suggestions of their Annual Conference. Here also is an opportunity for the District Secretaries of the Home to do some good work. We have in hand a printed card from the District Secretary of the Corinth District, Rev. R. P. Neblett, of Ripley, Miss., which shows that he is energetically bringing this matter to the attention of the brethren in his territory. His activity in this respect is much to be commended.

The Mississippi Orphanage is in urgent need of funds at this time. Rev. J. B. Randolph, the Superintendent, writes us as follows: "We now have about 215 or 220 children in the Home. We need a boiler to heat our main building, the girls' dormitory, and the laundry. Besides this, we need at least $1000 to make some needed repairs. The roofs of the three buildings need attention—the leaks are causing the plastering to fall off. The front porch has decayed until it needs to be made almost new again. These needs are urgent. But we are not now getting as much money as is necessary to meet our unavoidable running expenses."

This is a call which should be given a prompt and generous response. True, there are many other demands, but we should not let anything keep us from providing for these more than 200 children who have only the Church to look to for their care and support. No other cause will be hurt by what may be done for this one. So, let the matter be taken up in every community at once and let Brother Randolph hear from every church and Sunday school in Mississippi at the earliest day possible.

GOOD FOR GRENADA!

Bishop James Atkins spent Sunday, January 30, at Grenada, Miss., in the interest of the movement to secure $50,000 for Grenada College. He occupied the pulpit of our Church at 11 a. m., and, following his able and appealing discourse, a collection amounting to about $6000 was taken in cash and subscriptions. The claims of the institution were subsequently presented to others and the total amount pledged was increased to approximately $10,000.

This is an excellent showing for Grenada and demonstrates that the people of the city in which the College is located are strongly attached to it and are truly interested in its future. This generous subscription ought to serve as a challenge to the Methodists in other North Mississippi towns and cities and lead them to get busy and lend a strong helping hand to this important undertaking. Including the subscription secured at the late session of the North Mississippi Conference, at New Albany, the amount now pledged is about $30,000, and the canvass is yet scarcely under way. We congratulate President Countiss and Commissioner Jaco upon this fine beginning. This movement in behalf of Grenada College will succeed. But it behooves the 60,000 Methodists of North Mississippi to lay themselves out to make the measure of success achieved as large as possible. A hundred thousand dollars would not be adequate to do for Grenada College what really ought to be done, though it would vastly increase its facilities and widen the reach of its influence.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. A. I. Townsley, of Crowley, La., will assist Rev. C. M. Morris in a revival meeting at Epworth Church, this city, which is to begin on February 20.

A correspondent writes us that the general outlook for the work in the Seashore District is very hopeful. Manned as that important field is, this information is not surprising.

Dr. Theodore Copeland, of Hot Springs, Ark., has recently assisted Rev. A. N. Goforth, formerly of the North Mississippi Conference, in a successful meeting at Wagoner, Oklahoma.

Rev. W. J. Walters is pleased with the status of his work at Chunky, Miss., and thinks that the situation is decidedly more promising than it was last year. He is serving a good people.

The Minutes of the Louisiana Annual Conference are out in their usual excellent form, and are now being distributed to the pastors. All should receive them in a few days if they have not already done so.

Rev. H. T. Young, of Amite, La., was in New Orleans last Monday, having come to the city to secure medical treatment for his little son's eyes. He finds plenty to do in his new field, and thinks the prospect is encouraging.

Plans are under way to secure a district parsonage for the New Orleans District. A number of leading Methodists of the city held a meeting last week in the interest of this enterprise, with results that were stated to be gratifying.

Rev. W. C. Carlisle, of Guntown, Miss., states that his work is in an encouraging condition, and that he is hopeful of good progress being made during the year. We make grateful acknowledgment to him for a club of 6 subscriptions to the Advocate.

Brother F. A. Howell, of Durant, Miss., has sent for a list of our subscribers at that place, and states that he will look after the matter of getting them to renew. The Advocate has a number of fast friends among the Methodists of that progressive little city.

Mr. L. Lagrone Tigert, of Ripley, Miss., who is Sergeant-at-Arms of the Mississippi State Senate, is a member of the Senior Law Class at Millsaps College. It is stated that after his graduation he will probably locate at Laurel, Miss., for the practice of his profession.

Rev. J. F. Foster of Shreveport, Rev. F. R. Power and Mr. T. F. Smith of Pelican, and Mr. O. F. Moore, of Mitchell, La., were in New Orleans this week to attend the Masonic Grand Lodge of Louisiana, and complimented the Advocate office with a call.

Mrs. Moore, the widow of Rev. J. H. Moore, late of the Mississippi Conference, was married on January 25, 1916, to Rev. J. R. McGlaun, of the Alabama Conference, whose home is at Coffeeville, Clarke County, Ala. The Advocate extends congratulations and best wishes.

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not elsewhere been made for two or more subscriptions sent in within the past few days: Dr. J. M. Henry, Ruston, La., 2; Rev. M. M. Black, Canton, Miss., 5; Rev. J. M. Wyatt, Booneville, Miss., 7.

Rev. J. H. Bell, of Columbus, Miss., one of the North Mississippi Conference evangelists, passed through New Orleans last Saturday en route to Houma, La., where he is this week assisting in a series of revival services. While in the city, he favored the Advocate office with a call.

What about the circulation of the Advocate in your charge, brother pastor? Is an effort being made to secure renewals and new subscriptions? Our first exhibit of the standing of the districts as to circulation will be forthcoming at an early date. How will your charge appear in the list?

Rev. W. S. Lagrone, of Drew, Miss., says: "Things are moving along well here and we have the promise of a good year. I am serving a good people, who seem to be ready for any good work; but there is much to do." Brother Lagrone's letter brought us 7 subscriptions, for which he has our thanks.

In a brief note referring to what the city of Grenada had done for Grenada College, Commissioner B. P. Jaco says: "We have had gratifying success at other points also. I will go to Senatobia next Sunday, February 6, and probably to Corinth the Sunday following. The movement is about to move."

Dr. I. W. Cooper, President of Whitworth College, was in New Orleans the latter part of last week and brightened our sanctum with his genial presence. He stated that the work is progressing finely at Whitworth. The Commencement sermon of that institution will this year be preached by Bishop James Atkins.

The first quarterly conference of the Heidelberg (Miss.) charge, of which Rev. J. W. Ramsey is pastor, was an occasion of much interest. The finances were in advance of those of last year at the same date. This appointment is in the "diocese" of Rev. G. H. Thompson, who as a presiding elder ranks with the best to be found anywhere.

Dr. E. H. Rawlings, who is connected with our General Board of Missions, is a most energetic and faithful worker. He has recently met the two Conference Boards of Missions in Mississippi and has been in consultation with the presidng elders of the two Conferences with a view to strengthening the missionary interests of the Church in that State. Dr. Rawlings' activity in the field is much to be commended.

On Friday evening, February 18, the Carrollton Avenue Church, New Orleans, will celebrate its thirtieth anniversary. An interesting program will be rendered and the ladies of the congregation will serve refreshments with a view to securing funds needed to aid in carrying forward the work. The exercises will begin promptly at eight o'clock p. m. The general public, and especially the Methodists of the city, are cordially invited to be present.

Rev. C. M. Simpson has recently succeeded in carrying forward to completion the new Oak Lawn Church of Dallas, Texas. This fine structure, including the equipment and grounds, is valued at $100,000. It was formally opened on January 23, with a brilliant sermon by Bishop E. D. Mouzon. Brother Simpson, who is one of the most efficient young ministers in the connection, is an ex-Mississippian and a Millsaps College man.

Rev. W. D. Bass, of Corinth, Miss., writes as follows: "Brother T. H. Dorsey, our new presiding elder, has started off nicely on the Corinth District. The people are delighted with him. Brother J. E. Cunningham has made a fine impression at First Church. Brother D. L. Cogdell is preaching the old-time gospel with his usual earnestness at Southside, and the Corinth Circuit people were never better pleased than they are with Brother A. L. Davenport."

From Flora, Miss., Rev. M. F. Adams forwarded to us on the 3d inst. 2 new and 3 renewal subscriptions, appending in his communication the following statement: "I find the Advocate highly thought of by the people in this charge who are subscribers, and it is my purpose to try to extend its circulation among my members." Brother Adams is one of the promising young pastors of the Mississippi Conference, and does not believe in neglecting any interest of the Church.

Rev. P. D. Hardin requests us to state that the Jackson District Conference will be held at Raymond, Miss., beginning with the opening sermon on Monday night, May 8, by Rev. T. H. King, of Terry. Brother Hardin adds: "The outlook over the district is very encouraging. The pastors are all at their posts and without exception have begun well. We are with you in the campaign to increase the circulation of the Advocate. You are giving us a splendid paper, and it should be read by all our people."

Rev. W. A. Bowlin, of Cedar Bluff, Miss., writes: "The work has opened well in this charge. The attendance upon public worship is large and the outlook is encouraging. Our first quarterly conference was held here January 29 and 30, with the collections 30 per cent in advance of those of last year at the corresponding date. Rev. W. W. Woollard, our presiding elder, preached a great sermon on Sunday, to the delight of all who heard him. I am taking care of the interests of the Advocate; I cannot get along without my 'assistant pastor.'"

Rev. J. F. Campbell, of Benton, Miss., gives us a club of 6 subscriptions to the Advocate, and appends the following note: "We are having a good time among this good people. The presiding elder, Brother Hardin, is to be with us Saturday and Sunday, February 5 and 6, and you know that we will have a good time then—a good, old-fashioned country dinner on the ground, with plenty of well-cooked fresh meat, sausage, etc." With the prospect of such a spread in contemplation, along with a sermon by Brother Hardin, we think that Brother Campbell was fully warranted in growing enthusiastic over what he had ahead.

The Holly Springs (Miss.) Reporter, in a recent issue, says: "The attendance upon the services at the Methodist Church here increases each Sunday. The main auditorium was crowded to its capacity last Sabbath, January 30, both in the morning and evening." Dr. H. G. Henderson, the popular pastor, recently organized at Holly Springs an Epworth League with 30 members. He is the President of the North Mississippi Conference Epworth League Board, and believes in setting a good example in the promotion of that important work, which means so much to the young people of the Church.

We are informed that the campaign to raise $500,000 for Emory University in the city of Atlanta has been a complete success, and that possibly more than the expected amount will be secured.

"Heroes of the Faith and China" and "A New Light in an Old Land" are the two volumes that have been prepared for use in our Sunday schools during the present year. The two books can be had for 20 cents, and they ought to be secured and used by every school from the largest to the smallest. Order of the Department of Sunday School Supplies, Smith & Lamar, Agents, Nashville, Tenn., or Dallas, Texas.

The Editor was delighted to have as visitors last Saturday morning Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Burgess, who were married at Shelby, Miss., by Rev. W. M. Campbell on Feb. 1, and who had come to New Orleans on their honeymoon trip. The bride was formerly Mrs. Goldie M. Winkler, and is the accomplished daughter of Dr. and Mrs. T. J. Mayers, of Shelby, where she is noted for her activity in church work and has a wide circle of friends and admirers. Mr. Burgess is a prominent young Mississippi business man, being connected with the Interstate Coffee Company at Natchez. For the present, the happy young couple will make Shelby their home.

The services at the Carrollton Avenue Church of this city were of unusual interest last Sunday. A large congregation greeted the pastor, Rev. N. E. Joyner, at 11 a.m. who delivered a very impressive discourse. The evening hour was given over to the graduating exercises of four gradnates from the Teacher-Training Class of the Sunday school—Miss Ruth Chalmers, Miss Edna Desemar, Miss Emma Kuntz, and Mrs. C. H. McFee, each of whom took part in the excellent program rendered. The music was especially good, and the diplomas were happily awarded by the Sunday school superintendent, Mr. John Carter. Miss Eddie Bentley, the accomplished teacher of the graduating class, is to be congratulated on the splendid showing made by these young ladies.

Brother J. H. Blakemore, of Corinth, Miss., writes: "We rejoice with you over the showing made by the Tupelo Sunday school, and we congratulate the Tupelo Methodists. Considering the size of the town, it was 'great,' the record being 835 scholars present; collection, $79.61. First Church, Corinth, had present at Sunday school this morning, Feb. 6 (and it was a rainy day), 1115, and the collection was $104. We expect a still larger attendance next Sunday, as we hope to have Miss Kilpatrick and Mr. R. M. Weaver with us. They have been with us only one Sunday this year. We always do better when they are at home. Mr. Weaver is our superintendent, and Miss Kilpatrick is the teacher of the Young Men's Bible Class." The foregoing leads the Editor to say, Great also is Corinth. Tupelo has no monopoly of greatness.

MEETING OF THE HOSPITAL COMMISSIONERS.

The Board of Commissioners of the Methodist Hospital, Memphis, Tenn., will meet in annual session in the First Methodist Church of Memphis, Tenn., on Tuesday morning, February 29, at 10:30 o'clock. Lunch will be served at the Church, and during the afternoon the Commissioners will visit the Hospital grounds in a body and look over the site. All matters pertaining to the Hospital will be open for discussion and consideration at this meeting. All interested friends will be welcome.

Girls! Try it! Hair gets soft, fluffy and beautiful—Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine.

If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You can not have nice heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store and just try it.

Mrs. E. V. ODEN EVANS died on Jan. 14, 1916, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. H. P. Matthews, at Greenwood, La. The deceased was born on July 11, 1849, at Bethesda, Tenn. Sister Evans had resided in this town since 1891, during which time she made many friends. In vain did loving hands do all within their power to alleviate her sufferings and keep her with us. She said she was trusting God. Hers was a busy life up to her last illness, which lasted many months. Looking on her hands, we thought of the many times they had ministered to the sick and suffering ones about her. She joined the M. E. Church when fifteen years of age. Eight grown children survive.

A FRIEND.

The hearts of those in our home and vicinity were made to grieve over the loss of our friend and brother, J. W. STRONG, who had lived to a ripe old age of 66 years. He had hoped to be taken suddenly from his suffering, and God in his infinite mercy saw fit to change him in the "twinkling of an eye" to that happy home to which he had been preparing for years to go. Brother Strong leaves a wife, nine children, and a host of friends to mourn their loss. He was a faithful friend to the Church, having served as a steward for 22 years. His life was a benediction to all who knew him. While we regret to lose him, we know there is one more added to the number of God's people in that home beyond. May God's blessings be showered upon all his loved ones and may the beloved wife be comforted by these words: "Blessed are they that die in the Lord!" A FRIEND.

Utica, Miss.

Mrs. STACIA BARKSDALE MARTIN was born in 1832. With the exception of the first two years of the Civil War, when she lived at Woodville, Miss., her life was spent in or near the town of Magnolia, Miss., and in the latter place her earthly life came to its end on Nov. 3, 1915. Sister Martin was the mother of three sons and four daughters, all of whom, save one son and one daughter, survive. This good woman became a Christian in early life, and was a devout member of the Methodist Church to the day of her death. She always manifested great interest in the visits of the pastor, and frequently made fervent responses while he prayed. In her last illness she expressed a willingness to depart and be with the Lord. Among the last utterances heard to fall from her lips was an allusion to the "house not made with hands."

Funeral services were conducted from the home of her son, D. W. Martin, and the body was laid to rest in the family burying-ground near Muddy Springs Church, the writer and Brother F. B. Ormond officiating. May the sorrowing ones meet her again!

J. A. MOORE.

WILLIAM S. AKIN was born on May 3, 1845, and died at his home in Union Parish, near Bernice, La., on Dec. 28, 1915. He was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in early life. His death, although not wholly unexpected, was a great shock to his family and many friends. He suffered much, but he bore his afflictions with Christian fortitude. He believed that "all things work together for good to them that love God." He loved God and trusted in him and did not fear death. When the messenger came he was ready, and rejoiced that he was soon to enter upon that rest that shall never end. He passed quietly and peacefully away. He was a devoted husband and an affectionate father. He served his day and generation well. He will be sorely missed in the church and community. Many weary itinerants who found a resting place under his roof, and a cordial welcome at his table, will in the great day rise up and call him "blessed." His tired body was laid to rest in old Alabama Cemetery, where it will await the resurrection morn. May our Father in heaven comfort and sustain the bereaved ones! J. O. BENNETT.

On Sunday morning, Nov. 7, 1915, at 2:30 o'clock, the death angel came for our beloved friend, Mrs. ANN ELIZA JONES, at the ripe age of 90 years. "Grandma," as we loved to call her, was born in Dinwiddie County, Va., on March 16, 1825, and was a granddaughter of Captain Williamson Coleman, who figured in the Revolutionary War. She was also related to Mrs. Pickens, wife of Gov. Pickens, of South Carolina, and Mrs. Wheeler (nee Hallette Erminie Rives), and to Armelia Rives, now Princess Troubetzkay. Her married life was spent in Greenwood, La.; here she celebrated her ninetieth birthday last March, when relatives and friends with gifts and good wishes participated in the joyous occasion. She has been a member of the Methodist Church since the age of fourteen. She was devoted to her Church and her Lord, and was generous and kind-hearted to all. She possessed a remarkable memory, a mind stored with gems of verse and enriched with beautiful passages from the Scripture, which she loved and cherished in her heart. Two children survive her, a daughter, Miss Pinka, who lives in Fort Worth, Texas, and a son, Joshua Green, of Shreveport, La. Her life was that of a noble-hearted Christian. She was ready and waiting to meet her God when he should call. Her friend,

EMMA PHILLIPS.

LEWIS FLEWELLAN CLOWERS PEARCE was born in Oxford, Ala., on Feb 29, 1870, and died near Belcher, La., on Dec. 7, 1915. He came from Oxford, Ala., to Louisiana in 1889 and had lived near Shreveport and Belcher ever since he came to this State. Mr. Pearce was married in 1803 to Miss Helen Kendall, of Dallas, Texas, and they had resided near Belcher continuously since their marriage. Ellie, as he was familiarly called by his friends, was always ready to lend a helping hand in humanity's hour of need, and as a member of the Church he was a tower of strength in every good cause to the extent of his ability. As friend, husband, father, son, brother, and neighbor, he was excelled by no man. He had no enemies and his friends were coequal in number with his acquaintances. His lovely home, presided over by a kind and generous host and hostess, was a synonym of hospitality for all who entered its wide-open doors. During the last few years of his life Mr. Pearce declined in health and, in spite of the most skillful medical treatment, he grew worse and worse until his friends felt the greatest solicitude; but the sad end came even sooner than was expected. A large family connection holds his memory in the fondest esteem. He leaves a devoted wife and several lovely children, three brothers, W. C. Pearce, Preston Pearce, and George Pearce; also two sisters, Mrs. J. McW. Ford and Miss Susan Pearce, all of whom sadly mourn this loved one's departure. Only a long life of Christian fortitude and faith in Christ sustains the grieved father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Pearce, as they mourn the absence of their children, as they depart one by one beyond the veil.

"No wherefore? nor to what good end?
Shall, out of doubt or anguish, creep in our hearts,
We bow our heads. He giveth His beloved sleep."

Have Dark Hair and Look Young

Nobody can Tell when you Darken Gray, Faded Hair with Sage Tea.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and abundant with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair fell out or took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, ready to use, for about 50 cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair and is splendid for dandruff, dry, itchy scalp and falling hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and abundant.—Adv.

Why Suffer With Backache, Kidneys or Rheumatism Now?

Dear Readers:

Before using "Anuric Tablets" I had such a terrible backache that I could hardly do my housework, but after taking one box I could do my work with comfort. I take pleasure in recommending both "Anuric" and "Favorite Prescription," as they have done wonders for me. I would advise others to try them because I know they will find great relief. You all have undoubtedly heard of the famous Dr. Pierce and his well-known medicines. His late discovery, "Anuric," is one that has been successfully used by the physicians and specialists at Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, In Buffalo, N. Y., for backache and kidney complaint. It is good for diseases arising from disorders of kidneys and bladder, such as backache, weak back, rheumatism, inflammation of bladder, scalding urine and urinary troubles.

Mrs. S. M. SIMONS.

Note: No matter where you live, Dr. Pierce can help you if you suffer from any of the chronic complaints, pains and aches which so often afflict mankind and womankind. You and Dr. Pierce can get together, by mail, without anybody knowing it, and he will give you his careful, simple, expert advice as a physician, without fee.

To prove that "Anuric" is a certain uric acid solvent and conquers headache, backache, kidney and bladder disease, and rheumatism, send 10 cents to Dr. Pierce for a large trial package of ANURIC, and send for FREE medical treatise on any chronic disease which you may name. Scientists affirm that this remedy is thirty-seven times more potent than lithia. If you are a sufferer, go to your druggist and ask for a 50 cent box of "Anuric."

MINISTER TELLS HOW HE WAS RESTORED TO HEALTH.

The splendid restorative powers of Dr. Miles' Nervine were never better demonstrated than by the experience of the Rev. W. J. Houck, of Greencastle, Pa. We will quote from a statement that he made recently:

"Several years ago I experienced some severe nervous shocks, which came at a time when my nervous strength and vitality had been greatly taxed by a severe season of work. My health was affected and I was seriously threatened with nervous prostration. I could not sleep at night and was so nervous that I would start at every little noise. My appetite was poor and it seemed almost impossible for me to gain strength. Through the advice of a friend I began taking Dr. Miles' Nervine and Liver Pills. I soon saw that my health was improving. Instead of that tired and wornout feeling which had so oppressed me, I felt strong and cheerful. I could sleep soundly all night and would awake in the morning feeling rested and refreshed. Since that time, whenever I am overworked or feel "rundown" I find a bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine is a wonderful help in bracing me up and in giving me renewed strength and health."

Dr. Miles' Nervine will prove equally beneficial to others who are nervous and run-down from overwork or from any other reason, and if it fails to benefit you your money will be cheerfully refunded. It can be purchased at any drug store.

MERIDIAN DISTRICT NOTES.

"Success comes in CANS, and failure in CAN'TS." The work starts well throughout the district, and the brethren, both laymen and preachers, who were at the District Stewards' meeting, had "the upward look" and seemed determined to eliminate the "CAN'TS" this year.

Rev. H. B. Watkins, Rev. J. A. Moore, Rev. B. L. Sutherland and Rev. H. S. Westbrook, the new pastors at Meridian, have all started well, and they, with their people, are planning great things for the year's work. Brother Westbrook will soon be in a new bungalow parsonage at Seventh Avenue, and Brother Sutherland and his people are laying plans and gathering materials for a splendid new parsonage at Poplar Springs.

Rev. J. T. Leggett begins this, the last year of his quadrennium as presiding elder with his usual manifest interest in getting all of the departments of the Church started right. His superior pulpit ministrations, executive discretion, and uniform brotherliness have rallied the forces of the district to his leadership, and victory is confidently expected.

Rev. D. E. Kelly and Rev. S. E. Kirby, his singer, have recently closed a gracious revival with Brother McClelland at DeKalb, which resulted in a general uplift to the town and surrounding country.

The following brethren of the district attended the Laymen's Convention at Jackson, Jan. 26-30: Revs. J. T. Leggett, C. C. Evans, J. F. McClelland, A. M. Broadfoot (and one of his laymen), H. B. Watkins, Brother L. P. Brown, Dr. J. W. Beeson, and J. L. Decell.

NUNTIUS.

WIGGINS, MISS.

Our church here observed the week of prayer in a way that proved beneficial and helpful to all concerned. Each night we studied one of our mission fields and made our workers there the objects of special prayer that night. We began with an attendance of 23 and on the closing night had 63 present. The average attendance was 46. The self-denial offering was $9.25. The Tuesday following we began a revival meeting and closed it last Sunday, Jan. 30, running 19 days. Rev. P. H. Howse, of Hattiesburg, did the preaching after the first week, and Mr. Geo. Avery of Biloxi led the singing. This is the fourth time that Brother Howse has helped me in revival work, and at no time was his work more effective than in this meeting. His sermons were thoroughly Scriptural, logical, and powerful in their appeal to the reason and intellect. He was unsparing in his condemnation of all forms of sin, thereby arousing criticism, but he fearlessly stood his ground and won the approval of all the earnest Christians who heard him. Brother Avery did most effective work as a leader of song and as a soloist. He speedily won the respect and esteem of all our workers, and, with them, gave us the best singing we have ever had here. Our preachers ought to keep him busy. According to my best judgment we had a genuinely good meeting—the best I have known in my 12 years in the Mississippi Conference—not in the number of accessions to the church membership, but in the depth of conviction shown and by the sincere and earnest penitence of those who sought to know the Lord. Our fast day was notable from the fact that we had to hold two altar services, and after that, before we could leave the house, there were three distinct groups of people praying for and pointing some penitent to Jesus. I can never forget the scenes and experiences of that day. Twice during the meeting, at critical periods, when the rain bade fair to hinder the work, prayer was offered in faith and the skies cleared and the work went on. Perhaps no other one happening of the meeting made a deeper impression on careless men of the town than that. I do not know how many conversions and reclamations we had, but there were many; 22 united with the Church, most of those joining being adults. Beside paying my helpers well, a thank offering for missions was taken that will insure the payment of the assessment on this charge in full, I think. On last Saturday night, with two moving picture shows in full blast, the church building was full to its capacity, and on Sunday every seat and all available chairs were filled. My physical strength held out well, and I am deeply grateful to my Heavenly Father for his mercies.—James L. Sells, P. C.

TO THE PREACHERS AND PRESIDING ELDERS OF THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

At the suggestion of Bishop Atkins, the presiding elders adopted the form of report which was printed in the official organ of the Conference a few weeks since. The preachers in each district are to make their reports upon the blanks that will be furnished them by the presiding elder, to the presiding elder, who will, from the reports gathered from all the preachers in his district, make a report for the whole district to the Bishop, and also send a district report to each presiding elder. These reports will be made quarterly, without any reference to the quarterly meetings. For instance, the first quarter of the Conference year closes with the third Sunday in February. During the week before that day the presiding elders will send a blank for the preacher to fill out, to each preacher in his district. He reports everything up to and including the third Sunday in February. He sends this report to his presiding elder as soon thereafter as possible and the presiding elder fills out his district blanks and forwards them to the Bishop and the other presiding elders, so that each presiding elder will have a quarterly report from each charge and preacher.

These blanks will be sent out to the preachers quarterly. The next report will come after the third Sunday in May.

Please fill out and return the blank sent to you to your presiding elder as soon as possible.

Woman's Crowning Glory

is Beautiful Hair—coveted by all, but possessed by few. If you have allowed your hair to become coarse, stiff, streaked with gray or void of its original lustre, the trouble lies in the absence of the natural hair oil. There can be no life without food, so unless the hair is well fed with proper oil it cannot be expected to retain its lustre and beauty.

La Creole Hair Color Restorer, when applied to the scalp, will restore those ugly, grizzly hairs to their natural color and at the same time leave the hair light and fluffy.

The tremendous success of La Creole Hair Dressing has encouraged a large number of imitations. The merit of this preparation has been proven through fifty years continuous use; and just as counterfeit money never reaches the same high plane of value as the genuine, so none of the imitations of "La Creole" Hair Dressing ever attain the peculiar value of the original. Ask for "La Creole" Hair Dressing and refuse to accept any substitute. For sale by all dealers. Price $1.00. Manufactured by Van-Vleet-Mansfield Drug Co., Memphis, Tenn.—Adv.

HEAT FLASHES, DIZZY, NERVOUS

Mrs. Wynn Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her During Change of Life.

Richmond, Va.—"After taking seven bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I feel like a new woman. I always had a headache during the Change of Life and was also troubled with other bad feelings common at that time—dizzy spells, nervous feelings and heat flashes. Now I am in better health than I ever was and recommend your remedies to all my friends."—Mrs. LENA WYNN, 2812 E. O Street, Richmond, Va.

While Change of Life is a most critical period of a woman's existence, the annoying symptoms which accompany it may be controlled, and normal health restored by the timely use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Such warning symptoms are a sense of suffocation, hot flashes, headaches, backaches, dread of impending evil, timidity, sounds in the ears, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and inquietude, and dizziness.

For these abnormal conditions do not fail to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

REV. A. W. HOFFPAUIR.

Rev. A. W. Hoffpauir was the son of Silas and Lucinda Hoffpauir. He was born on July 24, 1886, near Rayne, La. When but a boy he was converted at Bethel Church, in the cemetery in which he now lies. At seventeen years of age he was licensed to preach, attended Centenary College at Jackson, and afterwards Millsaps College. After his father's death, he cared for his mother and two young sisters until his mother's death. He was married on June 28, 1911, and was received on trial in the Louisiana Annual Conference at Crowley, in 1913, and was sent to the Port Vincent charge; in 1914, when the Conference met at Shreveport he was sent to the Covington charge, and died there on Nov. 8, 1915. For two years in the itinerant life, Bert was faithful, earnest, and zealous. He gave promise of making a most useful man in the Master's work.

Brother Hoffpauir had completed his Conference course, and had everything ready to go up to Conference and be received into full connection. But when his name was called, his elder announced that he had answered to the roll-call above.

He loved God, was conscious of a saving experience of grace, and in his last talk with me said: "Brother Bowman, while the work is hard here and there seems to be so little to encourage one, I do not want this place to be left without a preacher, and I am willing to stay here another year to endure the trials, and trust in God to give us the victory."

This I ever found to be the spirit that moved Bert. He was as true as steel and had a strong desire to do his work. He leaves a wife and one son, Carrol Lea, and many kindred and friends, who will miss him here.

BUCATUNNA, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: I am writing this to say that since we have been on this charge we have had many things to encourage us. The people have been very kind and thoughtful of the pastor and his family. We are working and praying for a prosperous year on all lines, and we are making advancement in that direction. I have been trying to increase the subscription list of the Advocate since I have been on the charge and will continue to do so. I am asking now for a list of the subscribers at Bucatunna, State-Line, Chicora, and Clara, so that I may proceed more intelligently.—J. T. Abuey.

A LETTER FROM BROTHER BASS.

Dear Dr. Meek: May I say a word to the pastors in the territory of the Christian Advocate? I failed to attend the General Evangelistic Conference in Nashville, Tenn.; consequeutly I shall do general evangelistic work under the endorsement of the North Mississippi Conference, and make my regular reports to the Conference Committee. I had a nice letter from Dr. Moore, expressing regrets that I did not attend, and approving my getting the endorsement of my Conference Committee as an evangelist. I promised the Committee that I would give a portion of my time to the North Mississippi Conference. It is now in order for pastors of my own or the adjoining Conferences desiring my services to write me. As to the amount of work that ought to be done, there is plenty to do to keep the two Conference evangelists, Brother McIntosh, myself, and all the pastors busily engaged throughout the year. Then all the work will not be done. But I am willing to work anywhere that it may seem to be the will of the Lord, through the pastors.

I am particularly interested in two features of the evangelistic work: First of all, the salvation of the masses in towns and country, and the bringing about of a better spiritual condition in our great Church. The second thing I want to see brought to pass is the securing of a better paid ministry. I am of the firm conviction that any pastor with a family who faithfully does his work should receive from $1000 to $2000 a year for his support. And I am satisfactorily convinced in my own mind that with the proper preaching and effort on this line this important matter could be easily arranged. The way to accomplish this is by proving to the people, by the Scriptures, an unchangeable truth, namely, how the Lord blesses those who keep his word.

"Since the people began to bring the offerings into the house of the Lord, we have had enough to eat, and have left plenty; for the Lord hath blessed his people: and that which is left is this great store" (2 Chron. 31:10). It is a shame and a sin for a pastor who gives all of his time and labor to the work of the Master, to receive less than a comfortable living for himself and family. Such will not be the case when the proper steps shall be taken in this matter.

I would not like to be charged with boasting of having ability above many of my brethren, but, with sufficient modesty, I beg to say that if I had time and opportunity to direct my energies in this direction, I sincerely believe that I could go on most any so-called poor circuit, and deliver at each church one or two special gospel messages upon the subject referred to, and do much toward influencing the people to willingly raise their pastor's salary to a comfortable living. As a rule, I have found people willing to do their duty when truly convinced. If pastors will do their level best in saving the people from sin, and then, in the proper way, teach the people their godly duty toward the support of the ministry, they ought to be able to bring about the above state of things themselves. I am not seeking a job of this sort—I am only saying what could be done. I am interested in a better paid ministry; Bible teaching is what the people need.

It would be a good idea in cases in which pastors secure an evangelist in a revival on a charge of more than one appointment, to arrange for a two weeks' meeting at a central point, and reach the entire charge as nearly as possible. Thus conducted, a revival would mean something worth while in saving the people and building up the work financially.

I shall begin a meeting in Kentucky on the first Sunday in February. Pastors desiring my services during the year may address me at Corinth, Miss.

W. D. BASS.

RESOLUTIONS

(Adopted by the Methodist Delegation at the Laymen's Missionary Convention at Jackson, Miss.)

Be it resolved by the mid-year meeting of the Board of Missions, by the presiding elders, lay leaders, and other representatives of the Mississippi Conference assembled at Jackson, Miss., Jan. 27-28, 1916, that having heard the discussions of missionary policies and other financial policies both in our own meetings and in the public meetings of the Laymen's Convention, we hereby give our heartiest endorsement to the policies being advocated by our own General Board of Missions, and express our conviction that a loyal and united support of these policies on the part of our Conference will put us far on the way to the solution not only of the missionary but of all other financial difficulties.

1. We hereby pledge our best efforts to introduce the methods advocated in our districts, and as far as possible into all our churches, and we respectfully request all presiding elders, pastors, lay leaders, and committees to join in putting this resolution into effect without delay.

2. In carrying out this resolution, the "every-member canvass" should be taken in every congregation for all the benevolences, and for other claims where it is so agreed upon, not later than the first week in April.

3. Resolved, That we hereby pledge ourselves to the Sunday school missionary policy, and urge that every Sunday school fall into line, as provided in the Discipline, Paragraph 264, and that the "China Special" in the Sunday school receive the chief emphasis in the missionary cultivation of our Sunday schools.

4. We earnestly urge upon all our people the importance of assuming missionary "specials," and when "specials" are pledged, we would urge that they be kept separate from the assessments, whether raised in congregations, Leagues, or Sunday schools.

5. We hereby urge that every district in the Conference enlist the Sunday schools in the "China special," or some other worthy "special," to which they may give their united support.

6. We respectfully request our pastors and Sunday school superintendents to see to it that the missionary offerings made by the Sunday schools be remitted promptly each month to our Conference Treasurer. We ask this because it is a matter often neglected.

Signed: G. L. Harrell, Chairman; M. M. Black, Secretary; J. L. Neill, Committee.

Stop! Calomel is Quick-Silver

It's Mercury! Attacks the bones, salivates and makes you sick.

There's no reason why a person should take sickening, salivating calomel when 50 cents buys a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone—a perfect substitute for calomel.

It is a pleasant, vegetable liquid which will start your liver just as surely as calomel, but it doesn't make you sick and can not salivate.

Children and grown folks can take Dodson's Liver Tone, because it is perfectly harmless.

Calomel is a dangerous drug. It is mercury and attacks your bones. Take a dose of nasty calomel to-day and you will feel weak, sick and nauseated to-morrow. Don't lose a day's work. Take a spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone instead and you will wake up feeling great. No more biliousness, constipation, sluggishness, headache, coated tongue or sour stomach. REVIVAL AT SUMRALL, MISS.

On January 30 we closed a revival campaign here which had lasted three weeks. I had never tried to run a meeting in such bad weather before and it got to looking mighty blue at times and cast a damper on the efforts of all. We felt for a while that it was a failure, but now, on looking back, we feel that each service was a great blessing and that it was just the meeting that God wanted us to have.

Some of our leading members said that we could not expect to receive many into the church this year because we had received so many last year, but, to the amazement of all, 65 persons gave their names for membership in the Methodist and Baptist churches. It is impossible to say how many were converted and reclaimed—100 would be a very low estimate.

Rev. T. J. Norsworthy, of Yazoo City, Miss., one of the evangelists of the Mississippi Conference, led the services. I feel that the whole church appreciated Brother Norsworthy's work. I believe it might be said that his work is specially characterized by altar services. He invited sinners and backsliders to the altar for prayer, and they came and were saved at the altar. These altar services will linger in the hearts and minds of the people for a long time.

Another feature of the meeting was the services for men only and women only. These services were largely attended and reached a large number of men and women, turning their minds toward God and the things that are high and noble. They were a privilege long to be remembered. It was an inspiration to see 200 men massed together to hear the Gospel.

I feel that the meeting will mean most to us through the reviving and inspiring of the members of the Church. Many expressed themselves as to the good it accomplished in their own hearts.

The offering for Brother Norsworthy was not as much as we wanted it to be—owing to the weather conditions and the epidemic of la grippe we only raised for him $138. We take consolation though, in that it was given lovingly and prayerfully.

Brother Norsworthy came among us a stranger, but left us with our love and prayers following him. I look upon Brother Norsworthy as an unusually strong preacher. His presentation of the cardinal truths of the Gospel are clear and strong. His trumpet gives forth no uncertain sound.

Brother Norsworthy raised a purse for the pastor and bought him a fine frock-tail coat, a hat, and a pair of shoes. This loving kindness of our dear brother was greatly appreciated.

Lime-Loss in Tuberculosis

In the Journal of the American Medical Association (January 17, 1913), was the following: "It has been many times stated that in tuberculosis or in the pretuberculosis stage an increased amount of calcium (lime) is lost both in the urine and feces. In fact, a demineralization has been thought to be a forerunner of the development of tuberculosis."

If tuberculosis is due to lime loss, the success of Eckman's Alterative in its treatment may be due, in part, to its content of a lime salt so combined with other valuable ingredients as to be easily assimilated.

Always we have urged consumptives to attend strictly to matters of food, but often some effective remedial agent is needed. In many cases of apparent recovery Eckman's Alterative seems to have supplied this need. It contains no opiates, narcotics or habit-forming drugs, so is safe to try. Price $1 and $2 per bottle. Sold by leading druggists or sent direct from the Laboratory. We would like to send you a booklet containing information of value and references.

CHRISTMAS-TIDE AT WESLEY HOUSE.

We depend entirely upon donations for our Christmas, and through the kindness of our friends have, so far, never lacked for its observance. The latter part of November a friend gave us $5. We were ready then to sing the doxology, for the way was opened for the purchase of the candy. We went forward and planned our program for the week. One lady dressed dolls and sold them, and that gave us the amount for our day nursery mothers' supper. Main Street Sunday School had a unique Christmas celebratiou. They had the preliminary service on Sunday morning before Christmas. Each child and friend present marched to the front of the church during the singing of a beautiful Christmas hymn, and placed a gift in a cradle artistlcally draped in soft blue and white. As the children marched forward there was an expression of joy on each face which told of a new blessing in each life. The morning offering was also given to Wesley House, and so this beautiful and inspiring service brought a double blessing to each one. We had every department provided for except the Sunday school, and this offering and other contributions met the need. The contributions continued to gradually come in until our Christmas fund amounted to $24.90. It was a time for praise, and we rejoiced.

Now you will want to know our plan for the holidays. The gymnasium girls gave a spread on Friday evening. It rained hard, but those who came soon forgot that the clouds were on the outside.

Sunday evening the choir gave a Christmas song service. Each one in the processional carried a lighted candle and the first song and prayer were by candle light. The people take great pleasure in our song services and they mean much to them.

Tuesday afternoon the sewing school, which numbered on that occasion about sixty, gathered and sang Christmas songs and played simple games. The boy friends of the girls, as well as of the workers, swelled the attendance at this time, and, after the songs and games, all joined in fishing for their Christmas and a very merry time was had. Each girl had made either a dresser scarf or stand cover for her mother and great was her joy when she could at last take home her work to "mother."

Wednesday evening the night school had a fish pond and games. Thursday morning the kindergarten program was carried out. It was amusing as well as pathetic to see how some of these little ones whose mammas were at work and did not have time to dress them properly were taken into the nursery. You ask why. There were faces to be washed, dresses to be changed, and, yes, some had to have their hair cut in order to be presentable at the "party." These little ones ranging from 3 to 6 years of age played their games and sang their songs. They, too, had something for mother, each having mounted a pretty picture. The tree was quite pretty and brought joy to mother as well as child. One little boy said, "That star is just like the one that shined on the Baby Jesus."

Thursday evening the "Day Nursery Mothers" were Invited to supper. Miss Bowers arranged the tables very nicely and decorated them in green and white. Mothers, babies and friends gathered about 6:30 o'clock, and after supper the Rev. Mr. Alsworth gave a beautiful talk on "Mother." This meant a great deal to these women and will be remembered as a "Red Letter" day in their lives. Each baby and mother received a small gift, and in many cases this was all the Christmas they had.

Monday evening, December 27, the Sunday school entertainment was given and the children sang the Christmas songs joyfully as well as lustlly. Once more I told the Christmas story, this being the sixth or seventh time, yet the children never tire of it. They ask for it again and again. Owing to the large number in the Sunday school, we did not give out any of the gifts or candy until Tuesday morning. Each child was given a ticket with his name on it, as was also the Wesley House stamp. He presented this ticket on Tuesday morning and received his gifts. There were 131 children who came with their tickets.

The tree was left standing and the people came in to see it, and almost stood in awe before it. New Year's eve, the people of the community, about one hundred in number, gathered in the chapel for a social time. Simple games were played until 11 o'clock. At a quarter past eleven we began our watch night service. Miss Bowers gave us an impressive lesson from Phllippians 3:11-14. We closed the year 1915 with prayer. As the new year dawned, happy greetings were heard on all sides.

This was indeed a happy Christmas season. Every member of each department was given a box of candy, an orange, and a small gift. Through the kindness of our friends, Wesley House gave Christmas to 356. Each department of the work was taken separately; so no one was overlooked, but all made very happy. It was such a joyous time for us workers and we feel that we have so much for which to praise the Master. He has richly blessed us, and may we prove to be "his workmen who needeth not to be ashamed."

SIXTEEN YEARS OF TROUBLE.

Ended for H. H. Jackson, Friar's Point, Miss., with the use of Gray's Ointment. "I am glad to report that it has made a permanent cure of a sore of sixteen years' standing," he writes. This is one of the numerous instances of the remarkable curative powers of Gray's Ointment. Since it was first prepared in 1820, it has been used year in and year out by American families for boils, sores, ulcers, wounds, burns, bruises and all abrasions and eruptions of the skin. It quickly heals the skin trouble and is a sure preventive of dangerous blood poison which often follows from a neglected skin wound. Only 25c a box at druggists. Get a free sample by writing W. F. 10 CENT "CASCARETS" IF BILIOUS OR COSTIVE

For Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Sluggish Liver and Bowels—They work while you sleep.

Furred Tongue, Bad Taste, Indigestion, Sallow Skin and Miserable Headaches come from a torpid liver and clogged bowels, which cause your stomach to become filled with undigested food, which sours and ferments like garbage in a swill barrel. That's the first step to untold misery—indigestion, foul gases, bad breath, yellow skin, mental fears, everything that is horrible and nauseating. A Cascaret to-night will give your constipated bowels a thorough cleansing and straighten you out by morning. LETTERS THAT INSPIRE CONFIDENCE.

I wish very much that every reader of the New Orleans Christian Advocate could spend sufficient time in my office to read the thousands of letters which I have received from all parts of the country. I have printed several hundreds of them in a booklet, but I wish you could see the originals, for I would like for you to realize the wonderful results which they report in the relief of dyspepsia, indigestion, persistent headache, rheumatism, gall stones, kidney, bladder, and liver diseases, uric acid poisoning and other conditions due to impure blood.

Before my own health was restored by Shivar Mineral Water and I purchased this Spring, and before I received all of these letters from sufferers, I didn't take very much stock in advertisements like this. I therefore cannot blame you if you doubt, but, my friend, I am absolutely convinced that the Shivar Spring is the greatest restorative mineral spring ever discovered, not excepting the famous Spas of Europe. I have shipped this water to thousands of sufferers in all parts of the U. S. and they almost invariably report either permanent restoration or beneficial results. That is why I make the guarantee offer contained in the following letter. Sign it now and mail it.

Shivar Spring,
Box 17-J, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if it fails to benefit my case you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

From the Field

Many, La.

Dear Dr. Meek: Just a few words. Our beloved and efficient presiding elder, Rev. C. D. Atkinson, came on Saturday, Jan. 22, and held our first quarterly conference. He preached too splendid sermons while here. We had a good conference and the outlook here is very encouraging. We are planning and working to make this the greatest year in the history of the Many charge. Our Woman's Missionary Society has elected and installed its officers. Let all the readers of the Advocate pray for me.—S. D. Howard, P. C.

ZACHARY, LA.

Dear Mr. Editor: Here in our new field we find the situation very pleasant. The entire charge is doing good work for the Master and is not at all forgetful of its pastor.

Our presiding elder, Rev. H. W. Bowman, and his excellent wife were with us on our quarterly conference occasion, January 16 and 17, during which we had a very pleasant time. This week our beloved predecessor, Rev. J. D. Harper, has been circulating among his friends at this place. He is very dearly loved by them. We look forward to a prosperous year on this charge.—R. V. Fulton, P. C.

Shreveport, La.

Dear Dr. Meek: I am serving a comparatively new pastoral charge—only a little more than four years old, with 135 members. When I reached the charge last year, the congregation was in debt to the amount of $1500. They paid their pastor last year a living salary, reduced the debt almost half, and paid on the benevolences about 70 per cent. On Feb. 9 I expect to observe Advocate Day, and preach on Paul's advice to Timothy, "Give attendance to reading" (1 Tim. 4:13). I have had a hard battle with debt, and other things, but we are gaining ground all the time.—L. T. Reames, Pastor.

Ackerman, Miss.

I feel that the Church at large will be interested to know that our new pastor, Rev. Chas. D. McGehee, has succeeded in lifting a debt of $3600 from our church. He secured $2000 at the morning service yesterday (January 30), and the Woman's Missionary Society will secure the balance. They will not have much trouble in doing this. They have already paid $1250 on our new building. We can boast of one of the livest Societies in this part of the State. The work that its members are doing for Ackerman and the Church is of inestimable value. Brother McGehee is working for Advocate subscriptions and will have some to send to you shortly.—A member.

Tupelo, Miss.

Dear Brother Meek: Yesterday, Jan. 30, was a glad time with us. Our Methodist people turned out 835 strong to Sunday school. Think of this showing in a town the size of Tupelo! To accomplish this the superintendent, the teachers, and students did excellent work. The big auditorium was full, notwithstanding the fact that all the primary pupils were in their own department. Do you wonder that Brother Ledyard beamed and that Brother Bradley gave a beautiful sermon on love? Rejoice with us and pray that this Sunday school contest may inspire to a greater one—the contest of right with wrong, of righteousness against sin. Success to our Advocate and happiness to its editor.—E.

Booneville, Miss.

Dear Brother Meek: We find excellent people at Booneville. They received us cordially and their kindness and thoughtful attention continue to abound. They have been well fed and trained by strong and diligent pastors. The minutes show 465 members. You see, with this number, in a prosperous, growing town, surrounded by a splendid country, which enterprising farmers are developing right along, I have much work to do. But these favorable conditions are inspirational and encourage one to do one's best.

Brother T. H. Dorsey, our presiding elder, has held our first quarterly meeting. He captured his many hearers by his timely and vigorous sermons, and pleased and helped the members of the quarterly conference by his business-like manner of holding the conference. Our Sunday school, under the capable superintendency of Brother J. J. Taylor, is rapidly taking on new life and increased membership. We have a well-organized choir, with a paid director. I doubt if there is a better one in the Conference. Come and hear its members sing. We have an active, wide awake Woman's Missionary Society of fifty members, and a campaign on with a view to getting every woman of the church to become a member. These sweet-spirited women, noted for their harmony and enterprise, have taken steps to make the parsonage attractive and beautiful within. Our big-hearted men, by remodeling and enlarging the front gallery and repainting the entire building, contemplate making the exterior to be in harmony with the interior. I have made nearly one hundred visits. Congregations are good. I am sending you six new subscribers and one renewal to the Advocate. We will send $75 or $80 for the Memphis Methodist Hospital. We are reasonably hoping for great success. Pray that we may have it.

Let me avail myself of this opportunity to express our sincere appreciation to you and many other friends for kindly letters of sympathy and love in the dark hour of our bereavement and loss. J. M. WYATT.

Salts Fine for Aching Kidneys

We eat too much meat which clogs Kidneys, then the Back hurts.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids so they no longer irritate, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complication.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.—Adv.

Bodi-Tone Does Just As Its Name Means

It cures disease by toning all the body, and we want to show you what it will do for your body. Bodi-Tone is a small, round tablet, that is taken three times every day. Each box contains seventy-five tablets, enough for twenty-five days' use, and we send you the full box on trial so you can try this great remedy and learn what it is, so you can learn how it works in the body, how it cures stubborn diseases by helping nature to tone every organ of the body. Tone is a little word, but it means a great deal, everything in health. When all the organs are doing their part, when each is acting in a perfectly natural way, when all the functions are healthy and performed with natural vigor, when the energy, strength and power of resistance to disease are all at a natural point then the body is in proper tone. When disease has attacked any part, when lack of vitality is found and felt, the tone of the entire physical body should be raised to the highest possible point to make all the body help to cure and restore. This is the power which underlies all of Bodi-Tone's great work for the sick, this is the power it offers you to help you get new health and strength, new vigor and new vitality.

What Bodi-Tone Is

Bodi-Tone is not a patent medicine, for its ingredients are not a secret. It contains Iron Phosphate, Geutian, Lithia, Chinese Rhubarb, Peruvian Bark, Nux Vomica, Oregon Grape Root, Cascara, Capsicum, Sarsaparilla and Golden Seal. Such ingredients guarantee its merit.

Natural Curatives To Make Natural Health

When you use Bodi-Tone you know just what you are using, know it is pure and safe and know you are taking the right kind of medicine to provide real help for the body. It contains nothing that your own family doctor will not endorse and say is a good thing. It does not depend on killing pain with cocaine, opium, morphine or other dangerous drugs. It does not excite the body with alcohol, but it tones the body and cures its disorders with remedies nature intended to tone and cure the body when that power was given them. Thus, Iron gives life and energy to the Blood, Sarsaparilla drives out its impurities, Phosphate and Nux Vomica create new nerve energy and force, Lithia aids in the Kidneys and dissolves rheumatic deposits, Gentian does invaluable work for the Stomach and Digestive forces, Chinese Rhubarb and Oregon Grape Root promote vigorous Liver activity, Peruvian Bark raises the tone of the entire system, Golden Seal soothes the inflamed membrane and checks Catarrhal discharges, Cascara gives the Bowels new life in a natural way, and Capsicum makes all more valuable by bettering their quick absorption into the blood. A remarkable combination that does wonderful work for the body's health. Each one of its ingredients adds a needed element from nature to the body, for Bodi-Tone is altogether a natural remedy. Each has a certain work to do in the body and does it well, in a natural manner. They are used in Bodi-Tone because of this ability. We claim no credit for discovering these valuable ingredients, each of which has a well deserved place in established medical science. We claim only the credit for our successful Bodi-Tone formula, which is our own discovery, for the way in which we have selected, proportioned and combined these great natural curatives, and for the health-making work which Bodi-Tone has so well proven its ability to perform in the body. The curative forces which Bodi-Tone so ably uses are the forces which have always existed in nature for the restoration of the body's health. Many are regularly prescribed by good physicians in combination with such drugs as each doctor may favor, for there are wide differences of opinion among doctors of various schools. The exact combination used in Bodi-Tone is what gives it the far-reaching and thorough curative and restorative power that makes possible the remarkable cures experienced by Bodi-Tone users, cures which prove the difference between Bodi-Tone and common remedies, cures which have won the gratitude of thousands.

You Need Bodi-Tone To Set Your Body Right

If you are tired of continual doctoring and bad health, if you are wearied of feeling you cannot depend on your body to act right and do its full duty, you need Bodi-Tone right now, and this offer gives you a chance to try it without risking a penny. You need it to seek out your weak spots and make them stronger, to stop the leaks which have been draining your vitality, to make your organs capable of giving you the right measure of strength, vigor, energy and full-blooded comfort your body should have. If there is anything wrong in your body, if any organ is acting in a way which you realize and know is not right, send for Bodi-Tone on this trial offer and give it a chance to set you right. If you do not feel right, eat right, sleep right, weigh right, work right and think right, now and all the time, put Bodi-Tone in command of your body for twenty-five days. Let it marshal your bodily forces, let it line them up and work them into shape, until all are marching along straight, strong and harmoniously, in perfect time, tune and line, for that is what Bodi-Tone is for and what it is doing for thousands. If the doctor's prescriptions and ordinary medicinal combinations have failed, let this scientific combination of special remedies show and prove what it can do for you. Its greatest triumphs have been among men and women who had chronic ailments, who had used patent medicines and had doctored with their local doctors and out-of-town specialists, all without lasting benefit. It is because of its great work in these cases that all chronic sufferers and persons with obstinate diseases are invited to try a dollar box of Bodi-Tone at our risk.

Why be a Slave To Bad Health?

Why remain in ill-health month after month, why allow your body to make you a slave to ills, humours, distress and discomforts, when it is so easy to procure a trial box of this home treatment which has restored thousands to vigorous health and glorious strength? Why delay another day, when a trial of this proven medicine is yours for the asking? Why keep on suffering, when by filling in your name and address on the trial coupon and mailing it to us, you can get a full twenty-five days treatment of this great remedy which people everywhere are praising and talking about. It just costs a two-cent stamp, and you don't need to pay a single penny for the medicine unless Bodi-Tone benefits you. You have all to win and nothing to lose, no matter what your ailment may be, by thus trying it.

Thousands of Cures

of Rheumatism, Stomach Trouble, Kidney, Liver and Bladder Ailments, Uric Acid Diseases, Female Troubles, Bowel, Blood and Skin Affections, Dropsy, Piles, Catarrh, Anaemia, Sleeplessness, LaGrippe, Pains, General Weakness and Nervous Break-down, have fully proven the power and great remedial value of Bodi-Tone in such disorders. Each one got a dollar box on trial, as we offer to you in this coupon.

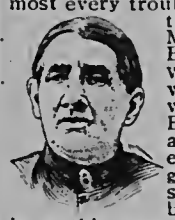
Its history of success has proven beyond a shadow of doubt how the Bodi-Tone plan of toning all the body is a right plan that helps to cure these and other disorders, that it is a real aid to nature. Many who had for years been in poor health and had tried good doctors and most all of the prominent medicines, have found that one single box of Bodi-Tone did more good than all other treatments combined. It goes to the root in the body and cures because its work is rational and thorough, the only kind that makes cures permanent. Read the reports, showing how Bodi-Tone makes new health and strength, send for a box on trial at our risk and see if it will not prove the right thing for you.

Did More for Him Than Three Specialists.

CARTERS, GA.—I have been diseased for the last fifteen years with what the doctors called Catarrh of the Head, or Systemic Catarrh. Some called it one thing and some another. I had pains all through my body, in my Bowels, Stomach and Back, and my Heart would flutter and beat and smother so it appeared that I could not live. I had Indigestion and Constipation, with blind spells. Everything I ate soured on my stomach before I would get through eating. It seemed that I could not stand it much longer. I tried all the doctors in my settlement and three specialists of Atlanta, Ga., and most of the patent medicines and drugs that I heard of, without any relief, until I got Bodi-Tone. By the time I had taken a treatment of Bodi-Tone I could eat anything I wanted, and there was not a pain in my body. Bodi-Tone has done more for me than all the doctors could do. I am seventy-five years old. My wife, who is in her seventy-fourth year, has also been greatly benefited by its use. J. F. PETTY.

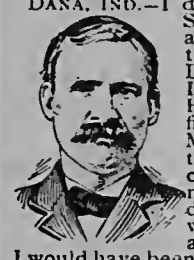
Free From Pain at Eighty-One Years

GLEN ROSE, TEXAS.—I have been in poor health for thirty years, and at times it seemed I was afflicted with most every trouble flesh is heir to. I had Catarrh of the Head, Asthma, Stomach Trouble, My Liver was bad and Kidneys and Bladder were deranged. At times I would lay in a cold sweat for hours with Bilious Colic. I suffered in this way until a year ago, when I saw the Bodi-Tone trial offer, sent for a box and began to take it. I am now in my eighty-first year, and have been altogether free from pain and any distress since I took the first few boxes. Everybody speaks about how well I have been this year, and all realize the great good Bodi-Tone has been to me. MRS. E. RAMFIELD.



Doctor Said He Had Bright's Disease

DANA, IND.—I doctored for four years for Bowel, Stomach Trouble and Rheumatism and gradually grew worse. One doctor told me at last that I had Bright's Disease and could not be cured; then I went to a specialist at Indianapolis, He doctored me for a long time and finally told me to go to the Springs at Martinsville, Ind. I did so and stayed there for some time, but no cure. I commenced taking Bodi-Tone ten months ago and went to work four days after I commenced its use. I am well now and weigh 210 pounds, for I am a large-boned man. I believe that I would have been under the ground if I had not taken Bodi-Tone. G. M. HILL.



Young Woman Was a "Bundle of Nerves"

ELDORA, IOWA.—I am twenty-seven years old and have been troubled with Nervousness for nine years or more. My health was impaired so badly that I was nothing but a bundle of Nerves, just a wreck of my former self. In addition to the Nervousness I suffered from Catarrh of the Head very badly. I have had a number of doctors, but none gave me more than temporary relief. I sent for Bodi-Tone and used four boxes, and am so thankful to say I am completely cured and have had no trouble for many months. I have gained in weight, too. My uncle, C. W. Danger, suffered from Rheumatism and Stomach trouble, and Bodi-Tone cured him. We always recommend it. MISS NELLIE DANGER.

BISHOP WILSON'S VIEWS.

Bishop Alpheus W. Wilson, "the Grand Old Man" of Southern Methodism, who is one of the most majestic ministers on the American continent and whose career has been one of the most remarkable in the annals of any branch of Wesleyanism, attained to his eighty-second birthday on February 5. A representative of the Baltimore Sun called upon him on that occasion and addressed to him a number of questions concerning the present trend of things religiously. The summary of that interview is of such interest that we think it is well worth a place in our editorial page:

"Bishop Alpheus W. Wilson, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, whose record of 63 years of pulpit life is surpassed by few, if any, men in America, and whose eighty-second birthday fell on Saturday, was asked a few questions concerning preachers yesterday afternoon at his home, 1601 Park Place.

"He made it clear that he was thoroughly in sympathy with all sane efforts for the betterment of mankind—through federated charities and soup kitchens, free schools and open forums, public baths and public libraries. But he was emphatic in his declaration that the first duty of the man in the pulpit was to 'save souls.' He considered it of prime importance that the minister should not lose the perspective and forget that his first duty was 'to preach the gospel of Christ unto salvation.'

No Improvement in Preaching Ability.

"He recognizes and rejoices in the great advance made in nearly all fields of life since 1853, when he entered the ministry of his Church, but he fears that the average 'modern' preacher would make a poor showing as far as preaching goes if compared with the preachers of his youth.

"'I have been listening to them in my summer tours,' he said, 'and last summer I heard hardly six sermons really preached to reach and save the souls of the hearers. No wonder they do not succeed and that congregations dwindle!'

"He recalled the time when 1200 persons were converted in the Monument Street Methodist Church (Baltimore) in one revival, and not by a 'professional' evangelist; also the days when his father was preacher in one of the old Methodist churches of East Baltimore, which is now owned by Polish Catholics, and the days when every corner in the Eutaw Street Methodist Church was filled three times every Sunday.

"He cited several instances where Methodist and other Protestant down-town churches had sold out and followed their congregations to the suburbs or to 'residential sections.' He showed how the Catholic Church had succeeded in the communities from which other denominations had fled, sometimes in the same church buildings.

"It was his desire, he said, to see the churches open all the time; he would like to see brief daily services in them, with congregations large or small. He wants them to be used more for social purposes, where young and old people can meet under pleasant and congenial circumstances. But he wants them used primarily for the purpose to which they are dedicated, 'the service of God.'

Against 'Over-Organization.'

"Organization in modern life, especially in the Churches, he says, tends to go too far; and over-organization tends to hamper or crush the individual, to induce a certain contempt for individual effort, to depreciate the value of personality. And he thinks that individuality is worth as much, if not a good deal more, than 'soulless organization.'

"But his chief concern is for the preachers. He saw them go through the throes of 'higher criticism' and he sees some now confusing social service and the betterment of humanity with their chief purpose in life.

"'If you will look through the gospels,' he said, 'you will see little said about social service and such things, except the injunction to look after the poor. But you will find that the thing emphasized most, and almost exclusively, is salvation. And that is the task to which the minister of God is called.'"

AN EXAMPLE OF "TAINTED MONEY."

Ever and anon some person who wants to take money for some public purpose, no matter from what source it comes, proclaims that there is no such thing as "tainted money." We would respectfully call the attention of all such people to the following statement taken from the able discourse against race track gambling in New Orleans delivered at Trinity Episcopal Church, this city, last Sunday by the rector, Dr. Robert S. Coupland:

"Now the races here are to be closed about Carnival time, and in an effort to pacify the disturbed element of the community, the Business Men's Racing Association proposes to give the proceeds of the last two days to the Charity Hospital. In other words they have done their worst, and in order that they may return they are throwing a sop to the people of the city in the form of charity. As far as I know, the men on the Board of the Charity Hospital are worthy and honorable, and I do not see how a body of honorable men can accept such a gift—it is the worst of tainted money. The blessing of God cannot rest on any institution that looks to and receives such funds."

The truth is, any money made by wrong methods, which has a disreputable odor clinging to it, and the acceptance of which would tend to make the public more tolerant of the business in which it was amassed or of the ideals of the man who accummulated it, is "tainted" and ought not be received as a gift by either the Church or State for any benevolent use. The general moral effect of all such offers upon society should be taken carefully into account.

"THY WILL BE DONE."

The Christian life means, if it means anything at all, submission to the will of God, which is the only supreme law that governs the conduct of all true believers, be they Greeks or barbarians, bond or free. Jesus came to do the will of Him that sent him, not because he was commanded to do so, but because he and the Father were one, and he prayed that those which were given unto him should be one as they were. He asked that the Father's will be done, not only in the peaceful moments of his life when he was surrounded by his little flock, but when the deep shadows of his impending death encompassed him round about as if to overwhelm him. When he was in the midst of his greatest trial he said, "Not my will, but thine be done." This constituted the secret of his successful ministry and therein lay the beauty of his matchless character. It costs little to abide meekly by the will of the Lord when no trials are to be encountered or troubles met, but when the sorrows and disasters which await all who travel the road of life confront us and seem more than we can bear up under, it takes a brave spirit to rise up and say with Job, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him." It is said that the will of God is perfectly done in heaven, and to make a heaven of earth it needs but to be thus done by the children of men, who, to acquire this grace, must first attain to that state of mind that was in Christ Jesus.

ROBERT EDWIN MEEK.

WORLDLINESS.

Dancing, card-playing, and theater-going are not by any means the only forms of worldliness that exist in the Church. The love of money, the love of ease, the many manifestations of materialism and the well-nigh innumerable types of selfishness should be placed in the same category, as being inimical to a deeply spiritual Christian life. Place-seeking, an undue estimate of a good salary, fondness for the praise of men, and all kinds of improper pride upon the part of ministers must be written down as being "of the earth, earthy," and as not belonging to the kingdom of grace. We have sometimes thought that the curse of worldliness is more fearfully felt in the Church in the corruption of its ideals as to service and greatness than in almost any other way. From this follows the grading of preachers according to learning and eloquence and the prominence of the pulpits they fill, instead of according to character, spiritual efficiency, and the work done in the saving and strengthening of souls. The supreme need of Zion is to have a ministry and membership thoroughly "crucified unto the world" and fully possessing the spirit of the Master.

"You must put up with a great deal if you would put down a great deal."—James Mudge.

"GOD BLESS YOU."

(Author Unknown)

How sweetly fall these simple words
Upon the human heart,
When friends long bound by strongest ties
Are doomed by fate to part.
You sadly press the hand of those
Who thus in love caress you,
And soul responsive beats to soul
In breathing out "God bless you."

God bless you; oh! long months ago,
I heard the mournful phrase,
When one whom I in childhood loved
Went from my dreamy gaze.
Now blinding tears fall thick and fast;
I mourn my long-lost treasure,
While echoes of the heart bring back
The farewell prayer, "God bless you."

The mother sending forth her boy
To scenes untried and new
Lisps not a studied stately speech,
Nor murmurs out "adieu."
She sadly says between her sobs:
"Whene'er misfortunes press you,
Come to thy mother, boy; come back!"
Then sadly sighs, "God bless you."

"God bless you"—more of expressed love
Than volumes without number,
Reveal we thus our trust in Him
Whose eyelids never slumber.
I ask in parting no long speech
Drawled out in studied measure,
I only ask the dear old words,
So sweet—so sad—"God bless you."

A SPLENDID TESTIMONY.

The following is a splendid testimony on the importance of church attendance from the late Senator George F. Hoar, of Massachusetts, and should be read with interest and profit. He said:

"There is, in my judgment, no more commanding public duty than attendance at church on Sunday. The greater the man's influence, the more sufficient he may be to himself, the greater and more imperative the duty. I do not believe there ever was a man who attended church constantly through life, or who brought his children to church in their youth, or who was taken by his parents to church in his own youth who ever regretted it as he looked back."

MODERN THEOLOGY.

The modern theology, as it absurdly describes itself, undertakes to retire the sun and put the moon in the foreground. It demands the abdication of the King and the enthronement of a satellite in his place. The sidelights of Christianity, the by-products of Christ's person and work, the secondary and subordinate elements of his holy religion, are plausibly and eloquently presented as the whole system. The divine cause is shelved. The moral and social effects are paraded as the essentials and the sum total. It is a lunar Christianity, a weak and pale substitute for the teaching of Jesus concerning himself and his mission and his claims. Admiration of the Nazarene is subtly supplanting adoration of the Son of God, the Lord of Glory. The ethics of the Sermon on the Mount are lauded in disdainful and illogical disregard of its supreme challenge as the word of one who was Judge and Lord of the human conscience, whose bare "I say unto you" placed his law on a level with those concerning which Moses and the prophets said, "Jehovah hath spoken," and whose mission was the perfect realization of all that law and prophecy had foreshadowed.—Christian Observer.

VALUES THE PRAYER MEETING.

World's Work tells us that not long ago Mr. Lansing, United States Secretary of State, received two invitations to dinner, one from a foreign ambassador and the other from a member of the Cabinet, and he refused both, because it happened to be Thursday evening, and that was the evening of the church prayer-meeting, which he always attends. Mr. Lansing is a good Presbyterian, and evidently he values the prayer-meeting. Was he right or wrong? Did he make too much of the prayer-meeting, or did he not? We wonder how many of our Methodist preachers and members would turn down a dinner for a prayer-meeting? There are some; but how many?—Christian Guardian.

THE ASBURY MEMORIAL YEAR—1916.

To Be Observed by Every Methodist Annual Conference and Local Church in America.

To the Methodists of America—

Spiritual Children of Francis Asbury:

When Francis Asbury came across the sea, in 1771, he found here only a handful of Methodists; when he died, in 1816, more than half of the Methodists in the world were on this continent. What John Wesley accomplished in Great Britain in a little over fifty years, Francis Asbury accomplished in the United States and Canada in less than fifty years. What Wesley as a leader and organizer was to British Methodism, Asbury was to American Methodism.

Asbury, in a letter written in 1807, stated that American Methodism in a little more than thirty-six years had become a body of 144,590 members and 536 preachers; while British Methodism in a period twice as long had gathered 150,974 members and 576 preachers—the former working among a population of from two to five million people; the latter among 30,000,000 people. In 1809 the American daughter had outgrown her British mother by more than 5000 members.

The thought of all who bear the name which Wesley and Asbury lifted out of obloquy to honor—a mighty American host of eight millions—must turn in this hundredth anniversary of Bishop Asbury's death in loving appreciation of the work wrought by him and his glorious company of preachers, for it is on the strong foundations laid by them with tears and blood that our great Communion of many branches securely rests.

What a man Francis Asbury was! An itinerant ever in the saddle; a preacher whose one business it was to win men to God; a leader inspiring in all devotion to the kingdom and ruling by the persistent force of loyal firmness; a pioneer Bishop, so American in spirit that he would not become a general superintendent by Wesley's appointment, until elected by his brethren in Conference; a statesman planning, organizing, uniting, establishing law, order, system—he was the father and founder of our Methodism.

All his life a sufferer from physical ills; carrying constantly the burdens of his brethren; enduring reproach, opposition, discouragement; knowing daily in travel the fatigue, exposures, perils and privations of the wilderness; often deeply grieved by disappointment in the weak and unworthy—a solitary man, without wife, home, or loving domestic companionship—surely he could not have filled his years of suffering and sacrifice with such fruitful labors, except by the power of the Almighty Father.

The Methodists of the Twentieth Century who are heirs of the riches transmitted by Asbury and the Fathers, a heritage of incomparable value, seek to give a loving, lasting expression of their gratitude to these heroic pioneers. How can we best accomplish this object?

By carrying out the program proposed by the Francis Asbury Centenary Association, created by the Ecumenical Methodist Commission of the United States and Canada, and embracing representatives of these churches:

Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal, South, Methodist Protestant, Methodist Church of Canada, African Methodist Episcopal, African Methodist Episcopal Zion, Colored Methodist Episcopal, Free Methodist, Wesleyan Methodist.

All branches of Methodism have been and are still cordially invited to participate, and it is hoped that the centenary will be observed in 1916 by Methodists of every branch and of every local church or society.

The plan of observance is in outline, as follows:

1. A program by every Annual Conference in America, at its session in 1916, in honor of the labors and achievements of Asbury and his coworkers and the mighty results that have come from their heroic endeavors, each Conference to make its own program.

2. On the Sunday nearest the date of the anniversary of his death, March 26, or Sunday, April 2, 1916, a sermon from every Methodist pulpit, designed to call to the minds of the prosperous Methodists of to-day how great was the investment of endeavor and devotion, privation and sacrifice made by the preachers and members of the first half-century of American Methodism.

3. A wide circulation of literature relating to the men and events of that period, that the appreciation and gratitude of Methodists of the Twentieth Century may be evoked for the fathers of the Eighteenth Century.

4. The erection of a bronze equestrian statue of Bishop Asbury in the City of Washington from the voluntary contributions of American Methodist churches. Such a statue of this devoted man would surely not be out of place among the statues of those who have served their country as warriors, statesmen, and pioneers, inasmuch as his labors helped mightily in laying the religious, moral, and social foundations for an enduring republic.

The statue is to be designed and executed by an eminent sculptor whose artistic ability is attested by some of the best examples of the art, East and West, North and South. It will be in every way worthy of the pioneer hero it is to represent, of the conspicuous place it will occupy in the Capital of the United States, and of the great Communion that provides for its erection.

Application will be made to Congress for a suitable site for the monument which must be such as will pass the criticisms of the Art Commission, the body having official control of such public memorials in the District of Columbia.

There will be needed for statue and pedestal approximately $50,000, and the Methodists of America are requested to furnish it by voluntary contributions. As this is to be the first and chief memorial to the heroism of the Fathers provided by our common Methodism and is to have a conspicuous place in the National Capital, this committee, representing the co-operating branches of Methodism, is going forward in full confidence that every local church, young people's society and Sunday school in the country will gladly contribute at least one dollar, while many will make larger offerings. Every church will desire its share and every itinerant minister will make sure that he is represented in this monument to the achievements of the early Methodist itinerancy and laity.

If happily there should be an excess after the expenses of the statue are met, the Executive Committee of the Asbury Centenary Association is pledged to return the surplus pro rata to the several contributing branches to be added to their respective Conference Claimants' Funds.

By request of the Executive Committee the publishing houses, or financial agencies, of the various bodies will receive such contributions as may be sent them, and pay the amounts to the designated treasurer of the Francis Asbury Centenary Association.

Contributions for the Methodist Episcopal Church should be paid to The Methodist Book Concern, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York City; 220 West Fourth Street, Cincinnati, Ohio; and 1018 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

For the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to its Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.

For the Methodist Protestant Church, to its Publishing House, 316 North Charles Street, Baltimore, Md.

For the African Methodist Episcopal Church, to Dr. J. R. Hawkins, financial secretary, 1541 Fourteenth Street, Washington, D. C.

For the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, to the Star Publishing House, Charlotte, N. C.

For the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, to its Publishing House, Jackson, Tennessee.

For the Free Methodist Church, to W. B. Rose, Publishing Agent, 1132 Washington Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

For any other Methodist branch, to its own publishing house or financial secretary, or to any of the above named collecting agencies.

We urgently recommend that district superintendents, or presiding elders, and officers of young people's societies and Sunday schools immediately take measures to secure and forward contributions as indicated above. Let no one wait for another.

JOSEPH W. POSTON.

This is a life-story, beautiful for its simplicity and Christlike in its humility. God does not call every man to do his work in the light and lure of large publicity. Some of the noblest souls of which our world has boasted—men of whom the world was not worthy—have done their work where there were few to praise and none to reward. It is always difficult to lay one's hand upon the secret springs of power in a man's life and declare unhesitatingly that full explanation has been found for all that the man may have achieved. There is a supernatural element in every life, and God selects the weak things in this world to confound the things that are mighty. Man looks on the outward appearance, but God looks on the heart; God's standard of values is very different from that of the world. Despite the handicap of pinching poverty and the most meager educational preparation, Joseph W. Poston heard and heeded the call to the ministry and began preparations to enter upon his life-work at an early day. He is an example of what a man may do and what he may be, if his life be hid with Christ in God.

Brother Poston's father was born in Ireland, but came to America when he was six years old and was reared in North Carolina. Later he moved to Fayette County, Tennessee, where the subject of this sketch first saw the light of day. He was born on Dec. 20, 1838. His mother was Jane Denny Rankin, of Welsh parentage. There were eleven children in this family, and they were very poor. Young Poston was sent to school for three brief sessions and learned something of the three branches taught in those days in the old field school—reading, writing, and arithmetic. He determined to be a carpenter and all his studies had that in view. His mother died in 1852. On Jan. 1, 1854, his father having married again, he was thrown out upon his own resources and went forth to do battle against poverty and inexperience. He did not sit down to pine and lament, but went to work with an undaunted spirit. About this time there came into his life a new purpose and a new power. He was mightily convicted and powerfully converted on June 16, 1857, and at the same time felt the call to enter the ministry. At this time, by what seemed to be a strange providence, he fell into the hands of Dr. Jno. T. Baskerville, an honored member of the Memphis Conference, who sent him to school, encouraged him in every way he could, kept him in his home for three years, and finally had the great joy of seeing the young preacher ready to enter the Conference. When young Poston was ready to be off to Aberdeen, Miss., where the Memphis Conference was to be held that year, Dr. Baskerville gave him $25 and bade him Godspeed in his ministerial career. What timely aid to a struggling soul! How rich in the coinage of Heaven shall these benefactors be when God shall come to make up his jewels!

Brother Poston was licensed to preach at Wesley Camp Ground, Sept. 5, 1857; joined the Memphis Conference at Aberdeen in November, 1860, together with sixteen others. He was assigned as junior preacher to the Holly Springs Circuit, with Rev. Elias Jackson as senior preacher. The war was just being felt, money was scarce and the young preacher received for his services the sum of $92. The following year he was assigned to the Jacinto Circuit with seventeen appointments. Rev. Joseph Johnson was the presiding elder. He entered promptly upon his appointed work, but his circuit lay within the lines of the Union and the Confederate forces. The battle of Shiloh was impending, and there was so much excitement and confusion that it was impossible to accomplish anything; so upon March 22 he gave up the work. The following year he served the Lagrange Circuit. Here he had more trouble because of the war; the Yankees robbed him of his horse, but, being possessed of the truly apostolic spirit, he served the circuit for some months on foot. God greatly honored his ministry here, and 276 persons were converted that year and large additions made to the membership of the Church.

In addition to the charges mentioned above, Brother Poston served the following circuits: Randolph, Water Valley, Coffeeville, Oxford, Senatobia, Eureka, Houston, Stanton, Grenada, Emory, Holly Springs, Pine Mountain, Mt. Vernon, and East Holly Springs.

In 1870, at which time the North Mississippi Conference was organized, Brother Poston was serving within the bounds of this Conference, where he continued till 1878, when he was transferred to the Memphis Conference and assigned to Stanton Circuit. Here he remained for two years, whereupon he was transferred back to the North Mississippi Conference, of which he continued a member to the day of his death.

Brother Poston was admitted into full connection at the Conference held at Jackson, Tenn., in December, 1865, and was ordained Deacon by Bishop Paine, who also ordained him Elder at the same Conference. He was given the supernumerary relation in 1896, and the superannuate relation the following year, continuing in this relation till his death at Holly Springs, Miss., on Christmas night, 1915.

This good man was pre-eminently pious. He had the fervor and unction of the evangelist and the faith of an apostle. He claimed the blessing of complete sanctification as a second work of grace, and his life was not out of harmony with his profession. By common consent, he was regarded as the best man in Holly Springs, where he spent the last years of his life. During the period of his superannuation he was a faithful and regular attendant upon the services of the sanctuary and was a true witness to the saving and keeping power of our holy religion.

Among the many monuments left behind which point to the life and labors of this good man not the least is the Oxford Camp Ground, where for 43 years meetings of greater or less power have been held each year. He secured eighteen acres of land three miles east of Oxford and helped to build the tabernacle under which he preached the first sermon. Here hundreds have been won from darkness to light and from the power of Satan unto God. Doubtless on that great day up yonder, many a man will rise up and call Brother Poston blessed because he helped to turn their feet toward a better life.

While not classed as a great preacher, Brother Poston was the kind that had success. Men were awakened under his ministry, and, guided by his safe counsel, they soon found the Savior near. By his quiet, unassuming manner he won his way to the hearts of men, and he never did anything to forfeit their good-will.

He loved his home and was careful that it should be a home of prayer. His first wife was Mrs. Sallie Compton, a lovely Christian character, who surrendered her life fully to the sacrifices and hardships of the itinerancy. For many years she shared his burdens and made lighter his tasks, walking bravely by his side wherever duty called. Having lost this good woman, he was married late in life to Miss Sallie Hallman, of Marshall County, who was a true, good wife, and helped to make his sunset days peaceful and happy.

On the day after Christmas, just before the sun went down, we held his funeral services in the Methodist Church at Holly Springs, in the presence of a large number of his friends and neighbors. It was the holy Sabbath. The sky was never clearer nor the sun brighter. It was a fitting culmination to a life so pure and good. Then, as the evening shadows gathered about us, we laid his tired body down to rest, believing that God would station heaven's sentinels there to keep watch over the dust of our brother, beloved, and that at the last hour God would call him to the resurrection of the just to be forever with the Lord.

E. S. LEWIS.

LITTLE THINGS.

Dear Doctor Meek: Quite a number of years ago I lived in Water Valley, Miss. That was long before I began the practice of law and I was superintendent of the city graded schools there at that time. I chanced one day to be in a large dry-goods store. A little girl whose name I never learned came in and asked to see a fan. The clerk showed it and priced it to her. She turned it over and evidently was admiring its beauty. From her dress it was evident that she was poor. After admiring it awhile she timidly told the clerk that she had but five cents—just a nickel. He asked ten cents for the fan. She reluctantly handed it back to the clerk, and with a face of disappointment started to leave the store. A drummer saw what had happened and called to her to come back and gave her the other nickel. She bought the fan and the happiness that played over her face must have given that drummer much happiness. It certainly gave me a great deal of sorrow. I at once saw where I had lost an opportunity. That little incident has lingered with me all these years. I simply did not think of the opportunity which lay at my feet. I have been ashamed of myself ever since. Yes, it was a "little thing" apparently, but God never overlooks little things. Even the "sparrow's fall" does not escape his divine eye.

In our every-day affairs with mankind there come up so many opportunities to do some little act of kindness. Let us scatter a rose here and there along the journey. God will find them and lay them away. Let us be certain that we do not overlook our opportunities. Let us not wait until after their death before we speak some word of cheer to those whom we meet along the way.

"Why speak of my virtues after I'm dead?
It is then too late to hear what is said.
Why cover my grave with flowers rare?
I'll never know that you placed them there.

"It were better to give me just one loaf of bread
Than to offer a thousand after I'm dead;
And it were better to offer just one word of cheer,
Than to say a eulogy over my bier."

Sunday, February 6, marks another epoch in the history of the Galloway Memorial Church. Our pastor, Rev. W. G. Henry, took for his text part of Acts 9:15, "For he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles and kings and children of Israel," which he made a personal application to each of us. He said he wished to show us what our great Church did last year. He had prepared the following charts on cardboard, 2 by 3, upon which were printed facts easily read by every one in the large auditorium.

His first chart was what we did as a Conference:

Number 1.

Mississippi Conference, 54,884 members, paid for Missions $18,387.

Foreign Missions	9,046
Home Missions	9,337
Total	$18,383

or thirty cents each to spread the Kingdom.

Number 2.

The next chart showed what the largest church in each district contributed per member:

Hattiesburg, Main Street, 670 members	$617	90c
Laurel, First Church, 550 members	348	60c
Vicksburg, Crawford St., 562 members	337	60c
Brookhaven, First Church, 681 members	298	40c
Jackson, Galloway Mem'l, 1496 members	705	40c
Gulfport, First Church, 743 members	202	27c
Meridian, Central, 1048 members	285	27c

Number 3.

The next chart showed what some churches in the Jackson District had done:

Canton, 272 members	$225	90c
Yazoo City, 535 members	385	70c

His next chart showed specials to Missions:

Fannin Circuit	$600.00
Fernwood	443.00
Galloway Memorial	202.00
All the other Churches in the Conference	119.00

Then he said, "There is not a man in the Mississippi Conference who supports a missionary alone.

His last chart was what we could do:

Support a missionary	$600.00
Support a missionary circuit	400.00
Have a scholarship from	$30.00 to 50.00
Equip a school	200.00

He said then, "We pause a moment to give you a chance to make a free will offering," which amounted to $900.

We then celebrated the Lord's Supper by taking the Communion. It is the old, old story of the silent power of the gospel of Jesus Christ when intelligently presented. Some people do not like statistics, say they are tiresome, but facts are the fingers of God.

SOME REFLECTIONS.

Dear Dr. Meek: Just 44 years ago to-night I spent the night with Brother J. W. Poston, of precious memory, at Oxford, Miss., and the next evening, the 8th, I took my bride, Miss Lizzie Moore. Revs. J. H. Brooks, J. J. Brooks, H. C. Morehead, and R. P. Mitchell were present on that occasion. Besides these brethren a crowd of people were in attendance, the majority of whom are now on the other shore. And we are on the road. How time flies!

I saw a picture and a notice of the death of Rev. George W. Bachman in a late issue of the Advocate—possibly I had known him longer than any one else now living. He and I were reared near the same place. I remember when he professed religion and joined the Methodist Church, very much against his parents' wishes—not that they did not want him to be religious, but because his father was a Primitive Baptist. Young Bachman, however, did not stand back on this account, but took up his cross and for nearly three-score years, until summoned from labor to rest, he followed his divine calling. When I begin to review the honor roll of the North Mississippi Conference, and then that of the North Texas Conference, where I have spent thirty years, I am made to wonder how long it will take to renew my acquaintance with friends and loved ones in heaven, for they are legion.

I can feel the hand of Father Alexander as in November, '69, he took my right hand in his, and putting his left on my hand, said, "Son, live humbly and pray a heap, and the Lord will bring you out all right." I had heard Will Harris, Dr. Munsey, J. B. McFerrin, A. L. P. Green, Bishop Kavanaugh, and others preach, and now I was to take charge of a work of seven appointments out in a rough country, where Dr. J. W. Boswell was once stationed as a young preacher. I knew I was not, and never would be, a Munsey, a Kavanaugh, or any of those giants in the ministry. But God had not called me to fill their places; I had my own little niche to fill, and I thank God that I have done the best that I could. My wife has been as true as steel for 44 years. With one son in heaven and six children on the way, I hope to meet my many friends and loved ones over there.

I did want to go to New Albany last December, as I had preached in a schoolhouse near there before the town was in existence—when there was only a store or two; but I had to forego the pleasure. Through your excellent paper I follow my friends, as well as learn of the younger men, and I rejoice in their success.

Frisco, Tex., Feb. 7, 1916. S. W. MILLER.

MRS. SALLIE MARKHAM MOUNGER.

Sallie Markham Mounger was the child of George Markham and Jane Billingsly. Her father came of an influential Virginia family, and her mother was of one of the prominent families of Alabama. Soon after marriage they settled in Warren County, Mississippi, on a large plantation near Big Black River, and were among the prominent and honored planters of that prosperous section of the State. They became the parents of two sons and three daughters. All have answered the last summons except two daughters. Sallie was born on November 27, 1857, and died at the Touro Infirmary at 10 o'clock p.m., December 27, 1915.

After passing through the public schools of her county she became a student at Whitworth College—than which no other college has made a larger contribution to the womanhood of the South. Her studies there were directed to graduation by Dr. H. F. Johnson and Professor R. S. Ricketts. Concerning the stay of Sallie Markham at the college Professor Ricketts writes: "I met Sister Mounger first as Miss Sallie Markham when she was a student at Whitworth College. For two years she was in part under my tuition, and I had an opportunity to know her well personally and as a student. A school, and especially a boarding school, furnishes one of the best tests of individual disposition and character: no other tribunal is more keen to detect sham, or more ready to recognize and appreciate real merit. By this test Miss Sallie stood approved by both faculty and fellow-students. To a strict and cheerful performance of every duty she added a charm of manner that made it a pleasure to meet her in the classroom, and to observe her bearings in all the relations of college life. She was, withal, a Christian who needed not to apologize for or to explain the religion she professed."

Her culture was broad and deep. Her reading was varied and extensive, with special emphasis given to standard literature. The productions of the great poets made contributions to her thought and life. In school she gave especial attention to music, and attained a high degree of efficiency in both piano and voice. She was truly fond of singing, and loved, above all, the songs of the Church. Her voice became a helpful part of all the religious services where she was present.

Sister Mounger was a woman of rare practical judgment. During a period of widowhood the care of large business interests fell upon her, but the interests did not suffer because they had fallen into softer hands; nor did they rob her of any part of her womanly gentleness. She was the master, the property was the servant. Her splendid mental and spiritual poise guided her in solving social and moral problems, and made her truly the helpmeet of her pastor-husband.

Her broadness of culture and largeness of heart gave the velvet touch to her contact with others. She loved friends; and her head, heart, and hands were always extended to draw others into her circle. Her pleasing manners, her cordial greetings, and her kindly interest added daily to the number of those whom she trusted and loved, and who in turn loved and honored her.

She possessed a most pleasing personality. Nature gave to her a face, features, and form that made her a woman of rare beauty. Grace controlled every muscle that directed her physical movements. Although time had brushed away some of the bloom of youth, and dimmed some of the luster of the eyes, and robbed the movements of some of their elasticity, yet to the day of her death she went forth "in beauty like the night of cloudless skies and sunny climes." Gossip found no entertainment in her thoughts, nor servant in her tongue. Her judgments were formed through justice and love; and her love that thought no evil shielded those who were attacked from arrows shot by others.

Perhaps the highest compliment to the qualities of her head and heart is found in the regard and tender affection in which she is held by her stepsons and stepdaughters. When she became related to them by marriage they had reached the estate of manhood and womanhood, and were not won by the motherly interest necessary for childhood. But to them she has been "mother" with all the honor that attaches to that holy name, and they have honored themselves in the affectionate regard given to her. Only two of the five children born to her linger on this side the grave—a son and a daughter. While they sit in the gloom of a great bereavement, they are comforted by a strong tie of affection binding stepfather and stepbrothers and stepsisters and father into one family.

Sister Mounger became a Christian and joined the Methodist Church in childhood, and remained true to its doctrines, its polity, and its standards of life to the day of her death. She loved its services and its service. One who knew her well says of her: "Her religious life was decided, strong, and fervent, characterized always by a becoming simplicity. It was hid with Christ, transforming every duty, and making every minute bright with the light of hope. At the last she looked into the future solemnly, and talked gratefully and lovingly of the past. In all the land there was no purer Christian, no nobler heart, no greater soul."

Through her marriage on January 19, 1899, to Dr. E. H. Mounger, of the Mississippi Conference, she was brought into intimate touch with the workings of the Methodist Church. The position of the itinerant pastor's wife demands varied and extensive culture, and the broadest sympathies and interests. In her ministries she must meet on an equality with the wealthy and the poor, the learned and the ignorant, the refined and the boorish. Her breast becomes the burial ground for community clashes, and her sympathies and counsel must neutralize the cross-currents of society. The life of Sister Mounger honored this station. In every sense she was the helpmeet of her husband. Her mind was not only stored with general information, but her knowledge of the work and workings of her Church made her life not only educational, but inspirational. In her going the Church is made poorer.

While planning for other days on earth, her sickness came with grave warnings of the close of life. After a few days spent in the South Mississippi Infirmary at Hattiesburg, she was carried to the Touro Infirmary in New Orleans, hoping that the surgeon-skill of Dr. Matas might give relief. But the malady had gone too far. Leaving the assurance with her loved ones that all was well, and that the future had no shadows, she closed her eyes to the scenes of earth, and we confidently believe they were opened to the beauties of heaven. THE SKEPTIC TURNS PREACHER.

It is the testimony of all careful observers that to France more than to any other country the calamitous war has brought a deepening of the national character and a strenthening of the moral and spiritual forces. The most striking instance of a public confession of such an altered viewpoint that it might almost be classed as a Methodist conversion is that of M. Henri Lavedan, the brilliant journalist, whose cynical mockeries at religion won for him the title of "the Nietzsche of France." The Sunday School Chronicle of London quotes him as publishing this recantation, forced from him by what he has seen and experienced since his country passed under the harrow of war. He says:

"I once laughed at faith and thought myself wise." But as I saw France bleeding and weeping, my laughter could not give me joy. I stood by the way and saw the soldiers as they went lightheartedly to face death. I asked, 'What is it that makes you so?' I counted the sacrifices of our people and saw how they accepted them with praying hearts. Then it was to me a great comfort to know of an eternal fatherland. A nation must despair, if it does not believe that the sufferings of earth will become the joy of heaven. Who can hope, when everything is failing, save he who has faith in god? Oh!—I dare not name Him (Jesus Christ). He was so good, and I * * * What would become of France, if her children did not believe, or her women did not pray? A vast people of the dead cover the field! How hard it is to be an atheist upon this national burying-ground! I can't do it, I can't be one! I have deceived myself, and you who have read my books and sung my songs. I was mad. It has all been an awful dream. O! France, France! Return to your faith and to your best days. To depart from God is to be lost. I know not whether I shall be alive to-morrow, but I must tell my friends Lavedan does not dare to die an atheist. It is not hell that makes me afraid, but this one thought grips me: God lives, and thou art so far from Him! O! my soul, rejoice that thou art permitted to see the hour in which, kneeling, thou hast learnt to say, I believe. I believe in God. I believe."

WILL BE A GREAT GATHERING.

The National Convention of the Anti-Saloon League of America will be held in Indianapolis from June 26 to 29, inclusive, 1916. Coming, as this Convention does, so soon after the National Conventions of the great political parties, it will be one of the most momentous gatherings of temperance forces ever assembled in this country. Plans are now on foot to make it a great school of methods, where the latest and most scientific word concerning the war against beverage alcohol will find utterance. Men of national and even International fame will be on the program. Recognized leaders in the fight against the saloon throughout this country will be there and will have prominent parts in the proceedings of the Convention.

TO THE AMERICAN EAGLE.

Jas. W. Lipscomb, M. D.

Proud emblem of a land at rest,
Dost thou forget the motto on thy crest?
Hast greed of gold upon thee thrust
By those souls on base things lust
Caused thee to forget, "In God we trust?"

Sure sordid things are not for thee;
From their foul touch turn thou and flee,
Ere thine own heart cankers and rusts,
And thine own subjects feed on crusts;
Remember that, "In God we trust."

Why all this war talk in a peaceful land?
Why all these warships, armies, great and grand?
Hast thou forgot the motto on thy bust?
Wilt thou be ruled by doctrine man has trussed,
Or wilt thou still believe, "In God we trust?"

Thine is the mission of the lowly Nazarene,
Thine to proclaim, "Peace on earth, good will to men;"
Sure thou wouldst not grovel in the dust,
Sure thou wouldst to all lands be just—
Heed thy slogan, "In God we trust."

Stop all this robbing mouths of bread,
Remember those fields of popples red,
Pray God that such may never come to us,
And that our souls be clean, pure—and thus
For e'er 'twill be, "In God we trust."

"PEACE AT ANY PRICE."

Dear Mr. Editor: In the issue of the Advocate of January 23, under the above caption, there appeared an article from Mr. J. D. Barbee in which, referring to your notice of the pacifist number of the Missionary Voice, he says that he enters his "protest against the whole business." Whether he intends by the expression "the whole business" to register his protest against your brief notice of The Voice, or against that particular number of The Voice, or against those who advocate peace, does not appear: but, be that as it may, let the world "sit up" and take notice of the fact that Mr. Barbee has entered his protest against "the whole business," and if any one should be so bold as to disregard this protest, let him know that he does so at his own peril.

Mr. Barbee is very dogmatic in his statements, and seems to forget that some things have four sides, and that every controverted question has at least two sides. He writes as if he thinks that the editor of The Voice stands alone, and that he and all the rest of the world favor the preparedness policy of the present administration; but he must remember that there is a respectable number of the best and brainiest men of the nation upon the other side of this question.

He expresses his indignation that "such a publication (The Voice) should be issued to represent our Church." Well, Jesus Christ was born while angels sang "Peace on earth, good will toward men," and he is called "the Prince of Peace," and should not our Church, and all Churches, be a Church of peace? How can the Church otherwise represent her Lord?

Mr. Barbee says that John Bright, a Quaker, might be excused for advocating peace because of the demands of his religion. This statement sounds like an admission that the roots of religion strike deeper into the heart of a Quaker than does the religion of a Methodist; or, is it a confession that the Methodist Church is not an advocate of peace? As a member of the Methodist Church, I repudiate both the implied admission and confession.

Mr. Barbee's comparison of the attitude of The Voice and the North American Review is unfortunate in that he overlooks the fact that the one is a religious magazine which stands for the principles of the Christian religion, while the other is a secular periodical which voices the sentiments of the world. As for myself, I wish there were one hundred millions of copies of that particular number of The Voice which he condemns so that each man, woman, and child, who is a part of the millions of population of this great nation might have a copy.

There never was a time in the history of this country when there was less need for preparation for war, as I see it; for, the present war will bring such a state of bankruptcy to the European nations that they will not be able, for more than a hundred years to come, to go to war against the inhabitants of an isolated island of the sea.

In all of Mr. Wilson's speeches he pleads for preparedness on the ground of maintaining the self-respect and honor of the nation, and, I presume that this represents the attitude of Mr. Barbee and all those who argue for preparedness. But this position would take us back to the days when men thought that they had to maintain their self-respect and honor by the sinful custom of duelling. It's a mighty poor rule that will not work both ways; and, let me ask, Does not the religion of Christ demand that nations stand in the same attitude toward one another that it requires of individuals? This is the question for all advocates of preparedness to answer—that is, if they call themselves Christians.

The truth is, this whole question of preparedness involeves that form or system of militarism which would require universal military training and service, thus taking out of the life of the young manhood of America from two to three years of those best fitted to prepare them for useful living. From such a system of militarism may the Prince of Peace deliver the young men of our country!

The old theory that the best way to maintain peace is to be prepared for war has been exploded. Germany has knocked it out of the ring in the first round, and it is now in order that the friends of militarism bring into the ring another champion JOHN W. RAMSEY.

THE FIGHT AGAINST TUBERCULOSIS.

Figures indicating the growth of the anti-tuberculosis campaign in the United States show that in the year 1905 about $5,000,000 was spent in this movement, while during the year 1915 more than $22,500,000 was spent. These figures are part of the annual statistical statement of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis lately published.

The statement is based in part on actual reports received from anti-tuberculosis agencies throughout the country and in part on estimates made by the association.

In 1905 probably less than $100,000 was spent for anti-tuberculosis work other than the care of tuberculosis patients in a few poorly equipped sanatoria and hospitals.

In 1915 more than 1400 anti-tuberculosis associations spent nearly $1,225,000 in organization and education. Special tuberculosis dispensaries, of which there are 450, spent over $1,150,000 in examining, advising and treating patients.

Open air schools, of which there were none in 1905, spent more than $350,000 in teaching and treating anemic and tuberculosis children, while nearly $750,000 was spent in the care of tuberculous insane and prisoners. Sanatoria and hospitals for the care of consumptives, nearly 600 of them, spent $19,250,000. Much of this sum was contributed by private pay patients, but the greater part, over $12,000,000, was paid by federal, State, city and county boards for free treatment.

As an indication of the way in which the burden of the care of consumptives is being shifted to the public's shoulders, where it rightly belongs, the National Association points out that in 1905, as nearly as can be estimated, less than 25 per cent of the total expenditure of $5,000,000 for tuberculosis was from public funds, while in 1915, nearly 65 per cent, or $14,500,000, was from this source.

What Fight Cost Five States.

New York State again leads the States with the largest total expenditure of nearly $5,000,000, with Pennsylvania second and Illinois third. The following table shows the relative public and private expenditures in each of the five leading States:

Expenditures in 1915.

State.	Public.	Private.	Total.
New York	$3,193,415	$1,751,096	$4,944,511
Pennsylvania	2,172,711	534,722	2,707,433
Illinois	1,558,644	902,314	2,460,958

REPORT OF FINDINGS COMMITTEE.

Unanimously Adopted by Lay Leaders' Conference, Nashville, Tenn., Jan. 4-5, 1916.

We, the Executive Committee and Conference Lay Leaders of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, assembled in Nashville, Tenn., January 4-6, 1916, reaffirm our faith in the Laymen's Missionary Movement as a providential movement planned of God, touching intimately the life of the Church, vitalizing every department of its work and opening up before the laymen an opportunity for adequate service for the Kingdom, and from this meeting we go out with larger vision and better knowledge to bring to our various home Conferences a fresh impulse in the work so close to our hearts.

There have emerged in our days of discussion some points that we think important and wish to emphasize this year.

1. We request the presiding elders and preachers in charge to make definite engagements for the Lay Leaders, which will not conflict with, but fit into their plans, and to use them to lead services in churches which do not have preaching every Sabbath.

2. We urge that meetings of the District and Church Leaders be held to explain the work and discuss plans to perfect it in the local church.

3. We ask that a Laymen's day at the District Conference be arranged where possible.

4. We urge the leaders to put the emphasis upon business conferences with business men, rather than public speaking; and on institute work, rather than inspirational talks.

5. We ask each District Lay Leader to make a demonstration of effective lay activities in at least two churches—one city church and one country church.

6. We urge the importance of preparation for the canvass and thorough co-operation between the stewards and the laymen's committee. It is better to use three weeks in preparation and one day or night in the canvass than to use a day for preparation and three weeks to canvass.

7. We would correlate the Board of Stewards and Missionary Committee by having the strongest man in the church a member of each.

8. Try to put the "Missionary Voice," the Conference Organ, and if possible the General Organ in every home.

9. We commend the action of the Presiding Elders of the Louisiana Conference in passing a resolution to have the Every-Member Canvass in every church in their respective districts.

10. We earnestly request the presiding elders, the pastors, and the lay leaders at all revival meetings to call for volunteers to assist in holding services in every church every Sunday.

11. We emphasize the fact that tithing is the reasonable, business-like and Scriptural method to be adopted by men for providing finances for the church and recommend that preachers shall at intervals deliver sermons on stewardship, and that the practice of tithing be urged by all our leaders.

12. We commend the helpful literature issued by the Movement and urge that it be intelligently distributed in every church, in order to give information to our people and inspiration to our leaders.

13. An Every-member Canvass should be made on the basis of weekly giving, after a business-like estimate has been made on the basis of the tithe, after an intelligent study of the resources and the needs of the local church and the opportunity for world-wide service.

14. We recommend a Conference-wide simultaneous Every-Member Canvass for the following year's finances, the same to be made in one day, if possible, shortly prior to the Annual Conference.

15. We recommend post-canvass meetings to be held at regular intervals for the purpose of making reports concerning collections of offerings and the re-assignment and re-canvassing of

IT'S FUN TO SCRAPE THE PAN.

When mother's baking day comes round,
I'll tell you what I do;
I wait until all's nice and brown,
And then I know she's through,
And then she'll call me pretty soon,
And say: "Come, little man;
I'll give you my big mixing spoon,
And you can scrape the pan."

And so I scrape the golden dough,
All fragrant with the spice.
I must admit, of all I know,
There's nothing quite so nice.
The cakes are crisp and brown and good,
And how I make them go!
But I would have her, if I could,
Just have them all stay dough.

Some day when I'm a great big man
I'll marry me a wife,
And then I think I have a plan
To be happy all through life.
I'll tell her when she goes to bake:
"Remember, if you can,
And use just half the dough in cake,
And let me scrape the pan."—

A KNIGHT OF HIGH DEGREE.

By Lawrence Otis.

"Come on, Batty, down to the old pond and skate, this afternoon: the skating there is great. All the boys are going after school."

"Can't, Larry, this time, promised to go home after school."

"Bet you are going skating with some one else. Going to take little sister Gladdy out skating."

Batty turned red at the taunt, but his eyes were clear and steady, as he looked straight at Larry and said:

"Yes, I am going to take Glad skating this afternoon. I promised a week ago that I would take her, and I always keep my word. I thought that I would rather go with the boys, when you first spoke, and I was sorry that I had promised her, but now I think I had rather go with her than with a boy who would speak in that way of a boy's sister."

Some of the other boys had waited to hear if Batty was going with them, and when he made his little speech, they cried: "Good for you, Batty. You always did do as you said you would. But what's the matter with coming and bringing Glad with you?"

"I might do that," said Batty. "I'll see."

When Batty reached home, and saw Glad's eager little face pressed against the window pane, watching for him, he was not sorry that he had refused to go with the boys.

"My! but a boy always ought to do as he says he will or somebody is bound to feel badly," he said to himself as he hung up his cap. "S'posing I hadn't come back for Glad, she'd been sorry all the afternoon, and I don't believe that I'd had a very good time, either. You kind of feel better inside, when you do as you promise."

When it came to going skating, Batty said, as they started out, "Where do you want to go Glad? Mother said we'd be safer on the long meadow. Of course I guess you'd rather go on the old pond, but the doctor says that the ice is getting thin on the pond, and the boys have been told they'd better not skate there, until there comes another cold spell."

"I was going with the boys," said Batty as he struggled with one of his skates, "but then all of a sudden I remembered that I promised you I'd come home, and so I came."

Glad looked the opposite of her name for a minute, as she watched Batty, and then said:

"You're like the knight that Aunt Helen read about last night, in the story. He was of high degree, because he always kept his word. But if you want to go with the boys, you run along Batty, 'cause it must be stupid just skating with me, when you can race them and do all sorts of things."

"No, my Lady Glad, with you I'll stay. Come on, I'll show you how to cut a figure eight on the ice, without bumping your head, and it isn't an easy stunt, either."

All the afternoon the children skated, going home rosy and warm to supper, Batty with the happy feeling about his heart of having made Glad have a good time, and Glad found that Batty would keep his word to her, even in the face of strong temptation to break it. At supper the father turned to Batty and said with interest, "Been skating this afternoon, son?"

"Yes, sir. Glad and I were down on the long meadow. Rather a baby place to skate, but I had Glad, and mother wanted me to be extra careful. Why?"

"Well, a lot of the boys were down on the pond, this afternoon, skating. Old Mr. Derry warned them off because he said the ice was thin, but they only laughed at him, and kept on, and that friend Larry, of yours, had a mighty narrow escape from drowning." Batty's eyes opened wide with surprise and horror. "My, and if I hadn't kept my promise to Glad, I'd a been with them. Say, father, do folks ever get into trouble when they keep their promises?"

"That is a deep question, son; but I can only tell you that a real gentleman is always careful what he promises, and then he never breaks a promise."—The Child's Hour.

HE COULD'T LET GO.

When I was a boy I saw a man take hold of a wire and then fall down on the ground. He could not let go. It was a live wire, full of electricity. He knew it, because we had told him, but he thought he could be careful and use his coat to keep it from touching his hands. But in a moment the current caught him and held him in its grip. He was very fortunate to escape alive.

Since then I have seen others who were caught and could not let go. A man came to me one day and asked me to help him stop drinking. He began as a boy drinking hard cider. Now he could not let go. I have seen men fly into a passion of rage over little things. Years ago they had not tried to control their tempers. Now their tempers controlled them. They could not let go. Boys learn to smoke cigarettes. It seems manly. After a while those boys find they can't stop smoking. It hurts them, but they must go on. Instead of being men they are slaves. They can't let go.

A bad habit is very hard to get rid of. We make it. It would never exist if we had not permitted it. But when it is made, it masters us. We can't let go.

Write the word habit. Now strike off the first letter and you will have a bit left. Strike off the next letter and still a bit is there. Strike off the next letter and still it is there. Strike off he next and yet it is not teetotally gone. All of which goes to show that habit is a hard thing to get rid of.

If habits are so strong, we want them our friends and not our enemies. And if some one who is older and who knows says to you: "Be careful; if you touch that you won't be able to let go," you listen and do what he says.—The Christian Standard.

A WORD OF EXPLANATION.

Dear Dr. Meek: A copy of the Minutes of the Louisiana Conference is on my desk, and it is a neat book, and is in the main, I judge, accurate. But if we were in Conference assembled I would say I rise to a point of personal privilege. In the statistical table on "Membership," etc., the Alexandria District is credited with 160 decrease in membership, while the Alexandria charge has no members reported. This is not the fault of the Editors or Conference Secretaries, but is due to the inability of the acting supply to report. Dr. Cameron was transferred to the Kentucky Conference and had to leave to take up his work there rather hurriedly; and I came to wind up the work here, and was unable to find an accurate record of the membership, and did not care to offer to the statisticians a guess, so I left it blank. But I have since found that the church at Alexandria has 700 members; so that would give the Alexandria District an increase in membership of 540. This by way of explanation.

Then in the table of appointments, I am put down as the pastor of Alexandria station for the second year, when in fact this is my first year. I was not appointed to the Alexandria charge by the Bishop until at the Conference at Mansfield, November 23, 1915, but was allowed to fill out the month remaining on Dr. Cameron's year, which, according to a ruling, as I understand it, of the last General Conference is allowable without counting on a preacher's term of service.

Fraternally,

Alexandria, La. O. J. CHANDLER.

AN INTERESTING ITEM.

Ninety-nine churches and Sunday schools have reported the observance of Hospital Day. Remittances run from 60 cents to $101 in cash, besides subscriptions. The total in cash and subscriptions is $3765.

Not one out of twenty-nine of our churches and Sunday schools have yet reported. Of course many more will yet claim a place on the honor roll of those loyal to the enterprises of their Church.

If all the 809 pastoral charges and 2100 Sunday schools of the four Conferences would do as well as these 99, the Hospital would realize $109,185.

Surely other charges are as loyal and liberal as these. If so, we shall soon have our Hospital open on a scale that will do us credit. And no one will be hurt, and every one will be glad.

If your church or churches, Brother Pastor, or your school, Brother Superintendent, has not yet done what it should, let me urge you to hold a Hospital Day as soon as possible. Tell your people of the great need. Urge them to be as liberal as they should, and get on the honor roll with others who are helping the progress of the Kingdom. Do your best; and do it promptly.

WALTER MALONE'S BIRTHDAY CELEBRATED.

At Capleville, Tenn., a small town thirteen miles southeast of Memphis, near which he was born, the first memorial anniversary of the birthday of the late Walter Malone was celebrated on Thursday, February 10. The exercises, which were conducted in the High School building, began with the singing of "America," after which Rev. A. P. Fowler, pastor of the M. E. Church, South, at Germantown, read a Scripture lesson and offered prayer. Following this, Judge J. M. Greer of Memphis, acting for members of the Malone family, most feiicitously presented the Capleville High School with a full set of the deceased poet's works and a framed copy of his beautiful poem, entitled "Opportunity." Eloquent and appropriate addresses were also made by Mr. M. W. Connolly, the gifted editor of the Memphis News-Scimetar, and Dr. Frazer Hood, instructor in English in the West Tennessee Normal College. Some of the productions of the poet were read, and a pecan tree that had been obtained from the old Malone homestead was planted on the school grounds, after the verses, "Prayer Before Planting Trees," from Walter Malone's pen, had been impressively read.

In opening the ceremonies, the Principal of the High School, Miss Mildred E. English, said: "I am proud that these memorial exereises are to be held in the Capleville High School and I hope to see the movement spread throughout Tennessee and Mississippi. Indiana has set aside a day to do honor to James Whitcomb Riley and Kentucky has set aside a day to pay a just tribute to James Lane Alien. It would be only proper for Tennessee to commemorate the birth of the State's greatest poet."

We heartily concur in the sentiment that Tennessee and Mississippi should fittingly honor the memory of Judge Malone. He was born and educated in the latter State, and, after reaching manhood, lived and died in the former and sleeps beneath her soil. That he was a poet of extraordinary genius there is not the slightest doubt. In the course of his remarks, Mr. Connolly, who is widely known for his accomplishments, said: "His great work, 'Hernando De Soto,' plaeed him in the front rank of poets. We do not realize that it was the first epic poem written on this continent, and the second written in English. We do not realize that it was the first written in more than 200 years; and it does not deal with fairies or myths, but with the historieal development of a great country."

It is one of the strange things of life that greatness in near-by men and movements are so often unappreciated. Milton had but small reputation as a poet while he lived; Homer was given but little recognition until death had claimed him, and even the marvelous genius of Shakespeare was largely overlooked by his contemporaries. Especially is it true in the South, where there are scarcely any weekly or monthly periodicals of literary merit, that her sons and daughters of unusual gifts frequently remain undiscovered for a long while and are but slowly accorded the distinction which is justly due them. It is high time that we were learning rightly to appraise superior endowments and achievements among our own people and to make the world realize that our sunny land is not barren when it comes to producing men and women of majestic intellectual proportions.

It will be of interest to some of our readers to know that Judge Walter Malone came of Methodist parentage and was reared in a Christian home. We quote in this connection the following statement made by Mr. Connolly, a close personal friend, in his Capleville address: "I noticed the development of his character, and I saw the effect of his early religious training wane and then revive. During the later years of his life he became very religious, and had he lived he would have joined the Church." We have also received from other dependable sources the information that when the summons came to the South's sweet singer he had for some time been expecting it and had stated that he was ready to meet his God.

Had he lived until the time of the recent celebration of his birthday, Judge Malone would have been fifty years of age.

NO MORE SPECIAL EDITIONS.

We desire to state, in order to prevent needless correspondence concerning the matter, that hereafter we will bring out no special editions of the Advocate. Our paper has to serve so many interests of the Church, which are almost constantly asking for a hearing through its columns, that to set all the others aside to promote a single one throws things into confusion in the office, and results in such an accumulation of copy that it takes two or three weeks to get things to moving again in a normal way.

Moreover, in our opinion the value to any cause of "a special edition" of the Conference Organ is very much overestimated. We think that two or three articles on one subject, such as could be printed on a page or two, are as many as the average person will read at one time, and that when there is a long succession of contributions on the same theme spread through an entire issue, most of them are passed over unnoticed. Therefore, we do not believe that the "special number" plan results in enough benefit to compensate for the discrimination to which it subjects other interests and the congested situation which it produces in the Advocate office.

In making this announcement, we do not desire to be understood to be lacking in interest in any phase of our Church work; on the contrary, it is that we may be able to better serve them all that we are taking this position. No $1.50 paper in the entire connection, with a constituency the size of ours, devotes more space to the various activities of the Church or to district or local matters than we do; but since we have only eight pages in each issue (the other eight belonging to the Publisher for advertising purposes, if he cares to claim them) there must be a limit to the extent to which we can permit any one board, or agency, or institution to use our columns. Our forms cannot be expanded a single inch, and we must endeavor to deal with the numerous causes that have claims upon the paper with some regard for equity.

If any brother or the representatives of any interest are disappointed because they cannot always get what they would like into the Advocate, we beg to assure them that the Editor himself is in the same plight. He has less than two pages (a considerable portion of them being taken up by headings and official statements) for his editorial work, when he would like to have at least four; he would like very much to conduct a "Christian Life Department," a "Temperance Department," and other departments that he is convinced would help the paper and do great good, but he cannot do so. The truth is, we ought in a great center like New Orleans to have a larger publication, or, at least, to have a subscription sufficiently large to maintain the paper without having to carry so many advertisements. As it is now, the earnings from the space devoted to advertising are indispensably necessary to keep the Conference Organ going.

A POINTER.

When the plan of having Methodist churches to adopt the Lenten season as a stated time for an annual series of religious services began to be put forward, while affirming that the work of soul-winning is always in order and much to be commended, we expressed a fear that the ultimate outcome of the scheme might be to lead our people into a ritualistic observance of Lent, somewbat after the order of Roman Catholics and Episcopalians. And we now note that one of our Church papers, issued where this plan is in vogue, has already begun to publish a series of prayers "for the FIRST SUNDAY AFTER EPIHANY," "the SECOND SUNDAY AFTER EPIHANY," "the THIRD SUNDAY AFTER EPIHANY," etc. What next?

If there be those among us who think that ritualism and a sound and efficient evangelism can be made to flourish side by side, they need to read Church history.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The recent Epworth League Conference of the Baton Rouge District is stated to have been quite a success.

The Board of Stewards of our First Church at Baton Rouge, La., have recently purchased 75 copies of The Methodist Hymnal for use by the congregation.

The work at Como, Miss., continues to prosper under the guiding hand of the capable pastor, Rev. W. D. Wendel. Our church there numbers among its members many choice spirits.

The Louisiana State Sunday School Convention will be held at Shreveport, La., April 4-6. A feast of good things is promised in the program of exercises being arranged for that occasion.

Our esteemed young friend, Rev. J. Lloyd Decell, of Waynesboro, Miss., gave us last week a fine club of 6 new subscriptions. We scarcely need to say that we appreciate this extension of our circulation among his choice flock.

Rev. N. E. Joyner spent last Sunday in Ruston, La., where, at 11 o'clock a. m., he preached the annual sermon for the Woman's Missionary Society of Louisiana, which was in session there. His message was an inspirational one.

In a business note to our office, Rev. A. T. McIlwain, of Glen Allan, Miss., says: "The work is moving off nicely in the beginning of my second year here. We are hoping to escape the threatened overflow from the great Mississippi River."

Brother J. R. Murphy, of Baton Rouge, La., sends us a club of 7 subscriptions from the Capital City of the State, and says that he hopes to be able to forward us others at an early date. We highly appreciate this good work in behalf of the Conference organ.

Mr. Walter L. Bachman, a son of the late Rev. G. W. Bachman, of Winona, Miss., was in New Orleans last week and paid the Advocate office an appreciated call. Mr. Bachman is a traveling representative of Krausbaar Brothers, the well known tailors of Louisville, Ky.

Bishop W. A. Candler passed through New Orleans Tuesday night of last week en route to Atlanta, after a visit to our Mexican Mission work. Though somewhat worn by travel, he was physically in good shape and cheerful in spirit. He reported things as still in a very unsettled condition in Mexico.

From Standard, La., Rev. E. G. Wood writes: "My work is in fine shape. We will begin a revival campaign on February 19. Please state in the Advocate that I have some time that I can give to revival work this year, and that I should be glad to correspond with any preacher who may feel that he needs my assistance."

Mr. J. B. Streater, of Black Hawk, Miss., spent the larger portion of last week in New Orleans, having come here to replenish his stock of merchandise. While in the city, he was an appreciated guest in the Editor's home. The North Mississippi Conference has never had in it a choicer layman than Brother Streater.

Rev. J. F. Dring, of Ringgold, La., sends us four subscriptions, and inserts in his letter the following reference to his charge: "Our work continues to move forward. Our people seem to be ready and willing to help in every worthy undertaking. We are expectiug many precious souls to be brought into the kingdom this year."

Rev. W. W. Woollard, the faithful and energetic presiding elder of the Columbus (Miss.) District, reports that nearly all the charges in his "diocese" are making a better record than they did last year. He and his associate workers, however, feel that there is yet much to be accomplished and are reaching forth to larger things.

Rev. T. E. Gregory, of Caledonia, Miss., gives us a club of 5 subscriptions aud adds the following note relative to his work: "Everything is going well with us here. These are a fine folk. They have left nothing undone that could contribute to our comfort. Brother Woollard, our presiding elder, was with us here yesterday. He was at high-water mark."

Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., of Dubach, La., writes us as follows: "We have organized one Junior and one Senior Epworth League since coming to this charge, and there are prospects for Leagues at two other churches." Brother Doss is a pastor who believes in looking after the religious development and training of the young people within the bounds of his pastorate.

The following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, have our thanks for two or more subscriptions sent in within the past few days: Rev. S. A. Brown, Kosciusko, Miss., 12 (six of them new); Rev. A. S. Brisco, Lamar, Miss., 4; Rev. M. M. Black, Canton, Miss., 2; Rev. J. H. Foreman, Silver City, Miss, 2; Rev. R. T. Nolen, Williamsburg (Miss.) Ct., 3.

Rev. W. J. Wood is much pleased with his new field of labor—the Winona Circuit. He has found on it many excellent people who are ready to cooperate with him in carrying forward the Master's work. He states that his predecessors have wrought well, and that he is delighted with the new presiding elder of the Winona District, Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, who carries the interests of the Church always on his heart.

Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, of Starkville, Miss., says: "Locally our work was never progressing more satisfactorily than now. I am finding it as easy to preach my fourth year as I did the first, to my surprise and gratification. The Bible never grows old and there is in it an abundance of fresh truth always ready. I preached three times last Sunday (Feb. 6), twice in town and once at the College—to large congregations."

Rev. Paul H. Grice, of Mentorum, Miss., delighted the heart of the Publisher by forwarding on Feb. 7 a club of 13 subscriptions, with a check to correspond. He refers as follows to his charge: "Our work has begun with bright prospects. We are among good people. They are standing by their pastor, and nearly every day brings some token of their thoughtfulness of us. We are working and praying for a successful year."

"I am getting settled down to my work in my new charge, and I find that my predecessor, Brother A. S. Lutz, wrought well in this field." So writes Rev. H. N. Brown, our pastor at New Iberia, La. Brother Brown has had, as will be remembered, considerable sickness this year, and we are gratified to know that he is now in a good condition physically and able to take up the duties of his new pastorate with his usual vigor.

We are indebted to one of our New Orleans readers for the following item of interest: "Mr. W. S. Telson, still a faithful member of the Felicity Sunday school, brings with him every Sunday a Bible presented to him by that school for faithful attendance in the year 1863." This is indeed a noteworthy record, and we dare say that our brother's life has been greatly enriched by the study of God's Word for these more than fifty years.

Rev. J. O. Ware, of Fayette, Miss., writes: "We are well pleased with our field of labor. Our congregations have been good; we had present on Sunday evening, February 6, the largest number of men I have yet had the pleasure of preaching to. The Communion service at the morning hour was largely participated in, the communicants ranging in age from 8 to 85 years. On the same afternoon we organized an Epworth League with 25 members."

Our genial friend, Rev. T. W. Adams, pastor of Court Street Church, Hattiesburg, Miss., is usually original and interesting in what he has to say. Note, for instance, the following: "Last Tuesday, Feb. 8, was my birthday. I celebrated it by buying all the brains I could find—three sets—at the market and tanked up on them. Now for preaching!" Brother Adams' letter brought us a club of 7 subscriptions, for which we extend him our thanks.

Rev. J. D. Simpson, of Louisville, Miss., sends us the following note: "We have just held our first quarterly conference. Brother Mitchell, our new presiding elder, gave us two excellent sermons and presided over our business session with great satisfaction. The assessment for the pastor was raised $115 over that of last year, making it $1215—to be paid monthly. Our congregations are good, our Sunday school is steadily growing, and our prayer meetings are increasing in interest."

We extract the following from a business letter to the Publisher from Mrs. C. C. Miller, of Lake Providence, La.: "The river here is at a dangerous stage. Mr. Miller has urged me to leave, but I have never deserted my post because of danger. He is not well and I have tried to get him to go away, but he is not willing to do so." We feel for our friends along the Mississippi in this time of peril and anxiety, and we pray that a kindly Providence may watch over them and their interests.

In spite of repeated announcements that the forms for the last side of our paper are closed on Tuesday at noon and that Tuesday morning must be given to correcting proofs and the setting up of brief "personals," some brethren persist in sending in copy, including statements and notices of considerable length, accompanied with the request, "Please get this in this issue of the Advocate." Much as we would like to oblige these brethren, we cannot delay the issuance of the paper to do so. Why not be on time in sending in matter?

A correspondent writes us as follows from Centerville, Miss.: "Our people were greatly pleased to have Rev. R. F. Harrell returned to them for the fourth year. I trust that they will faithfully hold up his hands that much good may be accomplished through his ministry. We shall be loath to give up him and his noble wife, who is so devoted to the work of the Church, as we shall have to do this fall, because of the time limit." The Centerville charge has indeed been highly favored in having the services of Brother and Sister Harrell for so long a time."

Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir, presiding elder of the Lafayette (La.) District, informs us that Rev. W. R. McPherson has been moved from Jennings, La., and placed in charge of the Patterson-Jeanerette work. His address is Patterson, La. Brother Hoffpauir further states that the work throughout his territory is progressing favorably. The salaries have been advanced at several places, the Sunday schools are growing, and the pastors are preaching to increasing congregations. This is the presiding elder's last year, and he is confidently expecting the district to make a creditable record.

A busy and happy pastor is Rev. S. A. Brown, of Kosciusko, Miss. He has thoughtfully sent us the following note: "I have just organized a Woman's Missionary Society of 12 members, composed of the young married ladies of the Church. I am expecting great things of them. We have also organized a junior choir of 16 little girls. They sing one song for us every Sunday morning, which delights us, and they seem to enjoy the service which they are thus rendering. We have perfected plans for remodeling, papering, and painting our church. The spirit of the people is good; they pray and work. The Lord is indeed good to us."

In renewing his subscription to the Advocate, Rev. James W. Rogers, presiding elder of the Vinita (Oklahoma) District, adds the following statement: "I take great pleasure in reading your paper. I consider that you are giving us in the Advocate one of the greatest organs in the Church. The Church is prospering in Oklahoma. We are expecting the year 1916 to be the greatest in the history of Oklahoma Methodism. At some future date I shall take pleasure in writing you more fully of our work in this State and the continued success of all our Mississippi men in their adopted field." We hope that Brother Rogers will not forget to keep this promise.

Three of the leading ministers of New Orleans—Dr. S. H. Werlein, Dr. R. S. Coupland, and Dr. J. C. Barr—preached last Sunday on the evils of race horse gambling, delivering ringing messages on the subject. A largely attended meeting of the New Orleans Protestant Ministers' Association was held in the Y. M. C. A. building last Monday morning, with a view to devising ways and means for combating this grave menace to the moral welfare of the city and surrounding section of country. A number of interesting talks were made and a committee consisting of Rev. U. D. Mooney, Rev. W. W. Holmes, and Rev. W. H. Allen, was appointed to confer with the Civic League of Louisiana concerning the course to be pursued in seeking to suppress this evil.

Dr. W. P. Few, President of Trinity College, Durham, N. C., writes us as follows: "The revival meeting which is held annually at Trinity College was conducted this year the first week in February by Dr. F. N. Parker, now Professor of Systematic Theology in the Candler School of Theology, at Atlanta, Ga. For eight days public services were held at 12 o'clock, noon, and at 7:15 in the evening. All classes were suspended at the noon hour and the revival was given first place. The students attended regularly and are better for having done so. As a result of these services many professed faith in Christ, many more pledged themselves to faithful Christian living, and all of us were made stronger spiritually. Of his kind, Dr. Parker is one of the foremost preachers of our time."

Major-General Leonard Wood, of the United States army, spoke to 125 business men at a luncheon in the St. Charles Hotel of New Orleans on Friday, February 4. General Wood is opposed to providing for the defense of America by means of a volunteer army system, which he regards as the most "dangerous" means of defense that the nation can have. Concerning this, the General said: "To send volunteer soldiers to the front is to send untrained men against men who have been thoroughly schooled in fighting, and that is nothing short of the murder of our Americans."

JAMES LUTHER PERKINS, son of Mrs. Cora Perkins, was born on Nov. 25, 1901, and died on Jan. 10, 1916, being 14 years, 1 month, and 16 days old. He was a member of the M. E. Church, South, and a regular attendant at Sunday school. Luther was sick a long time; but he was very patient and complained very little. All that loving hands could do was done, but after all that friends and loved ones could do the Lord said, "Come unto me," and Luther went away. The Lord has taken him from us, and we must be submissive to His will, and look to Him who doeth all things well. We are sure that Luther is better off in that world where there is no sickness, sorrow, or death. And we would say to the loved ones, weep not, though the loss seems unbearable; remember that our loss is his eternal gain. The funeral was conducted at the Methodist Church and his body was laid to rest in the Chunky Cemetery.

His pastor, W. J. WALTERS.

Mrs. L. A. FLOWERS died at Crystal Springs, Miss., on Dec. 28, 1915, at the ripe age of 82 years. We know that she has left her earthly home to dwell in a heavenly mansion, for her faith was firmly fixed on Him whose name is the only one given "under heaven whereby we must be saved." Sister Flowers was a strong believer in prayer, and when she was prevented from attending church by the infirmities of age she found great comfort in her private devotions. She was a constant reader of the Bible, the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and the Missionary Voice. She was the daughter of Rev. Henry Hunington, who was so consistent in his life that he walked before God and man as a saint; and her mother used to take her children to the grove to pray for and with them. Is it any more than natural to expect this of a family of upright, earnest members of the Church Militant? Of this large family of sixteen children, the circle grows smaller, only one of them now remaining; and of her immediate family of five children, all have passed into the other world except two sons. We do not doubt but that she has gone to join the increasing family circle in our Father's home. May God save all the members of this family, and may they dwell together throughout the ages of eternity! Her friend,

Mrs. EMMA SIEBE.

Mrs. N. C. GOAD was born in Maury County, Tennessee, on Septeuber 27, 1844; and died in Yalobusha County, Mississippi, on January 16, 1916. She was married to W. M. Goad on December 9, 1866. Of this happy union several children were born, six of whom yet wait upon the shore of time for the Master's call.

When a girl of about eighteen years of age, she was happily converted and joined the Church, giving her Lord and his kingdom more than a half-century of faithful, loving service. Her life for more than twenty years had been one of physical suffering, but through all those years she followed Him who had suffered all things for her sake. She never grew wearied or impatient when facing the duties of life. She always had a word of sympathy and love for her husband and children. Sister Goad will be missed in the home, church, and community. She will never stand again in the doorway to welcome her husband, children, and friends, but at the beautiful gate she awaits their home-coming.

On the morning of January 18, her body was laid to rest in the old Pisgah church-yard to await the resurrection morn. May our Lord's promise, "I will not leave you comfortless," sustain the aged husband, the three sons, and the three daughters. We can say to the bereaved ones, you know where to find her. W. L. STORMENT.

HEZEKIAH M. SHAW was born in Henderson County, Tennessee, on October 13, 1844, and died in the home in which he was reared on November 16, 1915. The immediate cause of his death was paralysis, from which he suffered for three years. The large attendance at his funeral, which was conducted by Rev. T. E. Gregory, attested the esteem and friendship of his neighbors. His loyalty to his country was evidenced by his faithful service as a Confederate soldier. His value as a citizen was attested by his acceptable service as Justice of the Peace of his neighborhood for about thirty years. As a husband and a father, those nearest and dearest to him pay him loving tribute. He was twice happily married. His first wife was Miss Fannie E. Carter. At her death she left him one son and three daughters, who survive him. In 1894 he was married to Miss Laura Bowen. The beautiful devotion existing between the bereaved wife and her four stepchildren deserves special mention. Our departed brother and friend professed faith in Christ and joined the M. E. Church, South, under the ministry of the Rev. J. J. Brooks in 1893. His hope alone was in Jesus Christ. In the school of suffering he was brought closer to God and was not afraid to go to his reward. The writer wishes he could have done more for the spiritual life of the subject of this notice, and would express his deepest sympathy for his bereaved family.

Tupelo, Miss. J. A. BOWEN.

On December 31, 1915, God in his all-wise providence, permitted the death angel to visit the home of Brother J. F. HENRY and transport his soul to the heavenly world. Brother Henry was born in the year 1854. At the age of 45 years he was married to Miss Ossie Walters of this place (Clarksburg, Miss.). This union was a happy one, which was only made sad by the parting at his death Besides his wife, Brother Henry left to mourn his decease three little girls, two sisters, a brother, Major Pat Henry of Brandon, and a host of friends. He was a member of the M. E. Church, South, having connected himself with it, after his marriage, during a revival held in Clarksburg by Rev. Paul D. Hardin. It was the writer's privilege to be closely associated with him for a number of years and he can testify that he was big hearted, kind, and gentle, being concerned for the welfare of the entire community in which he lived. He was grounded in the faith of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and the nearer the end approached the stronger was his hope that all things were well. The funeral service was conducted by the writer at his home at Clarksburg, and the interment of the body was made in the Brandon Cemetery. Brother Henry has gone from us, but he will not be forgotten. May the richest blessings of God abide with all whose hearts have been touched by the departure of our friend, and may they find comfort in the precious hope of meeting him again!

His friend and pastor.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and 1-4 oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

Be Pretty! Turn Gray Hair Dark

Try Grandmother's old Favorite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Now-a-days, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe for about 50 cents.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy.

such persons as may be negligent in carrying out their pledge of support of the system in use, and for the assignment and canvassing of new members.

16. We recommend that laymen's institutes be held for practical discussion of the work of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. Some Conferences have found it very helpful to hold these meetings at the time of the District Stewards' meeting, others in neighborhoods or in District Conferences.

We urge our Conference, District and Charge Leaders to co-operate with the Presiding Elders in providing and securing an adequate support for every preacher in charge in the District.

18. We recommend specials for churches, Sunday schools, Epworth Leagues and individuals, after consultation and co-operation with the Board of Missions.

19. We consider that the Presiding Elder and Preacher in Charge are the logical and divinely appointed shepherds and leaders and earnestly recommend that all plans and efforts be made and executed under their direction and with their approval and co-operation.

20. We believe the Every-member Canvass equally as effective in the country as in the city.

21. We recommend as books suited for the reading and study of laymen the following:

"The Present World Situation"—Mott.

"The Church of the Open Country"—Wilson.

"Churches At Work"—White.

"The Call of the World"—Doughty.

"Efficiency Points"—Doughty.

"A Man and His Money"—Calkins.

"The Practice of Charity"—Devine.

"Junaluska."

"How to Help"—Connyngton.

"One-to-Win-One Helper"—Todd.

"Evangelism Exemplified"—Todd.

"Heroes of Faith in China"—Pell.

"A New Light in an Old Land"—Pell.

22. We emphasize the importance of the work of the Evangelistic and Social Service Committees and urge the thorough organization and development of the work of these Committees, and that the work of each be planned after a prayerful study of local conditions.

23. We recommend that such men be selected to the office of District Leader as will promise to study the literature and devote some time to the work.

24. We urge that the District Leader plan with the Presiding Elder to hold institutes and business conferences with the men of the churches to make the work effective in his district.

25. We recommend a meeting soon after this assembly closes of each Conference Leader with his District Leaders, when a program similar to the one used at this meeting shall be presented and an intimate and sympathetic touch established between these men. The Conference Leader's work should be done largely through his District Leaders, and always in co-operation with Presiding Elders and pastors.

26. We recommend that the Conference Leaders arrange with the proper authorities for an afternoon or evening during the Annual Conference at a time when the Bishop, the Presiding Elders and preachers can be present with the laymen, and that reports be made of the state of the work in every district, and that information be given as to the motive and method of the work.

27. We recommend that the Boards of the various Conferences provide the expenses of the Conference Leader in his visitations and correspondence.

28. It is the sense of this body that the great general laymen's meeting due for 1916 be held at Lake Junaluska, July 30, August 6, and we return home to do our best, by every means in our power, in co-operation with the Secretaries of our Laymen's Movement, to deliver at Junaluska this coming summer a great delegation of Southern Methodist Laymen.

We look with confidence to the coming year in our work and pledge our best efforts to make it the greatest we have had

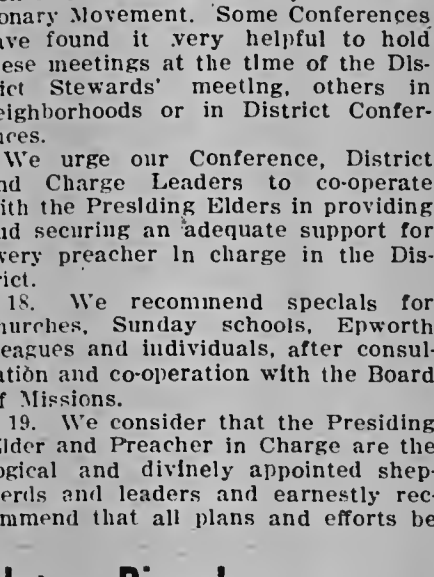
Not a Pimple Anywhere in Sight

And Any Woman May Become Free From All Blemishes of Face or Skin by Using Stuart's Calcium Wafers.

One of the greatest blessings a woman can have is to be possessed of a fine, fair skin on face, neck and arms. A little attention now and then to the blood condition makes this possible. Women are great sufferers from blood disorders and hence their complexions are marred because of this fact.



"A Beautiful Complexion Always is a Center of Admiring Gaze."

Stuart's Calcium Wafers, which are as pleasant to take as a peppermint, give in an exceedingly short time a complexion that will rival the ideals of an artist to produce. They act in such a natural way, by cleaning out the pores, throwing off all skin discolorations and blood impurities, that they do their work of beauty building almost before you can believe it possible for them to act at all.

You may obtain a box of these delightful wafers from any druggist anywhere. Price, 50 cents.

Cured His RUPTURE.

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that quickly and completely cured me. Years have passed and the rupture has never returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell, but will give full information about how you may find a complete cure without operation, if you write to me, Eugene M. Pullen, Carpenter, 597B Marcellus Ave., Manasquan, N. J. Better cut out this notice and show it to any others who are ruptured—you may save a life or at least stop the misery of rupture and the worry and danger of an operation.

STATISTICAL SECRETARIES NOT CRITICISED.

I am sorry that when some of the brethren called attention to errors made in their reports in the Conference Minutes, Brother Baird seemed to take it as a "criticism of the statistical secretaries." Now, as to myself, I was prompted by no such sinister purpose and I am perfectly willing to grant that the error in my report was perhaps my own, though I think that such a mistake could have been made by the Secretaries, as they are also fallible.

Brother Baird says that they were governed by the reports which were handed in by the pastors and that my report did not show that the Pickens charge had even an assessment for the Sunday school; but the Minutes do show that Pickens was assessed $16 for the Sunday school. He has given some of the brethren splendid advice concerning the manner in which the reports should be made and I hope that it may work a reformation. I, for one, will promise to do better after this lecture.

No, I was not criticising any one, but I felt that it was just that the people of the Pickens charge should receive due credit for what they had done.

LAYMEN'S MOVEMENT IN MERIDIAN DISTRICT.

J. W. Beeson, District Lay Leader.

As district lay leader, I have been for two years striving to arouse the laymen of this district, that they may be awakened to greater activities both in spiritual and in material things. We have urged every lay leader and every pastor to introduce the duplex envelope, the every-member canvass, and the missionary educational campaign by a distribution of leaflets and by sermons, mission study classes, addresses, etc. People are slow to get out of old ruts. However, in a few churches we have succeeded in getting them to try the "Financial Method for Methodists," either in part or in whole, and wherever it has given a fair trial it has been a great help in finances. Last year was a hard year on church finances in this section, yet this district made some advance in many lines, which is to be attributed largely to better methods.

I once heard a great address by Guy Carleton Lee of Johns Hopkins University on "When the People Awake." He spoke of affairs of State, but the same results will follow in church affairs "when the people awake." We find the older laymen rarely ever consent to the new method without a protest or a fight. It is to the younger laymen, as a rule, that we must look for improved methods. That includes the men who may be counted old by the calendar, yet who never grow old, but are always progressive. They are never "mossbacks" or "old fogies." May God help us all to keep young in ways and progressive in our ideas!

There are now 9,687,744 persons living in New York State, of which number 5,047,221, or fifty-two per cent, are residents of Greater New York. The census shows that 83.2 per cent are citizens, and 16.8 per cent aliens. The population of the State has increased 20.86 per cent during the past ten years.

PAIN IN BACK, MISERABLE ALL OVER.

Dear Mr. Editor:

All last winter I suffered from a terrible pain in my back. I felt miserable all over, and could not walk but a short distance. Was unable to work and did not sleep well at night, as I was obliged to arise frequently. I learned of Dr. Pierce's Anuric, that cures such troubles, and, sent to him for a trial package. This relieved me of getting up at night in a short time, and I have gained considerable. I am better now than I have been for some time; sleep better, have less rheumatism and do quite a lot of work for a woman of my age. I had brick-dust settlings in my water before using "Anuric," now there is none.

Kindly print this letter; it may help some one else who suffers as I did, or worse.

(Signed) MRS. ELLA A. GARRISON.

Note: Every man or woman ought to use occasionally a proper remedy for the headache, backache, langnor, nervousness and depression to which he or she may be subject. When the kidneys are weak or diseased, these natural filters do not cleanse the blood sufficiently, and the poisons are carried to all parts of the body. There follow depression, aches and pains, heaviness, drowsiness, irritability, headaches, chilliness and rheumatism. In some people there are sharp pains in the back and loins, distressing bladder disorders and sometimes obstinate dropsy. The uric acid sometimes forms into gravel or kidney stones. When the uric acid affects the muscles and joints, it causes lumbago, rheumatism, gout or sciatica. This is the time to try "Anuric," the new discovery of Dr. Pierce, for kidney trouble and pains in back and all over body! Write Dr. Pierce, send 10c for a large trial package, or ask your druggist now for a 50-cent box of "Anuric."—Adv.

Calomel To-day, Sick To-morrow

Dose of nasty calomel makes you sick and you lose a day's work.

Calomel salivates! It's mercury. Calomel acts like dynamite on a sluggish liver. When calomel comes into contact with sour bile it crashes into it, causing cramping and nausea.

If you feel bilious, headachy, constipated and all knocked out, just go to your druggist and get a 50-cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone, which is a harmless vegetable substitute for dangerous calomel. Take a spoonful and if it doesn't start your liver and straighten you up better and quicker than nasty calomel and without making you sick, you just go back and get your money.

If you take calomel to-day you'll be sick and nauseated to-morrow; besides, it may salivate you, while if you take Dodson's Liver Tone you will wake up feeling great, full of ambition and ready for work or play. It's harmless, pleasant and safe to give to children; they like it.—Adv.

UNION EPWORTH LEAGUE MEETING.

The Union Epworth League of New Orleans held its first monthly meeting in 1916 at St. Mark's Hall, the center of the Italian missionary activities of the Methodist Church, Tuesday night, February 8, it being a rather unique meeting, in that part of the devotional services were carried on in Italian by the members of a newly formed Italian League at that point, which has a membership of 22.

The devotional service was conducted by Rev. N. E. Joyner, of the Carrollton Avenue Church, who gave a very interesting and uplifting talk on "Our Kinship with Christ." The business meeting which followed was livened up considerably and carried out of the usual rut by a spirited talk from Mr. J. D. Saint, President of the State League Conference, on "Our Responsibility as Leagues and Individual Leaguers in the Evangelization of the World." Mr. Saint gave a very encouraging report of the League activities throughout the State.

When the general routine of business was finished, our President, Rev. W. E. Thomas, suggested that in view of the fact that recently there had been a special gathering for children and another large conference under the auspices of the Layman's Missionary movement, in the city, we as a Union League arrange for a rally of the young people of the Methodist churches of New Orleans. At the suggestion of Dr. S. H. Werlein, of the First Methodist Church, who gave us an interesting talk in connection with the young people's rally idea, our President will soon appoint a special committee to perfect arrangements for the proposed rally, and the Union is expecting big results therefrom.

Our next meeting will be held at the Mary Werlein Mission, 1026 Tchoupitoulas Street, on Tuesday, March 14. A large attendance at our union meetings would he sure to help our local leagues.

MISS LOU A. MILLER.

Miss Lou A. Miller was born in Alabama, on Oct. 21, 1847, and died in Patterson, La., on Nov. 15. 1915. If living a life of cheerful, loving self-sacrifice and service for others is noble and praiseworthy, then few have lived in a manner nobler or more deserving of praise than the subject of this sketch. She was the sister of the late Rev. John A. Miller, the "St. John" of the Louisiana Conference. Miss Lou's parents moved to Mississippi when she was an infant and lived near Paris, Miss., until 1871. Soon after the death of the wife of her brother, John A. Miller, she, with her mother, moved to Louisiana to take charge of her brother's orphaned children. Her mother was an invalid and to the call of the orphaned children was added the care of an invalid mother. Well and nobly did she perform this duty. It was through the loving, devoted self-sacrifice and service of his sister, Lou, that her brother, John A., was enabled to continue his labors as an itinerant preacher in Louisiana, which were owned and blessed of God to the good of so many. "His name is as ointment poured forth," and linked with his name should ever be that of Sister Lou. She kept this home, reared the children, practiced economy, thus enabling her brother to pursue his noble work, keep out of debt on meager salaries, and educate his children. All this she did without bluster, ostentation, display, or complaint. So retiring was she by nature, that none but her most intimate friends knew her true worth.

Her only surviving sister, Mrs. H. H. Wadsworth, says of her: "Of her true love and self-sacrifice no one knows so well as I. She never complained—never spoke of what she had to do or sacrifice. Her later life was spent with me, helping me in rearing my children and assisting in my household duties, always wanting to do more than her share. I owe so much in my own life to her, and her influence in moulding the characters of my children has been even greater than my own. My greatest comfort is in knowing that she has joined those she loved best. I only am left of our family of seven. That must have been a great reunion."

And there we all may meet, and be "forever with the Lord."

GET RID OF HUMORS AND AVOID SICKNESS

Humors in the blood cause internal derangements that affect the whole system, as well as pimples, boils and other eruptions, and are responsible for the readiness with which many people contract disease.

For forty years Hood's Sarsaparilla has been more successful than any other medicine in expelling humors and removing their inward and outward effects. Get Hood's. No other medicine acts like it.

They immediately cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour, fermenting food and foul gases; take the excess bile from the liver and carry off the constipated waste matter and poison from the intestines and bowels. A 10-cent box from your druggist will keep your liver and bowels clean; stomach sweet and head clear for months. They work while you sleep.

THE REAL DEFINITION OF LIFE IS NERVE-FORCE

People often wonder what the difference really is between the living and dead body. Apparently nothing has been taken away, but still the complicated machinery of the body has stopped and cannot be started again. What is missing is "life" and the modern definition of life is "nerve-force."

This nerve-force must be distributed regularly all over the body. Directly it does not run smoothly ill-health will follow.

Dr. Miles' Nervine benefits the health by evening up the distribution of this vital force of life, and by taking all the "jars and jolts" out of the system.

In this conjunction the Rev. C. H. Cox, of Mason City, W. Va., has stated:

"I have found Dr. Miles' Nervine to be unexcelled in all nervous disorders and I have always recommended it to anyone whom I hear is suffering in this way. We also always keep Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills on hand as we feel they are invaluable. No words can truly express the real merit of Dr. Miles' Restorative Remedies."

Dr. Miles' Nervine can be used with advantage in all ailments which have a nervous origin or which have affected the nervous system. It is particularly beneficial in case of sleeplessness, nervousness, epilepsy, hysteria, chronic headache and neuralgia.

Dr. Miles' Nervine is on sale at all drug stores and is strictly guaranteed to benefit you or your money will be refunded by the druggist.

MISSIONARY INSTRUCTION IN OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Dear Dr. Meek: I have just finished reading the two books prepared by Dr. E. L. Pell, at the request of the Board of Missions, as a course of missionary instruction in the Sunday schools. And I am convinced that they furnish the most practical means of bringing our Sunday schools sympathetically and intelligently into line with our missionary policy.

As China is the field that the Board of Missions has asked the Sunday schools to concentrate their attention on for this year, the books are both on China. They are prepared for use in the Intermediate, Senior and Adult grades.

The book for the intermediate grade is "Heroes of Faith in China." It consists of thirteen lessons, each of which bring to the student's attention some missionary hero who wrought in China to lay the foundations of the work of the Church in that land. The text of a lesson covers six or eight pages, and is divided into ten or twelve numbered paragraphs, constituting a most fascinating story of the hero and his work. The story is followed in each case by an outline of work for the student, consisting of: (1) Questions to answer, which bring out the full teaching of the lesson story; (2) notebook work, including the development of a map on which our mission stations are located, and their status on the field determined; (3) a missionary Bible reading for each day. The heroes are for the most part our own missionaries.

The book for the senior and adult classes is "A New Light in an Old Land," which follows the same lesson and outline plan as the first named book, but makes more of a study of China itself, its civilization, its strong points, its fatally weak points, its collapse and the causes for it. The work of the missionaries is studied, and the test of the work as it passed through the "Boxer" uprising.

These books can be placed in the intermediate, senior, or adult classes as a substitute either for the uniform or graded courses. They are no more expensive than the graded courses, and it is my opinion that a little investment here by any Sunday school will produce a more intelligent Church on the subject of missions, and will result in more conscientious giving to the support of our mission work.

MERIDIAN DISTRICT NOTES.

Rev. J. H. Moore, of the Lauderdale charge, is starting the year with favorable indications of success. He has recently reorganized the Sunday school at Lockhart, which will be a blessing to the community.

Judge Chas. A. Stovall, a venerable father in our church at Shuhuta, Miss., passed to his reward on Feb. 3, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. W. L. Weems.

Mr. T. G. Bennett, our capable Sunday school superintendent at East End, Meridian, has moved to Louisiana, and Mr. R. M. Langford, the assistant, has been chosen to fill the vacancy.

Rev. William B. Hogg, the accomplished pastor of First Church, Laurel, delivered an address on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 30, at the Princess Theater, in Meridian. He was there in honor of Mr. H. G. Bowden, R. R. Y. M. C. A. Secretary, who was having his farewell service in Meridian.

Bishop J. H. McCoy will preach the Commencement sermon at the Meridian Woman's College, May 21. The Bishop and President Beeson were boyhood friends, his father being at one time the Beesons' pastor in Alabama. It is fitting that these friends should meet "down the stream of time" as Bishop and College President.

LAGRIPPE USUALLY LEAVES A BAD COUGH.

Both la grippe and influenza often leave a bad cough that hangs on, is wenkening and exhausting. Foley's Honey and Tar Compound is a simple, quick and effective medicine for curing these bad la grippe coughs. E. C. Rhodes, Middleton, Ga., writes: "When getting well of la grippe I still had a hacking cough and for several months could get no relief. I begun taking Foley's Honey and Tar and soon I was well of both cough and cold which never returned." All druggists sell it everywhere.

A NERVOUS BREAKDOWN,

no matter how trivial it appears, may be the beginning of the end of you. The heart and nerves are so closely connected that nothing can affect the nerves without affecting the heart. A shattered nervous system means a weak heart. For sale by the best dealers everywhere. Price 50c. and $1.00. Manufactured by Van Vleet-Mansfield Drug Co., Memphis, Tenn.—Adv.

So sure are the manufacturers that "RENWAR will give entire satisfaction, they sell it on a positive guarantee of money back if the purchaser is not entirely satisfied with the results. Dr. Osler on Tuberculosis

Sir William Osler, Regius Professor of Medicine at Oxford, says in his "Practice of Medicine" (1892), on page 249: "The healing of pulmonary tuberculosis is shown clinically by the recovery of patients in whose sputa elastic tissue and bacilli have been found. * In the granulation products and associated pneumonia a scar tissue is formed, while the smaller caseous areas become impregnated with lime salts. To such conditions alone should the term healing be applied."

The success of Eckman's Alterative in tuberculosis may be due partly to its content of a lime salt in such combination with other valuable ingredients as to be easily assimilated.

It is worth a trial, unless other treatment already is succeeding. We make no promises concerning it any more than do reputable physicians with their prescriptions, but since it contains no opiates, narcotics or habit-forming drugs, it is safe. Price $1 and $2 per bottle. Sold by leading druggists or sent direct from the Laboratory. We would like to send you a booklet containing information of value and references.

THE ANNUAL MEETING AT CLARKSDALE,

February 23, 1916.

The fourth annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of North Mississippi Conference will convene in Clarksdale on Wednesday, February 23, and continue through Sunday, February 27.

Besides the business, which is weighty, a splendid program has been prepared. Mrs. Bessie Lipscomb, Home Base Secretary of the Council, will be one of the notables present.

Both the Executive Committee and Clarksdale expect the largest delegation ever had at an annual meeting before. Clarksdale expects not less than 150 delegates. This means that each auxiliary may send one or two delegates, which will enable you to send your auxiliary president as well as a delegate from your ranks.

No town in the State excels Clarksdale in hospitality. Her splendid people throw wide their doors and give a welcome that makes one feel their home is yours for the time being.

Noonday lunches will be served, which will add greatly to the comfort of those in attendance, as well as expedite business, as was demonstrated at Corinth last year.

Auxillaries will please elect delegates at once, and send their names to Mrs. M. K. Herrin, Clarksdale, chairman of Entertainment Committee.—North Mississippi Bulletin.

HOW SHE DID IT.

A pretty story is told of a poor Christian mother in a heathen land. "How did you reach here with your five little children?" was asked. The woman had traveled for nine hours to be able to reach the services which were being held each day and evening while their pastor was visiting the districts in the mountains. Part of the journey was up such a steep hill that there was no way of getting to its summit except by getting a grip on the stray roots and tufts of grass and simply drawing one's self up in this way. If friendly arms were at the top to take hold of your outstretched hand and then catch hold of the other and haul you up, it helped, but was not enjoyable.

"How did you with those five children get up that bad place?" "Oh, that was easy, pastor," exclaimed the woman. "I went up with one at a time, coming back for each one until I got them all up."

The husband thought the nine hours journey not too long to reach the Bible services, and he appeared each evening in time for the last service and returned late at night to take care of the few livestock on their little farm. To have new thoughts given of God was worth weary travel eighteen hours out of the twenty-four. —Epworth Era.

REPORT FROM RAYNE (LA.) AUXILIARY.

Mrs. W. F. Johnson writes: "Our Week of Prayer was a spiritual feast from the opening service of consecration and prayer to the closing service. Each day we were drawn into closer communion with the Spirit, and each leader seemed full of the Spirit. There was a good attendance at every meeting. From Monday until Friday we, all with one accord, prayed for a deeper consecration, and a more willing service for Christ. Our offering for that week was over $20.

"At our business meeting on the eleventh of this month (January), we had the Installation of Officers, and the Pledge offering. The blessing of God was with us. We were still on the mountain heights, and from ten present there was $60 promised on the pledge. To this amount, $20 more has since been added.

"The mission study class met on the 25th with eleven members present. We elected a secretary, and had roll call, and had our first lesson from 'The Churches at Work.' Each one was faithful in doing justice to her part and a splendid program was rendered. I am not saying this in a boastful spirit, but because I am so glad I can do something for Christ. My constant prayer is that the Spirit may guide us to be faithful as individuals in the service for others."

LANGUAGE SCHOOL, TOKYO, JAPAN.

Miss Annette Gist, who has been appointed to language study in Tokyo, writes as follows: "I wish very much that you could see the way the language school is conducted. The atmosphere is informal. The sixteen first-year pupils are divided into two sections. We sit around large tables, with our teachers at one end, and we have our conversations in Japanese. There is no word of English spoken, but we get our words through objects or a little acting on the part of the teacher. In the afternoon we study phrases in common use and have a fifteen-minute chapel service. During the day we have three different teachers. This gives us an opportunity to hear the little individualities of enunciation and of speech which are found in correct Japanese as in English."

WINNING THE WORLD.

Dr. Robert Speer says: "Four per cent of our university and college students are willing to go to the foreign field. One per cent is all we really need. Is it a matter of money? One-sixth of the interest on the ninety billions of dollars in the United States in five years would be all the money needed for the evangelization of the world. I am reminded of the oft-asked question, 'Is God dead?' when we talk of being unable to do his will. We certainly make human enterprises succeed. I wish it were possible to make young men and women have for their life passion the giving to the great, splendid and exacting cause. No life is worth living that is not fully given up to a world for our Master."

THE COUNCIL DAILY.

The Council Daily will be edited this year by the editors of our papers—The Missionary Voice and The Young Christian Worker. Price 25 cents. Send all orders for this paper to Mr. John Hancock, care Foote and Davies, Atlanta, Ga. Let the orders be placed promptly, as none will be received after April 12.

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY.

Mr. A. H. Daves, of Southern Alabama, writes: "As few people know of the wonderful opportunities here, my experience may benefit many. Ten years ago, I came here without a dollar, got some free land, cleared one acre and planted Satsuma oranges, which are frost proof. In three years I began selling fruit; that one acre now makes me an annual profit of over $1000. I now have 50 acres of bearing Satsumas. My three and four year old trees yield a profit of $300 to $400 per acre, and my annual income is over $18,000 and growing larger every year." Any person can get from 5 to 25 acres of choice land in the Demonstration Plantation FREE, by having oranges or figs and pecans planted on it. For particulars about this free land, address W. A. Roberts, Secretary, 339 Fifth Ave., Block 296, Pittsburgh, Pa. If you can't go South yourself, an authorized Company will plant your trees, care for them and market the fruit for a share of the profit.

Eat Less Meat If Back Hurts

Take a glass of Salts to flush Kidneys if bladder bothers you.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, and bladder irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous Salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids so they no longer irritate, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease. Adv.

From the Field

Flora, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: This has been "my busy week" in very truth. I have conducted and assisted in two funerals, married one couple, preached 3 times, and driven 36 miles along with it. Circuit-riding is keeping my hands full. The work of the current year is progressing nicely and we are encouraged. Our first quarterly conference was held last week and a gratifying advance over the same period of last year was noted. I am the only resident pastor in town now, so I have to look after the interests of the whole community; but I shall have help in a week or two. Our town mourns the loss of an honored and beloved citizen, who will be laid away to-morrow in Clinton. I shall conduct the services here in the Baptist Church, of which the deceased, Brother B. G. Hawkins, was a consistent member. He was broad-minded and liberal and was a power for good in the town. His passing away has brought sorrow into the hearts of a large connection and many friends.—M. F. Adams, P. C.

Seventh Avenue, Meridian.

Dear Dr. Meek: We have made a fine beginning for the new year here at Seventh Avenue, where we were kindly received by these good people upon our arrival on December 6, 1915. The Master is greatly blessing us in the various phases of Church work, which we are trying to carry successfully forward. A marked increase in the attendance upon preaching, the mid-week prayer meetings, and the Sunday school is discernible, and every one seems to be enthusiastic and optimistic. The Woman's Missionary Society held an open meeting here at the Wesley House on Monday afternoon, Feb. 7, 1916. A large crowd was present and a very helpful program was efficiently rendered. At the close of the service an opportunity to join the society was extended to those who were not already members of it, and nine new names were added to the membership roll. My people are expecting a good year, and I am happy in the love of Jesus.—Hilary Westbrook, P. C.

Oak Ridge, Miss.

Dear Advocate: Perhaps a few lines from me will not be amiss just now. I have had a peculiarly trying experience since Conference, but oh, how close and precious the Lord has been during all this time! I have not been able to move yet on account of the illness of my wife, but I have filled all the appointments but one since Jan. 1. I have had a quarterly meeting; have visited some of the members of each church on the charge and have enjoyed doing so very much. I expect to move about March 1, as my wife is improving. I want to say in this connection that I will be unable to help the brethren whom I promised to assist in meetings, so that they can take notice and make other arrangements. I regret my inability to serve them very much, but I think it best for me not to do so for two reasons, viz.: It will be so late before I can get moved and really begin the year's work, and I have such a ripe and fertile field of my own.

I find that I am the only Methodist preacher in Warren County, Miss., outside of Vicksburg, so I feel that I ought to concentrate my evangelistic and pastoral efforts entirely on my own work, and since God is still living and answers prayer, I am confidently expecting a year of victory. Amen!

I will certainly appreciate your prayers, brethren and sisters. Let's pray more for each other.—J. A. Wells.

A NOTE FROM A YOUNG FRIEND.

Dear Mr. Editor:

We are inclosing money for the renewal of our subscription to the dear Advocate. We can not stand to be without it in our home. My father is a local preacher and has been getting the Advocate for many years and we all take great interest in reading it. I am always delighted to read it, especially the "Home Circle Page." I think it is a fine paper, and wish it could go into every home. We all need to read good papers and good books and thus train our minds to high and noble thinking. The Bible is, of course, the best book that we could ever find to read and no one should neglect it. Let us all try to live better and do more for the Master this year than we did during the year past. It would be a great thing for us if at its close we could truthfully say, We have done the best we could.

With best wishes for the Advocate, I am our paper's true friend.

Vernon, La. ESTHER BANKS.

A NOTE FROM BROTHER SHIPMAN.

Dear Doctor: I am just in receipt of the February Bulletin of the Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which contains some mighty fine reading. I desire to call attention especially to the articles, "Not Before the Committee," and "The Ministry as a Life Work," by R. H. Bennett. I hope that all our undergraduates will read the one first-mentioned especially, and all of our preachers would do themselves a lasting benefit to read the latter, and pass it on. It should go into the hands of thousands of young men.

We had a great service here yesterday. The first Sunday is communion day, and it did my soul good to see so many partake of the Holy Sacrament. I am doing a great deal of from-house-to-house work just now. A prayer in a home makes a lasting impression on a child, and comforts the weary, tired mother amid her unending toils and cares, and brings the father and husband to church next Sunday, if anything will bring him. Our new presiding elder, Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, made a fine impression at our first quarterly conference. We are expecting more than the ordinary results from this year's work

W. S. SHIPMAN.

MILLSAPS MEMORIAL, JACKSON, MISS.

The Bishop said for "us" to come to Millsaps Memorial, and we came and found a fine field for work and one that really needs tilling. Our membership here is small, but for the most part is interested and willing to labor for the Master. The charge is made up of two churches—Millsaps Memorial and Flag's Chapel, an afternoon appointment. Our Sunday school at Millsaps Memorial seems to be taking on new life, and now has in process of organization a Teacher-training Class, a Wesley Adult Bible Class, and a Home Department. The Standard of Efficiency, and better, is our goal. Our Sunday school at Flag's Chapel is just being organized, but is starting well. Our Epworth League, though small in numbers, is one of the best in the land, and we are looking to the League for great things this year. Our congregations are very good and the interest seems to be growing. Our revival will start some time in the early spring, and we are looking forward to it in prayer, hoping that the church will graciously feel its effects and that others will be brought into the fold. Everything has opened up well and we are determined to bring up the very best report possible. Of course, our finances will be in full, but let us work and pray that our hearts may be fuller of God's sunshine and love.

A Genuine Rupture Cure
Sent On Trial To Prove It
Don't Wear A Truss Any Longer.

After Thirty Years' Experience I Have Produced An Appliance for Men, Women and Children That Actually Cures Rupture.

Are You Ruptured?

If so, the BROOKS APPLIANCE is made for You; You and all other Men, Women and Children who are sufferers from this annoying and dangerous trouble. That truss you have been wearing—one of many you have tried—chafed and irritated you and was worse than nothing. It had springs and pads and harness and straps and fixings galore and was continually getting out of shape—slipping down or working up and always needing attention. Then, there were salves and washes and ointments to make the case worse and harder to bear. I want to say that you will find none of these annoyances and vexations in the BROOKS APPLIANCE. At least they are reduced to a minimum. This APPLIANCE was made with a view to eliminate, to do away with, just such trouble. I would have been foolish to work half a lifetime, thinking out and perfecting a thing that had no advantage or was not better than scores of other inventions upon the market. In my APPLIANCE you will find the old objectionable features LEFT OUT. You will find it easy to wear. You will scarcely realize you are wearing it. There is no binding, drawing and slipping out of place. It does its work effectively and with comfort to the wearer. I want you to read my book, in which I have taken pains to give full particulars about it. Then, there are a few letters printed in it—selected at random from among hundreds written by men and women who have been cured. You can write these folks and see what they say. If I were you I would see to this matter without waiting. You can put off some things without running much risk, but a rupture is a dangerous proposition to neglect. A rupture is not only bad and serious of itself, but it leads to things infinitely worse. Fill out coupon and mail TO-DAY. To-morrow will do, but to-day is better.

Don't Make the Child Wear A Truss Through Life.

I Want to Reach the Parents of Every Ruptured Child in the Country.

The Truss is a Flesh Torturing Invention Fit Only As a Relic of Barbarity.

I want them to know about the Automatic Air Cushion Rupture Appliance that I make for children who are afflicted in this way.

The Brooks Appliance Cured His Rupture. Now He Is As Sound And Whole As If He Had Never Been Ruptured.

My appliance can be put on any child with prefect safety to the little one. For growing children there is nothing better to be had—no matter how much you pay—than my Appliance. I want the parents or others who may have children in their care to understand that there should be no delay in getting proper help for ruptured children.

Every day that the rupture is allowed to go on without the right means of correcting it—just so much harder will it be for the child to get rid of it.

No ruptured child can ever be free from the thought of the rupture and it is not fair to any child not to have an equal chance with other children. No matter what we may wish to think—ruptured children do not have an equal chance.

Thousands of men and women know that from their own experience with such trusses.

But it is not necessary for children to wear harsh, cumbersome, steel trusses any more.

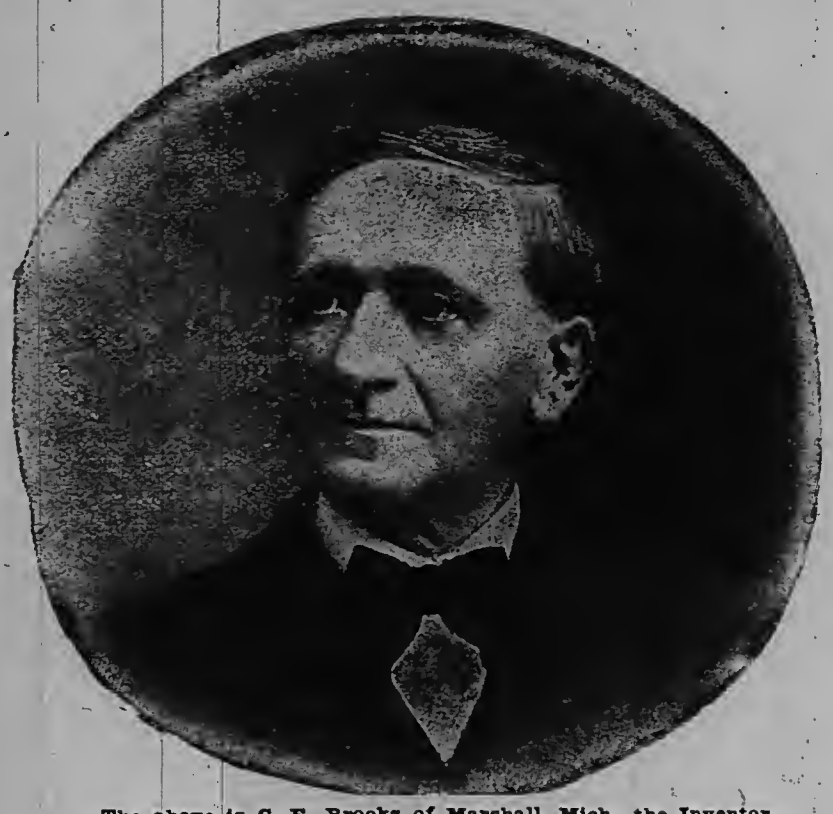
You may have had to wear something like this but don't make your child do it. Give the child something better.

My Appliance is better and I want to prove it to you.

I will make an Appliance to the child's measure, send it on TRIAL—put it into your hands to see and use and then you can say whether it is what I claim or not.

The Automatic Air Cushion conforms with every movement of the child; there is an even, gentle pressure which gradually binds the broken parts together—as you would bind a broken limb—and then no matter how much the child jumps, runs, rolls over or falls down—the pressure is kept up just the same—always drawing the parts together.

Write me to-day and get all the information—send the coupon.



The above is C. E. Brooks of Marshall, Mich., the Inventor, who has been curing rupture for over 30 years. If ruptured write him to-day.

If you have tried most everything else, come to me. Where others fail is where I have my greatest success. Send attached coupon to-day and I will send you free my illustrated book on rupture and its cure, showing my Appliance and giving you prices and names of many people who have tried it and were cured. It is instant relief when all others fail. Remember, I use no salves, no harness, no lies.

I send on trial to prove what I say is true. You are the judge and once having seen my illustrated book and read it you will be as enthusiastic as my hundreds of patients whose letters you may also read. Fill out free coupon below and mail to-day. It's well worth your time whether you try my appliance or not.

Others Failed But The Appliance Cured

C. E. Brooks,
Marshall, Mich.

Dear Sir:—

Your Appliance did all you claim for the little boy and more, for it cured him sound and well. We let him wear it for about a year in all, although it cured him 3 months after he had begun to wear it. We had tried several other remedies and got no relief, and I shall certainly recommend it to friends, for we surely owe it to you.

Yours respectfully,
WM. PATTERSON,
No. 717 S. Main St., Akron, O.

Pennsylvania Man Thankful

Mr. C. E. Brooks,
Marshall, Mich.

Dear Sir:—

Perhaps it will interest you to know that I have been ruptured six years and have always had trouble with it till I got your Appliance. It is very easy to wear, fits neat and snug, and is not in the way at any time, day or night. In fact, at times I did not know I had it on; it just adapted itself to the shape of the body and seemed to be a part of the body, as it clung to the spot, no matter what position I was in.

It would be a veritable God-send to the unfortunates who suffer from rupture if all could procure the Brooks Rupture Appliance and wear it. They would certainly never regret it.

My rupture is now all healed up and nothing ever did it but your Appliance. Whenever the opportunity presents itself I will say a good word for your Appliance, and also the honorable way in which you deal with ruptured people. It is a pleasure to recommend a good thing among your friends or strangers.

I am, Yours very sincerely,
JAMES A. BRITTON.
30 Spring St., Bethlehem, Pa.

REMEMBER

I send my Apliance on trial to prove what I say is true. You are to be the judge. Fill out free coupon below and mail to-day.

Ten Reasons Why

You Should Send For Brooks' Rupture Appliance.

1. It is absolutely the only Appliance of the kind on the market to-day, and in it are embodied the principles that inventors have sought after for years.
2. The Appliance for retaining the rupture cannot be thrown out of position.
3. Being an air cushion of soft rubber it clings closely to the body, yet never blisters or causes irritation.
4. Unlike the ordinary so-called pads, used in other trusses, it is not cumbersome or ungainly.
5. It is small, soft and pliable, and positively cannot be detected through the clothing.
6. The soft, pliable hands holding the Appliance do not give one the unpleasant sensation of wearing a harness.
7. There is nothing about it to get foul, and when it becomes soiled it can be washed without injuring it in the least.
8. There are no metal springs in the Appliance to torture one by cutting and bruising the flesh.
9. All of the material of which the Appliances are made is of the very best that money can buy, making it a durable and safe Appliance to wear.
10. My reputation for honesty and fair dealing is so thoroughly established by an experience of over thirty years of dealing with the public, and my prices are so reasonable, my terms so fair, that there certainly should be no hesitancy in sending free coupon to-day.

Cured at the Age of 76.

Mr. C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich.

Dear Sir:—

I began using your Appliance for the cure of rupture (I had a pretty bad case) I think in May, 1905. On November 20, 1905, I quit using it. Since that time I have not needed or used it. I am well of rupture and rank myself among those cured by the Brooks Discovery, which, considering my age, 76 years, I regard as remarkable.

Very sincerely yours,
SAM A. HOOVER.
High Point, N. C.

Child Cured In Four Months.

C. E. Brooks,

Dear Sir:—The baby's rupture is altogether cured, thanks to your appliance and we are so thankful to you. If we could only have known of it sooner our little boy would not have had to suffer near as much as he did. He wore your brace a little over four months and has not worn it now for six weeks.

Yours truly,
ANDREW EGGENBERGER.

Mr. C. E. Brooks.

Dear Sir:—I am glad to tell you that I am now sound and well and can plough or do any heavy work. I can say your Appliance has effected a permanent cure. Before getting your Appliance I was in a terrible condition and had given up all hope of ever being any better. If it hadn't been for your Appliance I would never have been cured. I am sixty-eight years old and served three years in Eckle's Artillery, Ogiethorpe Co. I hope God will reward you for the good you are doing for suffering humanity.

Yours sincerely,
H. D. BANKS.

SOME WORDS OF WARNING TO THE CHURCH.

Last fall, when at one of the Annual Conferences some question pertaining to Vanderbilt University arose and created somewhat of a flurry, a leading secular paper quoted one brother as having said: "The Vanderbilt issue is not dead, but only sleepeth." We did not then think that the gentleman referred to was correct, but we do now. The situation in the Church as it respects that renegade institution, in our opinion, lacks a great deal of being satisfactory. One of the Annual Conferences in Missouri, though according to the plan of the Educational Commission it was expected to do so and was so requested, refused to elect a trustee of Southern Methodist University, and we have been informed by men who ought to know that there is much pro-Vanderbilt sentiment in that State, and that it is being fostered and encouraged. The condition in Arkansas, despite the effort to gloss it over, is, according to reports that we believe to be dependable, worse than it is in Missouri. And indications that a quiet and guarded campaign is being conducted throughout the connection by the pro-Vanderbilt men are all too plentiful. What was the significance of the statement recently appearing in the Vanderbilt Quarterly, which was declared to be for the benefit of "the friends of the University within the Church," and which so ingeniously and so unfairly sought to discredit the Educational Commission before the public? True, it was stated therein that all hope of relating the Vanderbilt Biblical Department to the Church had passed, but nothing was said of the final settlement of the issue as a whole; and even if there had been, it would have amounted to little, for, if there is any one lesson that has been plainly taught by past occurrences, it is that the Vanderbilt authorities can not be trusted.

Nor does the suggestive statement mentioned above by any means stand alone. A distinguished connectional officer was quoted as having publicly stated at a late Annual Conference that a movement was under way to recover Vanderbilt University for the Church. What sort of a movement did the gentleman have in mind? Another brother holding an important connectional position is known to have submitted to a band of brethren whom he had assembled for that purpose a lengthy document (to be used in connection with certain Annual Conferences) in which the Educational Commission was severely arraigned for its action at Memphis in February, 1914, and in which it was held that the question of the relation of the Church to Vanderbilt University is still an open one. We quote from that extended paper a single statement, as follows:

"Since the Commission has not carried out the directions of the General Conference concerning the (Vanderbilt) University, the status of the relation of the University to the Church is precisely what it was when the General Conference convened in Oklahoma City in May, 1914. The interests of the patronizing Conferences in the University remain, and are held, as they have been since 1898, through the General Conference."

This is the deliberate utterance of a man who is so situated that he can perhaps exercise more influence toward reviving the Vanderbilt controversy and tying the Church on to that disgraced institution than any other individual in Southern Methodism. Nor, is this yet all. The attorney who chiefly led the fight for the Vanderbilt sympathizers at the last General Conference is known to have recently stated that the contest is not yet over. And a discerning friend of ours who has been so circumstanced that he has had an opportunity to know what is going on wrote us a few days since that we need have no doubt that things are being made ready for another battle before the General Conference. We could adduce more evidence to support this view, but this is enough for the present.

What is the loyal element in the Church doing to meet this surreptitious campaign and this menacing situation? Those composing it seem to be largely blind to the intrigue and manipulations that are being resorted to, and, for the most part, they are sitting down and nursing the unwarranted delusion that the issue has been finally and forever disposed of and can never be raised again. And, furthermore, they seem to be under that strange and widespread hallucination that universities can be built by talk and Conference resolutions, and are pursuing the same old "do nothing" policy that had not a little to do with making possible the loss of Vanderbilt University.

We are now going to make some very plain statements, which are not pleasant to contemplate, but which we think are called for by the exigencies of the situation. In carrying forward the work of establishing and equipping our two new Universities, Texas has done well; Atlanta has done nobly; Mr. Asa Candler has written his name imperishably in the history of Southern Methodism as a true and generous-hearted philanthropist, and a few others have given liberally. But what has the Church at large done? What have the hundreds of thousands of Methodists east of the Mississippi River done? All told, their entire contributions have amounted to something like the pitiful sum of $60,000.

In view of the extraordinary circumstances existing, the apparent unconcern that has been shown toward our new and absolutely indispensable larger educational enterprises is nothing short of ASTOUNDING. Outside of Bishop Candler, who has been staggering under the tremendous burden which the Church has imposed upon him and putting his very life-blood into the task of trying to save our educational work, and two or three others, even our Bishops have done very little toward laying this cause appealingly upon the hearts of our people and raising money to help it along. The Report of the Educational Commission concerning its work, for instance, was not so much as even read at some of the recent Annual Conference sessions. The Mississippi Conference, though one of the strong Conferences of the Church, has given very little to Emory University; and if a single dollar has been paid or subscribed (except the Editor's small subscription) from within the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference we have not heard of it. And if we are correctly informed, most of the other Conferences east of the Mississippi River (three or four perhaps should be excepted) have made records similar to these.

But while the Church is trifling with this great work—by far the most important that she has before her—what are the authorities of Vanderbilt University doing? They have lately announced that they have secured a ROUND MILLION DOLLARS for their Academic Department. And there is, in our opinion, a potential menace in that million dollars. Unless the Church should become so aroused that obviously it would be useless to put it forward, the Vanderbilt issue may be expected to be aggressively before our approaching General Conference. There is absolutely no hope of further successful litigation to strengthen the hold and power of the Church in that institution—the pro-Vanderbilt leaders know this as well as any one. Their real purpose is to make the Church accept the shadowy and merely nominal relation that the Court left her in the University, dressed up with a little additional formal pretense, to make it appear like something of consequence. And their tactics to accomplish this result may be counted upon to be disingenuous and adroit. They will probably consist of a carefully perfected antecedent organization; of a severe arraignment of the work of the Educational Commission; of much talk about the value of what we have remaining in the University, and much noise about "fighting further" (the same old slogan that we had at Oklahoma City), with a lot of small lawyers on hand to fulminate about what they could do in court. And the wealth and magnificent equipment of Vanderbilt University will be paraded to dazzle and allure, while the resources of our new Universities will probably be belittled; and possibly we may hear a good deal, as a kind of cross current, about Southern Methodism urgently needing all three institutions. Mr. Carnegie's million given to the Vanderbilt Medical Department figured largely in the battle before the courts three years ago, and many think that it was the determining influence in the decision reached. What weight will this new million carry when it is thrown into the scale, as we prophesy it will be?

We give it as our conviction that if the Church is to escape a ruinous alignment with Vanderbilt University, thoroughly secularized as it now is, the men who believe that the Church should own and control her schools must wake thoroughly up and see that none but persons who are true to this vital principle are placed where they can be influential in the final settlement of this vexatious issue. They must take nothing for granted; they must know absolutely that the agents empowered to act for them can be depended upon to the last limit. And our Bishops, presiding elders, preachers, and people must lay themselves out in the work of placing our schools at Atlanta and Dallas upon a safe and respectable basis. No other task now before the Church is so imperatively urgent as this. And we believe that if there is any one assessment upon the Church that ought at this critical time to be promptly paid in full, it is that imposed for education, from which must largely come the funds to train our young ministers at our two new connectional theological schools.

We cannot afford to dawdle about this matter any longer. To do so is to incur the most serious peril. One of the foremost leaders and educators in Southern Methodism, a man of far-reaching insight and who is given to weighing carefully his utterances, has recently said to us: "It seems that the time has come when the membership of the Church as a whole must wake up, or else flatly say that they want the Vanderbilt crowd to control and are prepared to surrender to the secularists. Local enterprises, of course, plead for consideration; but if we fail in our larger educational enterprises, the local enterprises will go down under the common shame and ruin." Pregnant with truth and warning are these earnest words. No small institution can save the Church in this crucial hour. If Vanderbilt University is fastened upon us, to be the heart and center of our educational system, the withering blight of secularism will from it reach outward and downward to every other college and even training school. The tremendous issue before us is, Shall the Church have her youth instructed in institutions which she owns and controls and which she can make thoroughly Christian? or shall this be done in institutions which are governed by others, which have been secularized and Carnegiezed, and the teaching and character of which she is impotent to determine? And the outcome of this momentous issue is indissolubly bound up with the success or failure of Emory University, at Atlanta, and the Southern Methodist University, at Dallas. They alone can rescue us from the subtle and imminent danger which surrounds us, for so long as we are without schools of the highest grade the way will be open for Vanderbilters and their sympathizers in the Church to keep up a contention and make an appealing bid for our patronage, which they are so reluctant to give up.

How will the more than 2,000,000 Methodists of the South meet this grave crisis? The next two years will in all probability decisively answer this question. Hitherto we have been pleading the prevailing war conditions as an excuse for our inactivity; but that will avail no longer, for the South is now universally admitted to be in a fairly prosperous condition. Shall we not, from our loyal chief pastors down to the humblest layman, shake off our lethargy, rally to the support of this most vital and pivotal cause, and see that our two Universities are so equipped two years hence that none can sneer at them? It was flung in our faces in the course of the fight for the control of Vanderbilt that the Church could not build and maintain a university—that any school owned and operated by her could never be anything but a poor little Methodist institution. Shall we fulfill that scornful prophecy? The swiftly passing days will soon tell. May God help us, each and all, to rise to the full measure of our duty and opportunity in this fateful hour!

OPEN DOORS FOR ALL.

There are open doors to service before every man, but many are blind and do not see them. All may accomplish something for the Master if they only will. It is the near-by opportunity that is oftenest overlooked.

ANCHORED TO THE INFINITE.

The builder who first bridged Niagara's gorge,
Before he swung his cable shore to shore,
Sent out across the gulf his returning kite
Bearing a slender cord for unseen hands
To grasp upon the farther cliff and draw
A greater cord, and then a greater yet
Till at last across the chasm swung
The cable—then the mighty bridge in air!

So we may send our little timid thought
Across the void, out to God's reaching hands.
Send out our love and faith to thread the deep.
Thought after thought, until the little cord
Has greatened to a chain no chance can break.
And—we are anchored to the Infinite!

—Edwin Markham.

JENNY LIND'S REPLY.

The Swedish Nightingale, Jenny Lind, won great success as an operatic singer, and money poured into her purse. Yet she left the stage when singing her best and never went back to it. She must have missed the money, the fame and the applause of thousands, but she was content to live in privacy.

Once an English friend found her sitting on the steps of a bathing machine on the sea sands, with a Lutheran Bible on her knee, looking out into the glory of a sunset. They talked and the conversation drew near to the inevitable question, "O, Madame Goldschmidt, how is it that you ever came to abandon the stage at the very height of your success!"

"When, every day," was the quiet answer, "it made me think less of this (laying a finger on the Bible) and nothing at all of that (pointing to the sunset), what else could I do?"—New York Christian Advocate.

WHAT TO LOOK AT.

All sorts of troubles and difficulties are standing right around you. That is the meaning of "circumstances:" things that stand round us. And it is enough to take the heart out of almost any man to look at his circumstances. Dr. Griffith Thomas, in reminding us of these truths in the lesson last year on Elijah's temporary breakdown in faith, pointed out that, after Jezebel had threatened Elijah's life, it was when he saw that that he began to go to pieces. The trouble was that he was just then seeing that threat instead of seeing God. Our circumstances ought not to have our chief attention. Dr. Thomas mentions, in that connection, the very striking meaning of the Hebrew shown by the margin of Isaiah 41:10, where God is piling up his blessed and inviolable assurances of his omnipotent caring for Israel: "Fear thou not, for I am with thee: look not around thee, for I am thy God." The worst circumstances in the world melt into impotent nothingness when in faith we look at God.—Sunday School Times.

ONE SURE HOPE.

They whose hopes are set on God have a certain hope, a sufficient one, and one that fills all the future. All other expectations are fulfilled, or disappointed, as the case may be, but are left behind and outgrown. This one only never palls, and is never accomplished, and yet is never disappointed. So if we set our hopes on Him, we can face very quietly the darkness that lies ahead of us. Earthly hopes are only the mirrors in which the past reflects itself, as in some king's palace you will find a lighted chamber, with a great sheet of glass at each end, which perpetuates in shining rows the lights behind the spectator. A curtain veils the future, and earthly hope can only put a mirror in front of it that reflects what has been. But the hope that is set on God draws back the curtain and lets us see enough of a fixed, eternal future to make our lives bright and our hearts calm. The darkness remains; what of that, if "I know I shall not drift beyond his love and care?" Set your hopes on God, and they will not be ashamed.—Alexander Maclaren, D. D.

AN INTERESTING COMMUNICATION.

Through the kindness of Rev. C. A. Battle, pastor of the First M. E. Church, South, of Baton Rouge, La., we recently had the privilege of examining a remarkably interesting article from the pen of Dr. William Winans, a copy of which he sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication in October, 1854, when Bishop H. N. McTyeire was its editor. The production, which is of considerable length, is in Dr. Winans' own handwriting and is in a fine state of preservation. It evinces throughout the remarkable accuracy and force for which he was noted, and which made him so formidable as a controversialist and debater. This piece of composition is in the custody of Colonel I. H. Wall, of Baton Rouge, a grandson of the distinguished author, who prizes it very highly. A paper so valuable historically ought by all means to be carefully preserved.

The files of the Advocate of 1854 show that Dr. Winans' communication was printed in the issue of October 28 of that year. As a part of it deals with matters of historical interest, we take pleasure in reproducing some of its paragraphs:

"Mr. Editor: Your correspondent, John Bunyan, would write well had he an accurate knowledge of the facts he professes to record. But, alas! in this somewhat important particular he is most lamentably deficient. In his two articles published in your paper under the dates Sept. 9 and Oct. 7 there are more inaccuracies than I remember ever to have seen within the same limits. It may not be of much importance to correct these inaccuracies; yet every reader prefers to understand the true state of facts in any narrative which he considers worthy of his attention. Being well informed in regard to the matters concerned in most of these misstatements and being, it may be, the only living man who can correct them on personal knowledge in regard to them it may not be improper that I should do it.

"John Bunyan is in error in characterizing Tobias Gibson. He never settled in the neighborhood of Natchez, nor in Claibrone or Warren County. He was an itinerant Methodist preacher, never married, and was, to the last of life, without a home. I suppose that this error arose from confounding Tobias with Randal Gibson; the latter of whom was a local preacher and lived first near Natchez, then in the upper part of Jefferson County, near the line of Claiborne, and, finally, in Warren County, where he died in a good old age. With regard to him, John Bunyan is in error when he represents him as the "earliest of the pioneer preachers in Mississippi." He was not a preacher, nor even a professor of religion, when Tobias Gibson came to Mississippi as a preacher; but he was a member of the first Methodist society founded in Mississippi, and not long after his accession to the Church he became a preacher, and continued a useful one to near the close of life, when the infirmities of age disqualified him for ministerial labors. He is none too highly eulogized by John Bunyan.

"The next error of this writer which I shall correct regards the camp-meeting in the Foster Settlement. His memory is strangely at fault concerning this meeting, as neither Tobias Gibson, Niles Harper, nor Thomas Griffin was there, and as I was not very recently from Indiana, it having been nearly five years since I came to Mississippi, when I first attended a camp-meeting in this neighborhood. I do not depend upon my memory in regard to these matters, but upon memoranda put down at the time, about which I can be under no mistake. To the ludicrous description of my personal appearance and dress at that time I am certainly not disposed to make any objection. So many have written of me in the same way that the description must, I suppose, be considered accurate; though about the coarse boots I think there must be a mistake, as I believe that before that time I had discontinued the use of boots, whether coarse or fine, altogether; but this is a matter of no consequence. The encomiums with which this ludicrous description is compensated

I find it more difficult to digest. But it is too much to expect poor humanity to repudiate even undeserved praise; so I shall no further indulge in egotism, which I know is seldom tolerable.

"At the time of this camp-meeting Harper and Griffin were not brothers-in-law, though they became so several years afterwards; nor till after the year 1818 were they at all in the habit of "hunting in couples"—they were very seldom together. J. Bunyan's description of these two ministers of the Gospel renders it evident that he had contemplated them attentively and with discrimination. He, however, does not, as I think, represent Harper correctly, when he ascribes to him a severe aspect and frequent frowns. My recollection of him, on the contrary, is that his aspect was kindly and that a smile was much more frequent with him than a frown. I was surprised that this writer had not received information of the death of Griffin, which took place two or three years since.

"The next error I shall notice, into which John Bunyan has fallen, is in regard to the "first Conference that ever assembled in Mississippi." It was not held, as he affirms, "at Washington;" nor was "Bishop McKendree presiding Bishop." The first Conference that assembled in Mississippi was holden in the house of William Foster, on Pine Ridge; and the Bishop who presided on that occasion was Bishop Robert R. Roberts. It was not only the first Mississippi Conference, but I believe it was the first Conference in which Bishop Roberts presided. The territory occupied by the Conference, then assembled, extended from Fort Steven, in Alabama, to Quelqueckoes, in Louisiana, and from N. Orleans to the line between Mississippi and Chanta Indians. The number of members of which that Conference was composed was, I believe, eight. The Bishop, these members, and at least one who did not belong to the body ate and slept in Mr. Foster's hospitable mansion, and the Conference held its sittings in an upper room of the same. The public services of the Conference were performed in the Presbyterian Church of the neighborhood, except that on the Sabbath the Bishop preached under some trees near the Church. He was one of the most interesting preachers it has been my privilege to hear. This Conference assembled in 1816. Bishop McKendree never, I think, presided in a Conference held at Washington. John Bunyan must have heard him elsewhere; or on some other than Conference occasion; or he must have mistaken some other Bishop—Enoch George, perhaps—for Bishop McKendree. George presided in a Conference held in Washington in 1819, and was a good, a very good preacher, and quite as likely to have preached such a sermon as that described, as Bishop McKendree."

Bishop McTyeire appended to Dr. Winans' contribution a brief statement, from which we take the following: "The matter of Randal and Tobias Gibson was corrected by our interesting correspondent, John Bunyan, in a note dated October 10, and published in the Advocate of October 14. As to the Bishop, he was not so certain afterwards, and in a private note to us referred to a possible correction. We are glad, as he will be, that one so well posted as Dr. W. should do it. The truth of history is never unimportant."

Some of our readers may perhaps be interested to see the description of Dr. Winans by Mr. Bunyan, upon which the former comments in the portion of his article that we have quoted. It was as follows:

"The first camp-meeting I ever attended was in the Foster settlement, Adams County, and the preachers I remember are Tobias Gibson, Miles Harper, Thomas Griffin, and William Winans. The latter was then recently from Indiana—a tall, thin, raw-boned and awkward young man—arrayed in homespun pants, with a long, brown, straight-breasted coat, no neck handkerchief, and a coarse pair of boots. There was nothing prepossessing about him, and nothing to remark but his small, burning eyes that glowed like coals of fire. His manner was then, as it is now, slow, deliberative, self-possessed; but the first sentence he uttered arrested the attention of the audience, and told that he was no ordinary man. He has since become one of the most eminent divines of the age; as a logician without a peer; as a preacher speaking with the spirit and power of an evangelist of old. On a future occasion I will send you an elaborate portraiture of this venerable friend and guardian of my boyhood."

REV. G. W. BACHMAN.

Rev. George Washington Bachman, son of Henry and Elizabeth Bachman, was born in Carroll County, Miss., on July 11, 1839, and passed to his heavenly reward from his home in Winona, Miss., on Jan. 25, 1916. In his early childhood, his parents removed to Calhoun County, Miss., and located near Sarepta, where he grew to manhood. At the age of fifteen he was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He was licensed to preach at Pittsboro, Miss., March 31, 1860, and joined the Memphis Conference in November of that year at Aberdeen, Miss. He was received into full connection at Grenada in 1862; ordained deacon at Aberdeen by Bishop Andrew in 1863, and elder by Bishop Paine in 1861. On Jan. 5, 1865, he was married to Miss Parilee Nichols, who died Nov. 19 of the same year, leaving an infant son, See, who still lives. Miss Eugene Susan Mitchell became his bride in November, 1866, dying in 1906. Of this union were born three sons and a daughter, who still survive. The home life and devotion of the members of the family were beautiful to the last.

The first appointment of Brother Bachman was to LaGrange Circuit as Junior Preacher with J. N. Temple. This circuit contained sixteen preaching places and gave the young minister a fine introduction to the traveling connection. The next two years found him traversing the wilds of the Mississippi Delta, threading canebrakes and fording bayous to reach the frontier settlements and carry them the gospel from his headquarters, one year at Concordia (now Gunnison), the other at Friar's Point. The next five years were spent as follows: At Richland (2), Charleston (1), Harmony (2), while he was in Tennessee territory at Rock Springs (1869), and Purdy (1870). In the latter year the North Mississippi Conference was organized and he became a charter member, responding to its roll-call to the end of his life. In this Conference he served the following circuits: Attala (2), Banner (3), Grenada (2), Richland (2), Zilpha (1), Chester (1), and Lobutcha (3).

In 1885 he entered upon a thirty-year tour as colporter, distributing Bibles for the American Bible Society the first year, adding general literature for the next three, and then for fifteen years emphasizing the sale of Sunday school literature and organizing Sunday schools in new fields under a contract with the Conference Sunday School Board. In three decades of this type of service he went into hundreds of communities and thousands of homes. In almost every home he learned the names of the children, discovered family connections, found out former places of residence and gathered bits of personal history. So well did he remember all these that it is probable he knew more people in Mississippi than any other person in the State. When meeting children or grandchildren of his old-time friends, he rarely failed to inquire affectionately as to their welfare. He was a welcome and beloved guest in a multitude of homes.

His school-days were limited to "eighteen months in the common schools." He was, however, a close observer, a constant reader, and a man of uncommonly good memory. It is likely that he read practically every book and periodical issued from the publishing house of his Church for the past forty years. He also kept on his desk the leading periodicals of other Churches and read largely from the religious press in general. He spoke and wrote excellent English, putting to shame the slovenly work of some modern college graduates. He was thoroughly conversant with Methodist doctrine and polity and was doubtless the best informed man in his Conference on Church history.

Like many of the older preachers, he was a great singer, leading the music when organs and choirs were unknown in rural Mississippi. He well knew the standard tunes, could "read his notes," and was an excellent judge of hymns, having a fair knowledge of hymnology. He was much interested in education, rarely failing to attend the opening and closing of the sessions of his Conference schools. He openly and frankly, yet modestly and kindly opposed the admission of young men into the Conference who were unprepared for its grave responsibilities, urging them to get ready for the work.

No man in his Conference took a larger interest than he in the collection and preservation of historical data. His long ministry and unceasing travels brought him in touch with many original sources and he has conserved for the future historian much that is of rich value. He was an active member of the Mississippi Historical Association and served for a time as Vice President of that body for his Conference. He prepared and published several papers concerning important events in the Church life of the early days in this territory. He was for two years editor of the Conference Minutes, doing his work well.

Brother Bachman was a plain, practical preacher, careful in his study of the Word and sound and faithful in his exposition. If he failed to reach heights sublime, he at least kept far above the absurd and foolish. An intelligent gentleman who knew him well for forty years said of him: "I never heard him say a foolish thing." He was not emotional, but could be profoundly stirred by great preaching. In prayer, he was earnest, fervent, effectual, often adding much force to the sermon of his pastor by his prayer at its close.

For fifty and six years he went in and out as a minister in North Mississippi, faithful, diligent, upright. No shadow rests upon his good name. It was my privilege to stand at his bedside when twilight was gathering at the close of life's long day. He inquired tenderly of his brethren, of the work of the Church, reviewed some events of the past, and sent this farewell message: "All is well!" There was "no moaning at the bar when he put out to sea." In many a circle there is a vacant chair because of his going.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Great progress has been made during the past year in the work of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference, which is now holding its annual meeting at Clarksdale. An aggressive Organization and Membership Campaign has been carried on under the leadership of the Conference President, Mrs. Vic Thompson Hoyle, which has resulted in the organization of 81 new societies, with a large increase in membership. The total receipts for the past year were $21,517.47, which is $1700 more than the receipts for 1914. Of this amount $10,191.98 was disbursed within the bounds of our Conference, while $11,352.49 passed into the hands of our Connell Treasurer at Nashville. During 1914 our organization contributed $1000 to the Methodist Hospital in Memphis, and $300 to the Sailors' Rest at Gulfport. Great enthusiasm prevails in the Greenville District, under the leadership of Mrs. Elizabeth Clark, while Clarksdale is extending a royal welcome to the 150 or more delegates now assembled within her gates. John O. Rockefeller, Sr., recently gave through the Rockefeller Foundation $22,800 for defraying the expenses of an investigation concerning the care taken of the inmates of insane asylums. It is the common opinion that, while our insane are generally fairly well fed, clothed, and sheltered by those in charge of the institutions in which they are placed, they do not always receive the kind and sympathetic treatment that they should. This belief, so far as State institutions are concerned, is firmly fixed in the minds of the people. The Rockefeller investigation will cover sixteen States this year. If the evils which are found to exist are corrected by the authorities in charge of the condemned institutions, much good ought to result from this movement which the Foundation has set in motion.

REV. J. F. WYNN EIGHTY YEARS OLD.

Rev. J. F. Wynn, of Crowley, La., celebrated his eightieth birthday on Feb. 10th. He is hale and hearty and very active for a man of his advanced years. Among his daily duties are ministering to the poor and distressed, irrespective of creed or faith, who reside near his modest home. The Roman Catholics and the Jews are glad to have the benediction of his presence and prayers, and count it an honor to claim him as their friend.

For years Brother Wynn has assisted the pastor of First Church, Crowley, in the public administration of the Sacrament and the baptism of Infants. No service seems complete without the inspiration of his presence.

Brother Wynn has been signally blessed in his domestic life. He has enjoyed fifty-three years of conjugal felicity with his true help-meet, the princess of the parsonage. Moreover, the sons and daughters of the union have all been blessed in useful lives. They are: Rev. R. H. Wynn, D.D., President of Centenary College, Shreveport; Mr. Joseph W. Wynn, rice merchant, Rayne, La.; Miss Alice Wynn, teacher in the City schools of New Orleans; Miss Mary Wynn, teacher in City schools of Crowley, La.; Mrs. E. D. Wall, of Baton Rouge, and Mrs. H. W. Rickey, wife of the Rev. Mr. Rickey, Huntsville, Ala.

As a token of their deep appreciation of Brother Wynn, his friends in Crowley presented him with a beautiful ivory-silver handled umbrella on the occasion of his anniversity.

CARROLLTON AVENUE BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION.

On Friday, the 18th of February, the 30th anniversary of Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church was celebrated. A large congregation gathered in the old Church building, now used for Sunday school and Epworth League work, and a most excellent program of music and speeches was rendered. Mr. A. H. Ahten, who conducted a Sunday school in that section of the city some ten years prior to the organization of the Church, gave a most delightful account of the early days of the congregation. He was followed by Mr. J. C. Westerfield, who served the Church in every possible way except as preacher in charge. Dr. F. R. Hill, Jr., told of the part taken by the Rayne Memorial congregation under the pastorate of Dr. Beverly Carradine. The Rayne Memorial members bought the lot on which the Carrollton Avenue Church was built. Miss Bently told of the memories that linger with the congregation of those who formed the membership at the beginning of the Church's organization. Miss Ella Jamieson read a poem that she, by request, had written for the occasion. Mr. Carter, the Sunday School Superintendent, and Mr. C. O. Chalmers, the lay leader of the Church, spoke of the future of the congregation. After a birthday offering of $28.50 had been made, delicious refreshments were served.

"Hernando De Soto" Walter Malone's Masterpiece. The Only Epic Poem Ever Written by an American. No Southern Man Should Fail to Read It. A Truly Great Production.

Some Comments upon it.

J. T. BOWEN
Tampa, Florida

"I have read it (Hernando De Soto) once and am reading it the second time. It is surely a classic and richly deserves to be numbered among the gems of English literature."

From
THE COMMERCIAL-APPEAL
Memphis, Tennessee.

"All in the king's blue and gold, as befits a poem in which the muse of history works hand in hand with the bright spirits of romance and adventure, comes Walter Malone's new poem, 'Hernando De Soto,' fresh from the press of G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.

"This is by no means Judge Malone's first adventure into the field of poetry, nine other volumes already standing to his credit on the shelves of well-chosen libraries. But those others were books of short poems, songs, sonnets, and lyrics. One of them on 'Opportunity' has carried the writer's name around the globe, and is more frequently quoted in the metropolitan press than any other poem ever written by a Southerner."

"'Hernando De Soto,' however, is built on different lines. The poem, as its name proclaims, is the story of the life, the adventures and discoveries of Hernando De Soto, the Spanish explorer, who was the first white man to traverse the States that lie between what is now Florida and Oklahoma—the first white man to discover the matchless Mississippi River.

"When Walter Malone undertook to blend all of this into an epic that would be at the same time reliable history, he set himself to a stupendous task. How well he has done this you must read the poem, supplemented by the carefully compiled notes, to understand.

"Unquestionably he has done a great work for history in recording and illuminating this epic of the long ago."

This volume may be had of E. H. Clark & Bro., or A. R. Taylor & Co., both South Main Street, Memphis, Tenn. The price is $3, net.

"PEACE AT ANY PRICE."

Dear Dr. Mees: It might have been more flattering to one's self-esteem to see a champion from the "purple sage" riding into the lists, but the unknown to meet anent who sounds his scornful summons through your columns this week shall not pass unheeded. But before I proceed let it be noted that despite his vaunted defense of peace, Rev. John W. Ramsey straightway stirs up a broil with me, also that the religion of which he is an exemplar seems not to have penetrated the militant armor of his own heart and accomplished its perfect work in his case at least—he might realize his hope by joining the Quakers. And I have found myself wondering if Brother Ramsey could be one of these "Kingdom of God" fellows who care little for the Church, but whose chief business it seems to be to denounce and discredit her, who think to usher in the kingdom by pouring a pint of thin soup into some poor devil and then save his soul with a package of cigarettes and a ticket to the movies. I wonder! Also note that Brother Ramsey, though asserting that all questions have more sides than one, falls into the ditch into which he has pitched me by arguing that his side is the only side there is.

I know of no law, either of the United States or of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, that cancels the right of protest, and in the brief article complained of, I was exercising that right, as I shall continue to do on all proper occasions. The form of words employed by me in uttering my protest may have been inelegant, measured by the best literary standards, but I still think that ambiguity is the least of its faults, and I feel under no obligation to furnish Brother Ramsey a diagram. I did not intimate that any one stood in "peril" by disregarding my protest. I sincerely regret that no one does. But if it should happen that a more far-reaching voice than mine should stir the Church to a realization of her peril under the leadership of the pacificists it is not difficult to imagine the fate that awaits these mischief-makers.

I was unaware of any excessive dogmatism in anything I had to say; nor can I now discover any. But I am frank to confess my admiration for men like Brother Ramsey who apply their powers to a subject, and who, having reached a conclusion, roundly affirm it. The mind given to generalization and tentative opinions does not challenge my respect. But when it comes to dogmatism, what shall be said of this example which falls from the pen of Brother Ramsey?

"There never was a time in the history of this country when there was less need for preparation for war, as I see it; for the present war will bring such a state of bankruptcy to the European nations that they will not be able, for more than a hundred years to come, to go to war against the inhabitants of an isolated island of the sea."

And this assertion is made in the teeth of the solemn warning from the responsible head of the republic that we stand in grave and instant peril, to say nothing of overwhelming testimony from a multitude of respectable sources.

If I have not misread the history of Mississippi and utterly mistaken the spirit of her sons now living, she will respond gloriously to the appeal to prepare herself to defend the honor and liberties of the nation. But Brother Ramsey is not going to draw me into a discussion of the duello. If he thinks we shall be returning to that custom, then let him think so. His position reminds one of the individual whose wife reported to him that while she was on the streets a man slapped her, whereupon the chivalrous husband replied: "If you had not been on the street, my dear, you would not have been slapped."

Brother Ramsey dogmatizes again in what he has to say about The Voice and the North American Review. Perhaps he will allow me to "repudiate" what he has to say thereanent. The North American Review is one of the most respectable periodicals published in America, if not in the world, but if it were a purely pagan publication that would not affect any statement of fact it might make. Brother Ramsey cannot repudiate the quotation I made from it, for it states a fact of universal knowledge. But I will give him a Christian authority. A few weeks since I read one of those characteristically illuminating letters of travel from Bishop Hoss in which he was describing Peking and discussing the humiliations that have been put upon China by Christian nations. He attributed her pitiful plight to military unpreparedness and remarked that he did not suppose the ultra-pacificists would agree with him. Will Brother Ramsey repudiate Bishop Hoss, whose shoe-latchets neither he nor I are worthy to loosen? That great man's daily life is an example for the most saintly Christian.

However I may have written, it did not occur to me that the Editor of The Voice stands alone in any particular. As a matter of fact, I thought The Voice was the composite expression of the company of bureaucrats who seem more concerned to promote everything else than the great Church from which they draw their life-blood and which they are supposed to represent. What right, may I ask, has The Voice, the organ of our Board of Missions, to be carrying on a propaganda in opposition to a great governmental policy of the United States? The law of the Church requires quite a different course of conduct.

There has been an immense amount of loose talking and writing on the subject of peace. It is quite true that the angels sang of peace when Christ was born, but did he call himself the "Prince of Peace?" He distinctly affirmed that he came not to bring peace but a sword. And he kept his word, for the sword has been flashing ever since. I imagine that what he desired was a righteous peace—not peace at any price. The Christian religion does not demand that its votaries shall be weaklings—mollycoddles. But I may be told that the above-mentioned utterance was made in a Pickwickian sense.

I suppose Brother Ramsey would favor passing St. Paul, the greatest missionary of all time, through purgatorial flames to singe him a bit for having fastened upon our Christian vocabulary the martial statement: "I have fought a good fight." But if he is of the same type as those whose cause he espouses he may tell me that Paul said no such thing, that it is a crude mistranslation; that what he really said was: "I have planted a good peace," or that it is simply a gloss of some copyist who wished to add a rhetorical flourish to the old gentleman's utterance. Thus the triumphant note of the great Apostle to the Gentiles will pass into the limbo of myths along with Adam, Abraham, Noah, Job, Isaiah, and others.

If war is such an unmixed evil as Brother Ramsey would have us suppose, and so utterly incompatable with Christianity, will he kindly tell us what would have become of Christianity if Charles Martel had not beaten the Moslems at Tours, when they were about to overrun all Europe? And I venture to suggest that the brother ought to quit preaching on Caleb, the optimistic spy, who, after having, with others, inspected the land, said: "We are able to overcome it," thus leading the way to its conquest by vanquishing its inhabitants.

It occurs to me that Brother Ramsey and the gentlemen managing The Voice might learn a valuable lesson by re-reading Methodist history. Do they not know that about the greatest mistake John Wesley ever made was when he sought to interfere as a "pacifist" in the controversy between the oppressed Colonists and the English Government, and that, but for the splendid patriotism and common sense of Francis Asbury, there is scarcely a doubt that American Methodism would have been completely wrecked? Why should a few Church leaders, whose information as to the dangers and military needs of the country is necessarily quite limited, repeat Wesley's mistake of butting into politics by undertaking to interfere with the great governmental policies formulated by Christian statesmen who are so situated that they understand fully the grave conditions and perils that require to be guarded against?

Some of the things that have recently been done in this country by the "pacifists" have been positively humiliating. Think of men going all over the country trying to pledge citizens in advance not to respond to the call for military service if the nation should become involved in war! Such reprehensible disloyalty certainly can not shelter itself under the teachings of the Man of Galilee, who taught that men should "render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's." But we are happy to believe that a large majority of the Christian ministers of the United States do not stand for such a type of "pacifism" as The Voice represents. The Continent, the great Presbyterian weekly of Chicago, recently polled the Presbyterian preachers in the territory in which it principally circulates as to the President's policy of "preparedness" and found an overwhelming percentage of them heartily in favor of it.

Let Brother Ramsey be well assured that neither his puny voice, nor that other Voice of which his is but an echo, nor the "respectable number" of voices with which he seeks to crush me, will suffice to halt for a single moment the movement for preparedness which is sweeping over the Nation. Patriotism might well be a Christian virtue, and palsied be the hand that would seek to tarnish the glory of the Christian knights whose patriotic ardor and devotion illumine every page of the history of the Christian era.

If Brother Ramsey and I are so fortunate as to get to heaven, though I am aware that blissful abode is rapidly taking its place among the myths of tradition, he may be abashed at the sight of the dancing plumes of Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson close about the throne, while we dwell in the outskirts of the Kingdom.

Greenville, Miss. J. D. BARBEE.

The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago has 1536 students, all of whom are undergoing training for Christian work and evangelism. Of these 1186 are in the regular day and evening classes, and 350 are taking correspondence courses. Some are studying Sunday school methods, some are preparing to be foreign missionaries, but the great majority of them are endeavoring to equip themselves to be effective evangelists, that they may reach and save lost souls.

THE MAGIC WORD.

Bennie was cross. In the first place it rained when he wanted the sun to shine. Then he had cut his finger; and now he was hungry, and Jane would'nt give him anything to eat. "You've got to give me some bread and butter," he said.

"You go along and stop your noise," replied Jane.

So Bennie wandered out in the garden and found George playing with his ball.

"Give me my ball," he said, crossly. "You've had it all the morning."

"Don't bother me," replied George. "I'm not finished with it."

Bennie turned away, half crying. Annie was sweeping the parlor. "I want you to put some salve on my finger and tie it up," he said. "It hurts."

"Wait a little," replied Annie. I'm so busy now."

The tears in Bennie's eyes got bigger, and soon began to fall fast. He lay down on the sitting room couch and sobbed, and there mamma found him a little later.

"Why, whats the matter, Bennie boy?" she asked.

"Anyone won't do a thing for me," he cried. "They just send me off, instead of doing what I ask them to."

"Perhaps you haven't used the magic word."

Bennie brushed away the tears and looked up. "Magic word?" he said.

"Why, yes. Didn't you know there was a magic word that would make people do just what you wanted?"

"What is it, mamma?" cried Bennie.

Mamma whispered in his ear. Bennie wiped his eyes, grinned, and then jumped down and ran to the kitchen. "Oh, Jane," he cried, smiling, "please give me some bread and butter."

"Of course I will," said Jane, and she put jam on it, too.

Bennie sat on the doorsteps to eat it, while he watched the clouds break away and let the sunlight through. Then he went out in the garden.

"Please, George, may I have the ball now?" he asked, smiling.

"Catch it," said George, tossing it to him. "I'd have let you have it long ago if you hadn't been cross."

When he had grown tired of play, he went and stood beside his mother where she sat sewing. "Well, Bennie boy, how does the magic word work?" she asked.

But before he could answer, little May came in with a frown on her face. "You promised you'd make me a dollie, and you didn't do it," she complained.

Bennie laughed. "I think I'd better teach May the magic word, too," he said to mamma.—Southern Churchman.

WHAT ONE LITTLE GIRL DID.

When Mr. Whitefield was preaching in New England a lady became a Christian, and her spirit was drawn out in prayer for others. She could persuade no one to pray with her but her little daughter, about ten years of age. After a while God saved the child. In a transport of holy joy she then exclaimed:

"O, mother, if all the world knew this! I wish I could tell everybody. Pray, mother, and let me run to some of the neighbors and tell them that they may be happy and love my Savior."

"Ah, my child," said the mother, "that would be useless, for I suppose that were you to tell your experience, there is not one within many miles who would not laugh at you and say it was all a delusion."

"O, mother!" replied the little girl, "I think they would believe me. I must go over to the shoemaker and tell him; he will believe me."

She ran over and found him at work in his shop. She began by telling him that he must die, and that he was a sinner and that she was a sinner, but that her blessed Savior had heard her mother's prayers and had forgiven all her sins, and that now she was so happy that she did not know how to tell it, yet she would do her best.

The shoemaker was struck with surprise, and his tears flowed down like rain. He threw aside his work, and by prayer and supplication sought mercy. The neighborhood was awakened, and within a few months more than fifty persons found Jesus and rejoiced in His love.—Central Christian Advocate.

A PART SHE COULD PLAY.

Jenny was sent out to play with her brother Harry and his companions.

"Oh, you can't play," said Harry.

"Mother said I could," replied Jenny, beginning to cry.

"But we are playing war and we are soldiers, and we are going to have a battle, and you can't play because you can't be a soldier," explained Harry.

Jenny sobbed in disappointment. Harry found the way out.

"All right," he said to his playmates. "We'll let her bawl as much as she wants to, and she can be the widows and orphans."—New York Evening Post.

IS THE WORLD GROWING BETTER?

Recently this question has been principally answered in the affirmative; that is, that the world is growing better. In answering it, one is liable to answer it according to his own circumstances or the conditions of his own community. If his health is impaired, or he is straitened financially, or both, and his community is unresponsive to his needs, or his community is lacking in any of his ideals as to what a community should be, he is very likely to conclude that the whole world is much worse than it ever was before. On the other hand, one who has good health and is easy financially, and his community also is prosperous financially and rated high socially and morally, is most likely to decide that the world is growing much better, and he does not see otherwise, and he may not wish to see otherwise, because all things are favoring him, as he understands them. The man of literature may see quite an improvement in the literature of his period, both as to its character and grade, and therefore conclude that the world is growing better, as if one must be all right in every particular if his literature is good, although most immoral men and women have produced fine literary works in prose and poetry. Even heathens have done very well in this respect. One is liable to judge favorably of the world's growing better from the public religious testimonies and talks of men and women who are perfect strangers to religion in their homes and with their neighbors. Again he can hardly see otherwise than that the world is growing better when he hears preachers and laymen in large public gatherings sing well, pray well, talk well, report well, and preach most charmingly, and yet more than the majority are rigidly selfish, self-seeking, jealous, envious, sneaking, tricky—evade the truth and misrepresent, and even lie, if necessary, to succeed in their wickedness, whether that wickedness be the ruination of character, the limitation of calabooses, the robbing of others of their rights, bribing and educating children with other people's money, or any other type.

One is prone to see nothing else but that the whole world is rapidly growing better and better when he takes as a proper basis for his judgment of the matter the progress in the sciences, in discoveries, inventions, reforms, the founding of benevolent institutions, etc. Another, whose basis for judgment is the nice, comfortable, up-to-date and costly churches that have been and are being built, the nice communions, well furnished parsonage, the increased salaries of preachers, and the organization of each department of Church work, is most likely to feel that any one who can not see with him that the world is growing better and better, is not competent to judge the simple matter, and that, therefore, his judgment is not worth any place whatever. On and on we might thus write, but feeling that we have written enough to awaken an interest in this subject, we propose an answer in another article.

EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE.

A three days' Educational Conference for all Southern Methodism will be held April 14, at Birmingham, Alabama. The prospects are good for a great Conference. The program will be published in full in the near future.

STONEWALL ANDERSON,
Corresponding Secretary

The North Carolina Christian Advocate, in referring to Bishop Denny's sermon at the recent annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Western North Carolina Conference at Greensboro, N. C., states that it was a discourse of "unusual force and power, exceedingly appropriate to the occasion, and well calculated to sustain the traditional reputation of our Bishops for great preaching."

Editorial

A SITUATION THAT NEEDS ATTENTION.

The Christian Advocate (Nashville) says: "One of the discouraging features of the 1915 statistics of our Church is the number of subscribers to the Church papers—13,479 for the general organ and 118,417 for all of the Conference organs. These figures are not complete, this being one of the new questions that all of the pastors have not yet come to include in their reports; but looking through the Annual Conference Journals, we find comparatively few blanks in the columns intended for these two items. These figures do not represent total circulations, but are supposed to represent the number of subscribers in the membership of our Church. Our Church papers are going into fewer than 150,000 Southern Methodist homes; are within reach of 600,000 members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. What of the 1,500,000 who, so far as a Church paper is concerned, are out of touch with the great movements of our Methodism? Can we expect this great body of our membership to give as they ought of service and of money if they know not what movements Methodism is enterprising?"

GET ON THE HONOR ROLL.

We desire to carry on an Honor Roll the names of every pastor and charge in Louisiana and Mississippi in which all the stewards receive the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Is your charge entitled to be on this list? If it is, please write us to that effect. If not, why not make it so? Let us hear from you, brethren.

We have decided to defer until next week the promised exhibit, showing the status of our Advocate Campaign.

MORE STRINGENT PROHIBITION LAWS.

Determined, if possible, to break up blind tigers in Mississippi, the Anti-Saloon League of that State, under the leadership of its Superintendent, Dr. T. J. Bailey, has succeeded in getting through the State Legislature some laws which, it is thought, will go far toward accomplishing that result. The amount of liquor that one person may receive within fifteen days, or have in his possession at one time, is limited to one quart of whiskey, or half a gallon of wine, or a small amount of beer. No two kinds of intoxicants may be kept at the same time. Liquor advertisements in newspapers and of all other kinds are forbidden.

Having won their fight before the State Legislature, we suppose that the prohibitionists of Mississippi will now have to engage in a further battle in the courts. The liquorites care little for the expressed will of the people, and never leave undone anything that is possible to keep their nefarious business going. But more and more the people everywhere are being aroused to see what an awful curse the sale of intoxicants is, and it is being abridged in nearly all lands to an extent never before dreamed of. May the day speedily come when it shall be abolished throughout our entire Nation and "Old Glory" made "a stainless flag!"

THE L. Q. C. LAMAR LAW SCHOOL BUILDING.

In a timely editorial in the last number of the Nashville Christian Advocate Dr. T. N. Ivey said: "We feel that the good Methodists of good old Mississippi would miss a golden opportunity of honoring one of her greatest sons and at the same time helping Emory University if she should fail to perpetuate her faith and generosity in the erection of the Lamar Law School building. What a noble monument it would be for the State of Mississippi! What do the brethren say? What are they going to do?"

The North Mississippi Conference, at its recent session in New Albany, resolved to co-operate with the Mississippi Conference in a vigorous effort to raise funds for the construction of this building and placed the matter in the hands of the Executive Committee of its Board of Education. Plans are now being formulated for a vigorous campaign in behalf of this enterprise, which we trust will soon be actively under way.

We believe it was Dr. Ivey who first proposed that the Law School of Emory University be named for Mr. Lamar, and it was a most happy suggestion. We can conceive of no other name that would be so appropriate for this department of the new University, established for the whole of Southern Methodism east of the Mississippi River. In the first place, Emory College, now a part of the new institution, was Mr. Lamar's alma mater and he always cherished for it a tender affection. And he was, in our opinion, easily the most distinguished public man that the South has given to the Nation since the Civil War. As a Congressman, Envoy to Russia for the Confederate Government, a United States Senator, a Cabinet officer, and a Justice on the Federal Supreme Bench, he rendered conspicuous and unsurpassed service, and as an orator he ranked with the ablest and most eloquent that the American Republic has produced. He was an ardent Methodist and represented his Church in some of the most noted religious gatherings ever held in the United States.

But it may be asked, Why should the Methodists of Mississippi join in a movement to aid an enterprise that has for its object the honoring of Mr. Lamar in another State? There are many strong reasons why they should do so. One is, that a man who has served so largely the whole country as Mr. Lamar did, should be honored by the whole country. Emory University is owned by the entire Church and students will be there from all over the South, if not from all over the Nation and from other lands. Mississippi could, in our judgment, do nothing that would more widely attest her appreciation of her great and gifted son and more enduringly perpetuate his memory than to join with Georgia in erecting to his honor the proposed structure, to be the permanent home of the department of this connectional school which has been so fittingly named for him; and for her not to do so would, as we see it, be a humiliation and a reproach.

But should a church give money to establish a law school? If we are to have a University at all, we must have such a department; and we have no sort of doubt that Southern Methodism must have institutions of the highest grade if her interests are to be wisely conserved and the large opportunities lying out before her are to be fully realized. Our editorial on the first page of this issue of the Advocate bears pertinently on this point.

Moreover, in helping the Law Department of Emory University we will help the whole institution. While we are aiding in this, other sections of the Church will be equipping and endowing other departments for our use. For our part, we believe that we ought to have professional schools that are operated under Christian influences, as well as literary schools. We know, from observation, that many of the former are conducted with practically no regard for the moral conditions that surround the students. If we are to have physicians and lawyers at all, they need to be Christian men. It seems to us that the Church has been almost criminally negligent of her own interests and her obligations to society in not concerning herself more as to the character of the institutions that have been training our young men for the various necessary professions.

The time has come for us to get busy in Mississippi and lend a strong helping hand to this movement to set going the L. Q. C. Lamar School. As Dr. Ivey has said, It is a golden opportunity which we now have. Is there not some noble-hearted Mississippi Methodist who will start this campaign with a gift of $10000 or $5000? We do not believe that money could be more wisely applied at this critical time in the Church's history. The Editor would be most happy to hear from such a man or woman.

A HARMFUL MEASURE.

A bill has been introduced in the Mississippi Legislature to make it unlawful for any white person to teach in any school of any kind that is attended by pupils belonging to another race. The effect of this measure, if passed, would be to interfere with such institutions as that at Tougaloo and others elsewhere in the State, which are maintained by Christian philanthropy and which are doing a great work among the colored people. We scarcely need to say that we hope that such action will not be taken. We can see no occasion whatever for the enactment of such a law, as the people of Mississippi may be trusted, by wise administration, to safeguard the commonwealth against all the dangers that the advocates of such legislation may have in view.

We will not at the present time undertake to discuss this question—it is our purpose merely to call attention to the matter and record our conviction that the proposed step is wholly without justification and fraught with grave possibilities for evil. Bishop T. D. Bratton, of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Mississippi, has addressed to the Mississippi Legislature an open letter, in which he sets forth, in a most judicious and admirable manner, the reasons why the pending bill should not be adopted; and, if the requisite space is at our disposal, we may let our readers see his communication in the next issue of the Advocate. In the meantime, it might be well for persons in Mississippi who feel concerned about this movement to express themselves to their Representatives on the subject by correspondence, or in some other way, if they should have an opportunity.

A measure similar to this was before the last Legislature of Georgia and was defeated. And it is to be hoped that Mississippi will follow the good example of the Empire State of the South in this respect. For her to take such a position as is proposed would be to place herself in an unenviable light before the Nation and the whole civilized world, and to shut out lifting agencies that she sorely needs.

THE LOCAL OPTION FIGHT IN CADDO.

Caddo Parish, of which Shreveport is the county-seat, and which has been dry for a number of years, will vote on the question of reopening the saloons on March 2. Commenting on this contest in the secular press a few days ago, Rev. A. W. Turner, Superintendent of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League, said:

"This is purely an anti-saloon fight, not in opposition to, or in the interest of any candidate. We are simply fighting to prevent the return of the licensed saloon in Caddo Parish and we feel sure that we will succeed in averting such a calamity as that. I have not heard of any business firm or individual who is ready to have a saloon next door to his place of business. I do know of some who have heretofore been liquor men who are busying themselves to keep saloons out of their block."

In view of the fact that Centenary College is situated in Shreveport, the Methodism of the whole State of Louisiana feels a deep interest in the outcome of this election. It would be most prejudicial to the interests of that institution to have to carry on its work where the dramshop, with all its attendant evils, is wide open. Shreveport, under the prohibition regime, has been growing at a rate scarcely surpassed by any city of its size in the South. And she has for some years been regarded as the moral and intellectual center of the State. Is she ready to surrender her pre-eminence in this respect for the saloon, the cabaret, and the political and social conditions that invariably come with them? This is the issue which now squarely confronts her citizenship.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. C. H. Stralt desires us to state that hereafter his address will be Carpenter, Miss., instead of Rocky Springs, Miss.

Rev. E. K. Means is making things boom at Arcadia, La. He serves a choice flock. See his report in our "From the Field" department.

Rev. C. M. Crossley, of Forest, Miss., says: "Our work is moving off well this year. All departments of the Church show an improvement over 1915."

Brother M. R. Jones states that work will be begun on the new Church at Raleigh, Miss., in a few days. He considers the prospect for Methodism encouraging in his field.

Dr. I. L. Peebles, of Wesson, Miss., who knows how to do so many things well, sent us on Feb. 17 a club of 5 subscriptions—3 of them being new and the other 2 renewals. Thank you, Doctor.

A correspondent writes: "Rev. K. W. Dodson, the popular pastor of the Broad Street Church of Lake Charles, La., is having his usual success. This is his fourth and last year in this important charge."

Mr. W. E. Thrash, of Natchez, Miss., was in New Orleans last week visiting relatives and friends, and while here paid the Advocate office an appreciated call. The Editor regrets having missed seeing him.

Rev. L. C. Wilson sends us some subscriptions from Grand Cane, La., and adds: "My work has started off well and the outlook is hopeful." Things generally come to pass in the field in which Brother Wilson labors.

First Church, Corinth, won over First Church, Tupelo, both leading appointments in the North Mississippi Conference, in the recent Sunday school attendance contest. Each of these Churches made a highly creditable showing.

Rev. A. Inman Townsley, of Crowley, La., writes us as follows: "Rev. Wm. Schuhle has made a fine beginning in his new charge—Lafayette, La. He easily ranks as one of the greatest scholars and most diligent pastors among us."

It is stated that Bishop Atkins will hold a conference with the Louisiana presiding elders in the near future. It is also expected that he will lend a helping hand to the campaign in the interest of Centenary College at Shreveport early in March.

A note from Bishop Murrah, written on February 18, stated that he was about to start for Cuba, and that likely he will return home by the way of New Orleans. His many friends down this way would be delighted to see him in the Crescent City.

Rev. J. T. McCafferty, who is in his fourth year at Eupora, Miss., and who has made there his usual good record, has our thanks for a club of 6 subscriptions. He has one of the best organized and most active Sunday schools in North Mississippi.

We congratulate the managers of the Seashore Divinity School upon having secured Dr. F. N. Parker for a series of lectures on the "Fundamental Doctrines of our Church." That course may be counted upon to be illuminating and well worth hearing.

Speaking of his Church at Tchula, Miss., Rev. C. P. Moss says: "It is wonderful what our people here have done and are doing. We dare say that Brother Moss himself is entitled to a good share of the credit for the good record that this "new station" is making.

Evangelist J. H. Bell, of Columbus, Miss., evidently wrought well in the recent meeting at Houma, La. See Brother Breithaupt's note in this issue of the Advocate. The brethren should keep Brother Bell busy. Now is the time to write him concerning an engagement.

Rev. W. L. Broome, of Bristow, Oklahoma, is pleased with the progress of the work in his charge, and expects the year to be a good one. He writes appreciatingly of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, as well as of his own Conference organ, the Texas Advocate.

Rev. J. W. Dorman, pastor of our First Church at Water Valley, Miss., calls for a list of our subscribers in his charge and invites us to spend a Sabbath with him. How we would like to do so! It is difficult to tell whether Brother Dorman most excels as a pastor or presiding elder.

It is with regret that we learn that Rev. A. I. Townsley, of Crowley, La., has recently been battling with la grippe, but we are pleased to state that he is now much improved. He had, however, to cancel his engagement to assist Rev. C. M. Morris in the meeting at Epworth Church, this city, which is now in progress.

The shots of the New Orleans ministers at race horse gambling seem to have reached the mark. At any rate, the managers of the Association have begun to try to make public explanations. This is a good sign. Perhaps the most active and aggressive leader in the fight against this evil has been Dr. S. H. Werlein.

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions sent in within the past few days: Rev. J. F. Dring, Ringgold, La., 2; Mrs. Mattie L. Lee, Monticello, Miss., 2; Rev. W. D. Bennett, Sardis Ct. (North Miss.), 2; Rev. J. S. Rutledge, Bush, La., 2.

Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, the capable presiding elder of the Winona (Miss.) District has completed his first round of appointments, and is much pleased with the outlook in the great field in which he is leading the hosts of Israel. He will have something to say concerning the work in his territory in the next issue of the Advocate.

Rev. W. M. Williams, of Collins, Miss., has brought us under obligations to him for 9 subscriptions, with a remittance to cover them, forwarded on Feb. 12. Brother Williams finds that the pastoral harness fits him admirably, notwithstanding his respite from that form of service. The work of his charge is making good progress.

Dr. S. A. Steel, of Columbia, S. C., will deliver the dedicatory address on the occasion of the setting apart of the magnificent new Church Extension building at Louisville, Ky. We dare say that this utterance will be worth going a long ways to hear. This interesting event will take place during the regular annual session of the Board of Church Extension.

Rev. J. E. McCulloch, General Secretary of the Southern Sociological Congress, was in New Orleans last week and very properly found his way to the Advocate office. This organization will meet in New Orleans this year, the time appointed for it being April 12-16. The citizens of New Orleans may be counted upon to give these social workers a kindly and generous reception.

Rev. F. R. Hill, Jr., was announced to preach at the Algiers Church last Sunday at 11 o'clock a. m., in the absence of the pastor, Rev. R. M. Brown, who was away on a visit to the lower coast mission, which is now in his care. Brother Brown will begin a meeting in Algiers on March 8, in which he will be assisted by Rev. C. M. Morris, of this city, and Rev. W. B. Hogg, of Laurel, Miss.

The St. Helena Echo (Greensburg, La.,) of February 18 says: "Rev. H. W. Bowman preached a very interesting and able sermon at the Methodist Church last Friday night. He preached at Days' Church Saturday and held the quarterly conference there in the afternoon." This presiding elder does not seem to spare himself when it comes to carrying forward the work of the Church.

Brother Holland, of the St. Helena Echo, says: "Our friend, John D. Nesom, pastor of the Methodist Church at Lake Arthur, La., wrote us a few days ago that he went on the river with a friend recently and brought in 700 pounds of dressed fish. That beats a lot of preachers of whom we have read, who went out and fished all night and caught nothing. But that was a long ways from Lake Arthur."

Many pastors are writing us for lists of our subscribers at the various post-offices in their charges, and some are doing well in looking after renewals. We highly appreciate this service. But for our preachers we would soon have to shut up shop. Our ambition for the Advocate is to make it increasingly a pastor's paper. Tell us concisely about your work, dear brother, and help us to get the paper in the homes of your people.

In a business note to the Publisher, Rev. W. W. Drake, of Minden, La., says: "I have been quite busy, so far, getting acquainted with my people and getting into touch with all phases of our Church work. I will write something of affairs here for the Advocate before long." We trust that Brother Drake will not forget this promise. Perhaps we may be permitted to say, in this connection, that he is not a little missed in the Crescent City.

Our esteemed friend, Brother F. A. Howell, of Durant, Miss., has our hearty thanks for a club of 9 subscriptions to the Advocate, one of them being new. Brother Howell, who has long been one of the leading laymen of the Durant District, looks carefully after the interests of our paper in his community every year. May the richest blessings of the Heavenly Father be showered upon his pathway, as life's eventide comes increasingly on!

Rev. T. S. Randle, of Batesville, Texas, an esteemed veteran of the Louisiana Conference, who is sojourning in the Lone Star State because of health considerations, states that the Advocate is a most welcome weekly visitor to him and his family, bringing news of friends and accounts of what is going on back at home. Brother Randle states that his health is somewhat improved and that he is endeavoring to render some service for the Master.

More subscriptions came last week from Rev. M. F. Adams, of Flora, Miss.—this time the club consisted of 1 new name and 4 renewals. In our young friend's business letter was appended the following note: "Brother W. E. Harris says he has been looking weekly for the arrival of the Advocate for 61 years, and that he has never thought more of it than he does now." We extend greetings to this long-time reader, and pray that his path may "shine more and more unto the perfect day."

Rev. K. W. Dodson, of Lake Charles, La., writes: "Rev. George W. Reeves, who joined as a charter member the first Methodist Church organized at Lake Charles, under Rev. Robert Parvin in 1857, died this afternoon (Monday) at 1 o'clock at the ripe age of 84. He was ordained a local deacon in 1873, and, though he remained a local preacher, he did a great deal of work for the Church." We regret to learn of Brother Reeves' decease, and we extend sympathy to the bereaved.

We take the following from the last issue of the Nashville Christian Advocate: "Rev. John M. Moose, Chaplain of the United States Army, has returned with his regiment from the Philippines for service in this country. He and his family reached San Francisco on February 14. Their many friends will welcome their return to the homeland." Brother Moose is a beloved member of the North Mississippi Conference, and his wife is a daughter of Dr. J. W. Boswell, formerly editor of the New Orleans Advocate.

We are disappointed in not being able to give our readers an account of the Woman's Annual Missionary Conference of Louisiana, lately held at Ruston, in this issue of the Advocate. Mrs. Harrell, the Editor of our Woman's Department, wrote us from the Mississippi Conference meeting at Vicksburg, that she expected a report of the Louisiana gathering to be sent us, and hence would not send in her usual supply of copy. Brother Joyner, who was in attendance, stated that the Ruston meeting was one of much interest. We hope yet to be able to print a "write-up" of its proceedings. Our Woman's Missionary Societies in this State are doing a great work for the Master.

Rev. D. E. Kelly, the well known Mississippi Conference Evangelist, and Rev. S. E. Kirby, who ranks high as a chorister, have lately been in a gracious meeting with Dr. H. F. Tolle at Biloxi, Miss. Concerning this series of services, Brother J. L. Jordan, under date of Feb. 17, wrote us as follows: "The Lord has been wonderfully using Brother Kelly here in an ingathering of precious souls. Quite a number of persons have been converted, and up to the present 60 have made application for Church membership. This is the fourth week of the meeting, and the end is not yet in sight. The interest, which is increasing all the time, is too great for the campaign to be brought to a close."

We have in hand a communication from Bienville, La., signed by Brothers G. R. Robinson, C. C. Crawford, and F. P. Warren, in which it is stated that the representation recently appearing in the Advocate that their charge would not provide a support for its pastor was not correct. Good and worthy brethren often see things differently. The Editor, of course, personally knows nothing about the matter. Having admitted the other statement, he feels that it is due the Bienville Methodists to publish their exception to it in this brief form. With this the incident is closed, so far as the Advocate is concerned. We would not, for anything, do any one connected with it the least injustice intentionally.

On January 20, 1916, a gloom came over the Spring Creek community when the death of Mr. CLYDE LANTRIP was announced. He was about 27 years old. Clyde was a member of the Methodist Church, and had been for several years. He was a good, obedient boy to his mother. He was industrious and truthful. He was sadly afflicted and had been very sick, being confined for three months to his room. He bore his affliction bravely. Toward the last his conversation with his aunt showed that he was ready for the Master's summons, and he gently "fell asleep," his spirit being borne away to Him who gave it. He passed away only a few hours before his mother, and when she died there were two corpses in the home at the same time. We would say to the bereaved ones, do not mourn as those who have no hope, but put your trust in God. The body of the deceased was laid to rest in the Asbury Cemetery, the funeral service being conducted by his pastor, Rev. C. O. Pate.

Waterford, Miss. A FRIEND.

Little WALTER PRESTON McATEE came to brighten and bless the home of Mr. and Mrs. Albert McAtee on May 4, 1911. His life, though short, accomplished its mission in centering the affections of his father and mother more fully upon the home beyond, to which he was summoned on Oct. 10, 1915, by the One who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." His soul took its flight from his parents' home near Tchula, Miss. He left a father, mother, and a little brother to mourn his death. God in his wisdom seems to take the jewels of our home and place them where he wants us to go, as in the Master's spirit you take into your arms the little ones. His own everlasting arms will encircle them and you. His blessings he will breathe upon you and enable you so to live that when you are called you may go to meet your loved ones. May the promise, "I will not leave you comfortless," sustain you in this trying hour. T. F.

Tchula, Miss.

JAMES STEVENS SCUTT was born on March 1, 1850, at Bloomfield, Pickaway County, Ohio. At the age of 20 he moved to Michigan and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, in 1871. On December 31, 1872, he was happily married to Miss Ella C. Nichols, whose devotion and Christian faithfulness were an inspiration and a benediction to his whole life. In 1892 he came to the State of Mississippi and was connected with the Keystone Lumber Company, located in Lincoln County. In 1903 he severed his relation with that company and moved to Brookhaven, and in 1905 came to Fernwood, Miss., to work for the Fernwood Lumber Company, where he remained up to the date of his death, on December 9, 1915. When he came South he united with the M. E. Church, South, and became a valuable and an efficient member. At the time of his death he was steward and lay leader in our Church here at Fernwood, and filled these places with fidelity, backed up with the power of a consistent Christian life. He was a true friend to the pastor and supported him in efforts to promote the interests of the Church. The influence of his life will long remain to bless this community.

W. H. SAUNDERS, Pastor.

RESOLUTIONS.

When the angel of death entered our midst on January 12, 1916, it took away the soul of one of our most beloved members and co-workers, Mrs. MAUDE WOODELL THOMPSON; therefore be it resolved.

1. That by her death the Carrollton Auxiliary of the Woman's Missionary Society has sustained an irreparable loss, for, though our dear friend has fallen in young womanhood, truly we can say "she hath done what she could."

"Rest now, dear one, such lives as thine
Have not been lived in vain,
But shed an influence, rare, divine,
On those that here remain."

2. That the grief-stricken husband and mother have our deepest sympathy, and we commend them to God in this dark season of grief.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent the Conservative, the New Orleans Christian Advocate, the family of the deceased, and that a copy be spread on the minutes of the Society.

Signed: Mrs. C. A. Neal, Mrs. J. W. Taylor, Mrs. H. M. Bryan, Committee.

APPRECIATORY RESOLUTIONS.

On the fourth day of December, 1829, JAMES MONROE JOHNSON was born, and on Thursday afternoon, the 27th day of January, 1916, his spirit returned to the God who gave it. He was a good man. As a soldier he was faithful to the cause he loved; as a citizen, he was zealous for the best interests of his community; as a husband and father, he was ever tender and kind; as a friend, he was kind-hearted and true, and as a churchman, he was a tireless, unselfish worker in the vineyard of his Lord. Therefore be it resolved by the membership of the Acona (Miss.) Church, which he loved so well:

1. That in his death our Church and community have sustained a well-nigh irreparable loss.

2. That, in their hour of sorrow, we extend to the members of his family our tenderest sympathies.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the New Orleans Christian Advocate and the Lexington Advertiser, with a request for publication.

Signed: J. E. McRae, Wm. B. Peacock, A. F. O'Bryant.

Acona, Miss.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, our Heavenly Father has seen fit in his divine providence to remove from this earth our beloved sister, Mrs. W. R. WALK, thereby transplanting her spirit to live the spiritual life of glory; therefore, be it Resolved, 1. That in the death of Sister Walk, we, the members of the Woman's Missionary Society at Union, Miss., have sustained the loss of a friend and co-worker whose fellowship it was a pleasure to enjoy and whose life was adorned with kind deeds.

Resolved, 2. That we record our high appreciation of her loyal service rendered as a member of our Church and Society.

Resolved, 3. That we extend our sincere sympathy and condolence to her grief-stricken husband, children, and relatives, and that we will remember them in our devotions to Almighty God.

Resolved, 4. That we bow with submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, whom we believe too wise to err and too good to do wrong.

Resolved, 5. That a copy of these resolutions be presented to the family of our deceased friend and a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and Union Appeal for publication.

Sage Tea to Darken Hair

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Bring Back Color and Lustre to Hair.

You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost over night if you'll get a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this old, famous Sage Tea Recipe are sold annually, says a well-known druggist here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is turning gray, becoming faded, dry, scraggly and thin have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful—all dandruff goes, scalp itching and falling hair stops.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur to-night and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.—Adv.

10 CENT "CASCARETS" IF BILIOUS OR COSTIVE

For Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Sluggish Liver and Bowels—They work while you sleep.

Furred Tongue, Bad Taste, Indigestion, Sallow Skin and Miserable Headaches come from a torpid liver and clogged bowels, which cause your stomach to become filled with undigested food, which sours and ferments like garbage in a swill barrel. That's the first step to untold misery—indigestion, foul gases, bad breath, yellow skin, mental fears, everything that is horrible and nauseating. A Cascaret to-night will give your constipated bowels a thorough cleansing and straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist will keep you feeling good for months.

YOU WILL WRITE A LETTER LIKE THIS.

I wish that I knew which one of the thousands of letters I receive would have the most weight with you, my friend. I can't quote all of them here, but I am going to ask you to read these carefully and then give me a chance to renew your health and make you write me one very much like them:

701 Barnard Street,
Savannah, Ga., Dec. 28, 1910.

Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.: Dear Sir: As you are aware, in 1909 I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water, which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy.

A. L. R. AVANT, M.D.

Leeds, S. C., March 2, 1911.

I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will produce a permanent cure. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter.

C. A. CROSBY, M.D.

These are not selected cases, nor are the results unusual. I receive thousands like them from physicians, ministers, lawyers, merchants, farmers, manufacturers, and every conceivable profession. I want the satisfaction of receiving such a letter from you. No matter what your complaint may be, dyspepsia, indigestion, nervous headache, rheumatism, gall stones, kidney or liver disease, or any chronic ailment that has not responded to drugs, I invite you to match your faith in the Spring against my pocketbook. If the water fails to benefit you simply say so, return the empty demijohns and I will promptly and willingly refund your money—every cent. Sign below:

Shivar Springs,
Box 17-B, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if it fails to benefit my case you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

MERIDIAN DISTRICT NOTES.

Rev. A. J. Davis is starting well on the Waynesboro Circuit. The spiritual outlook is bright. The assessment for the pastor has been increased and the promise of success is good.

Good reports are heard from East End, Meridian. The new pastor, Rev. J. A. Moore, is a constructive leader, and the work of the Church in all of its departments is making steady progress.

A revival wave is on at Seventh Avenue, Meridian. The pastor, Rev. H. S. Westbrook, on a recent Sunday received five into the Church, and there were eight conversions on that day.

Mr. D. Coker, an engineer on the A. & V. Railroad and a member of our Fifth Street Church at Meridian, died near Brandon, Miss., last Sunday night. He fell at his throttle on the fast passenger train No. 2. He was a brother of Mrs. Rev. A. J. Davis, of Waynesboro, Miss.

In the race for Circuit Judge of the Tenth Judicial District to succeed Judge Venable, there are three prominent Methodist laymen—the present incumbent, Hon. Roland Heidelberg, of Shuhuta, Hon. Dave Fatheree, of Quitman, and Hon. D. M. Taylor, of Waynesboro. The election is to be held March 7.

HATTIESBURG DISTRICT NOTES.

Rev. H. E. Carter has made a fine beginning at Magee. He and his family were graciously received by his new flock. He found conditions good, as a result of the wise leadership and untiring work of his predecessor, Brother Harrison, and is hopeful of a year of great prosperity.

The Hattiesburg District has the biggest presiding elder in the country. He is big of body, big of heart, and big of mind. He is a big preacher in spite of the fact that he is a presiding elder. Mirabile dictu!

Rev. W. A. Terry, the popular pastor of the Broad Street charge, is in great danger of wasting time. The Traction Company furnishes him and the other pastors of the city free transportation on the trolley lines. Terry has already used up about two coupon books. The Main Street and Court Street pastors have not used more than one-fifth of one book each. Terry is running around for the fun of it. It does'nt cost him anything. Some of us are getting uneasy about him. A brother pastor went to the presiding elder and asked him to labor with Terry, and get him to quiet down. The presiding elder said we ought to be patient with Terry. It was new to him. He had never before been a city pastor. He thought the new would soon wear off, and that then we no doubt would see some good normal work done.

The W. F. auxiliaries of Hattiesburg had a magnificent joint meeting on January 31. The meeting was held at Court Street Church. The auxiliaries at Broad Street, Petal, Main Street, and Court Street Churches were well represented. The program was good. The spirit of the meeting was fine. Delightful refreshments were served, and thirty minutes were spent in a social, get-acquainted way. Notwithstanding a heavy down-pour of rain, and a funeral service at Main Street, about 75 good missionary women were in attendance and had an enthusiastic time. Mrs. Curran Sullivan entertained the gathering with a delightful reading.

The presiding elder and the pastor of the Court Street Church are at wide difference on the matter of prayer. They cannot agree as to the proper things for which to pray. At a prayer meeting the pastor read to the congregation the Savior's assurance that any two who would agree in asking should have their prayer answered. He told them that he believed implicitly in the dependability of the assurance. He asked all who believed in it, and would join with him in asking for a pretty day next Sunday, and a good congregation, to hold up their hands. Several hands went up, but not the presiding elder's. He said he would join in asking for a good congregation, but the weather was another thing. It was in other hands. Brother J. S. Turner made a quasi threat of injunction if the pastor of Court Street Church does'nt quit monkeying with the weather. Too bad! Mr. Editor. What, think you, can be done to convert these brethren to orthodoxy? This heresy may hurt us. Anyhow, the pastor put one over the presiding elder. The next Sunday was a lovely day—clear and balmy. Would'nt you call that a concrete demonstration of the reliability of the Savior's assurance?

THE ASBURY ANNIVERSARY.

Tuesday, March 26, 1916.

The North Mississippi Conference appointed a committee to prepare a program for Asbury Day.

Francis Asbury died in Spotsylvania, Virginia, on March 31, 1816, being then nearly seventy-one years of age. It is proposed to observe the hundredth anniversary of his death on the fourth Sunday of March. If any cause prevents the use of that day, April the second may be given to the event. This year, 1916, is to be observed by all American Methodist Churches as the Asbury Centenary.

The committee suggests the following program for our churches:

1. Address by a layman on the devotion, privations and sacrifices of the founders of American Methodism. (20 minutes).

2. Address by the pastor in honor of the labors and achievements of Asbury and his co-laborers. (20 minutes).

3. Offering for the erection of a bronze equestrian statue of Bishop Asbury in the city of Washington from the voluntary contributions of American Methodists.

These hymns are suggested:

"Faith of Our Fathers" (113).

"O Master let me Walk with Thee" (411).

"O, for a Faith that will not Shrink" (129).

This text is suggested:

"Of whom the world was not Worthy. (Heb. xi, 38).

It is also the purpose of the committee to arrange for an appropriate observance of this memorial celebration at the next session of the Annual Conference.

Respectfully submitted,
H. G. HENDERSON,
J. R. COUNTISS,
W. L. DUREN,
Committee.

SUFFERED FROM LAME BACK, WEAK KIDNEYS AND DIZZINESS.

Dear Reader:

Last winter I suffered terribly from lame back, weak kidneys and dizziness, and uric acid in the blood caused rheumatic pains. I sent to Dr. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., for his new remedy, "Anuric." As soon as the box of tablets came by mail I commenced taking them, and reaped untold good from their use.

(Signed) MRS. KATE THOMPSON

Note: This "Anuric" is adapted especially for kidney complaints and diseases arising from disorders of the kidneys and bladder, such as backache, weak back, rheumatism, dropsy, congestion of the kidneys, inflammation of the bladder, scalding urine and urinary troubles. The physicians and specialists at Dr. Pierce's great Institution, in Buffalo, N. Y., have thoroughly tested this prescription and have been with one accord successful in eradicating these troubles, and in most cases absolutely curing the diseased kidneys.

Patients having once used "Anuric" at Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, have repeatedly sent back for more. Such a demand has been created that Dr. Pierce has decided to put "Anuric" in the drug stores of this country, in a ready-to-use form. If not obtainable, send one dime by mail to Dr. Pierce for trial package, or 50 cents for full treatment.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a blood cleanser and alternative that starts the liver and stomach into vigorous action. It thus assists in making rich, red blood, which feeds the heart, nerves, brain, and all organs of the body. You feel clean, strong and strenuous—instead of tired, weak and "all in."—Adv.

Calomel Seldom Sold Here Now

Nasty drug salivates, makes you sick and you lose a day's work.

Every druggist in town—your druggist and everybody's druggist—has noticed a great falling off in the sale of calomel. They all give the same reason. Dodson's Liver Tone is taking its place.

"Calomel is dangerous and people know it, while Dodson's Liver Tone is perfectly safe and gives better results," said a prominent local druggist. Dodson's Liver Tone is personally guaranteed by every druggist who sells it. A large bottle costs 50 cents, and if it fails to give easy relief in every case of liver sluggishness and constipation, you have only to ask for your money back.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a pleasant-tasting, purely vegetable remedy, harmless to both children and adults. Take a spoonful at night and wake up feeling fine; no biliousness, sick headache, acid stomach or constipated bowels. It doesn't gripe or cause inconvenience all the next day like violent calomel. Take a dose of calomel to-day and to-morrow you will feel weak, sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day's work! Take Dodson's Liver Tone instead and feel fine, full of vigor and ambition.

If Kidneys Act Bad Take Salts

Says Backache is sign you have been eating too much meat.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.

WATCH YOUR HEART IF YOU WISH HEALTH.

Weak hearts are more common than weak stomachs, lungs, eyes, backs, or kidneys. Every time your heart misses a beat your life is being shortened. Heart disease, taken in its early stages, is quite easy to relieve; but every day that treatment is delayed the relief becomes more difficult.

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy taken in conjunction with the Nervine, or alone, has proven very efficient in relieving heart disorders.

The Rev. Geo. W. Kiracofe, of Keller, Va., in this connection stated as follows:

"It has been many years since I was cured of heart trouble by Dr Miles' Heart Remedy and Nervine. I am just as sound as a dollar in that organ to-day. Before I took these remedies my breathing had been short and at times difficult; there were sharp pains about my heart, accompanied by fluttering which would make me feel faint and languid. The least excitement or worry would unnerve me. The trouble grew steadily worse. Doctors' prescriptions did me no good. But since using Dr. Miles' Remedies all symptoms were removed and have never returned since."

If you suspect that you have heart trouble avoid all dangerous delays.

It costs you nothing to try these remedies if you are not benefited. All you have to do is to return the empty bottle to the druggist and he will refund your money.

SULPHUR AND VINTON (LOUISIANA).

The work on the Sulphur and Vinton charge is in first class condition. Brother Bennett, who served here for four years, did a most excellent work, and the interests in Church matters at both places is increasing wonderfully. A very important feature of the work is that we have two live prayer meetings. The Forward-Step Class of the Vinton Sunday School has provided the pastor with a mileage book, making it possible for him to be present every week at the prayer meeting at that place. We have had our first quarterly conference, and almost every official member was present. People from both places have visited us, bringing with them many good things to eat. We are planning for a revival at Vinton next month. Pray that the Lord may enable us to do the work that is so urgently needed at this time. L. HOFFPAUIR, P. C.

FROM NATCHEZ.

Dear Dr. Meek: I have been most cordially received by the good people here. Last week we were given a public reception, which was largely attended by members from our own and other denominations, including several Jewish friends. We are domiciled in what I think is the best parsonage in the Conference, located in a most excellent neighborhood, and it is fitted up with every modern convenience.

During my brief experience on "the district," I did not unpack my books from the boxes in which they were shipped from Vicksburg. With twenty-eight charges to look after, and seven counties to traverse, there was no time for study or for making new sermons. I have heard that once upon a time a certain presiding elder made a new sermon and the effort nearly proved fatal; for the effort put him in bed. I tried to profit by his experience. I am now trying to make up for lost time. I have been busy in pastoral work—getting acquainted with the people. I seldom make such a visit without having prayer with the family. In some places I have heard this commented upon as a most unusual and unheard-of procedure. Mind, I am not specifying the place or places. In an experience of more than twenty-two years in the pastorate, I have heard some things.

The family altar and prayer in pastoral visiting ought not to be allowed to fall into desuetude. Our congregations are good and the outlook is most encouraging. I am most happy in the good fortune to follow as my predecessor a man of such sterling worth that he is greatly beloved by all the people and his four years' work here will abide.

Our beloved Dr. E. H. Mounger is at present making his home with his son here. C. F. EMERY.

FAYETTE, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: Please give me space in the Advocate to announce that we will hold a Sunday School Institute at Fayette on February 21-23, primarily for the Sunday school officers and teachers. Rev. J. S. Neill, our Conference Field Secretary, and others are expected to be with us. All are cordially invited to attend the Institute, but special invitations have been sent to the pastors, officers, and teachers in the middle part of our district, including the following charges: Fayette, Washington, Natchez, Neho, Harriston, Roxie, Hermanville, and Utica. We hope to have the pleasure of entertaining these Christian workers and that they will use the opportunity for securing better equipment for service. J. O. WARE, P. C.

Cured His RUPTURE.

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that quickly and completely cured me. Years have passed and the rupture has never returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell, but will give full information about how you may find a complete cure without operation, if you write to me, Eugene M Pullen, Carpenter, 597B Marcellus Ave., Manasquan, N. J. Better cut out this notice and show it to any others who are ruptured—you may save a life or at least stop the misery of rupture and the worry and danger of an operation.

THE GOSPEL IN A CONFUCIAN STRONGHOLD.

One favorable indication in the Orient is the fact that Christian work has lately opened in the ancient city of Chufu, North China. As many know, this was the birthplace of Confucius and the center of his teaching at the start of his career. He was buried a short distance outside the city walls. Here, also, is an imposing Confucian temple.

A desirable property has been secured in Chufu by the Methodist Episcopal Board, with room enough for schools, church, and residences. That a Christian body should find it possible to center an important work in this Confucian city is another proof that the Cross of Christ is conquering China.

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY.

Mr. A. H. Daves, of Southern Alabama, writes: "As few people know of the wonderful opportunities here, my experience may benefit many. Ten years ago I came here without a dollar, got some free land, cleared one acre and planted Satsuma oranges, which are frost proof. In three years I began selling fruit; that one acre now makes me an annual profit of over $1000. I now have 50 acres of bearing Satsumas. My three and four year old trees yield a profit of $300 to $400 per acre, and my annual income is over $18,000 and growing larger every year." Any person can get from 5 to 25 acres of choice land in the Demonstration Plantation FREE, by having oranges or figs and pecans planted on it. For particulars about this free land, address W. A. Roberts, Secretary, 339 Fifth Ave., Block 296, Pittsburgh, Pa. If you can't go South yourself, an authorized Company will plant your trees, care for them and market the fruit for a share of the profit.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it loosens the dry, hoarse or tight cough and heals and soothes the inflamed membranes in the case of a painful cough. It also stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, combined with guaiacol, and has been used for generations to heal inflamed membranes of the throat and chest.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex," and don't accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., 235 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

HOW TO READ THE BIBLE.

The New York Christian Advocate says that an English minister gives the following basis for Bible study:

1. Study it through.
2. Pray it in.
3. Write it down.
4. Live it out.
5. Pass it on.

We begin in heaven where we left off here, and they who have earnestly striven to work out their faith into their lives shall "summer high upon the hills of God."—Alexander Maclaren.

Just one hundred years ago the first New Testament in Chinese was issued from a press in Canton. Last year the American Bible Society and the British and Foreign Society circulated in China more than a quarter million copies of the Bible.

The reason for the smallness, the weakness of the Church's standing army is that it has been enlisted largely for the purpose of standing, and not for either marching or fighting.—Dean W. C. DeWitt.

Take Lime for Tuberculosis

In the Journal of the American Medical Association (July 27, 1912, Page 308), Dr. C. F. Disen, of Minneapolis, holds that a "deficiency of calcium" (lime) is responsible for the physical conditions which lead to tuberculosis, "and the therapy he advocates rests on this basis."

One of the reasons for the wide-spread success of Eckman's Alterative in the treatment of tuberculosis is its ability to supply this deficiency. It contains a lime salt in such combination with other valuable ingredients as to be easily assimilated by the average person. Many cases seem to have yielded to it.

We make no exaggerated claims for it, but prefer that it be tried on the same basis as any other prescription, and since it contains no opiates, narcotics or habit-forming drugs, it is safe. Price $1 and $2 per bottle. Sold by leading druggists or sent direct from the Laboratory. We would like to send you a booklet containing information of value and references.

GIVE "SYRUP OF FIGS" TO CONSTIPATED CHILD

Delicious "Fruit Laxative" can't harm tender little Stomach, liver and bowels.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhoea, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

BENTON, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: It has been some time since the Benton charge had a "write up" in the paper, so I penning a note to you. I did not know anything about the people here until I moved in December, but the more that I learn about them the better I like them. The new preacher was cordially received by all of the churches. And ever since he was received he has been receiving. Doctor, I guess you have forgotten how the people live in the country since you have been cooped up in New Orleans? Oh, the good things they do send to the preacher: backbones, sausage, spareribs, and potatoes. But I must not tell you all, for we need you as editor of the Advocate.

We had our first quarterly conference at Midway, Jan. 29-30. I tell you the people at Midway know how to entertain a quarterly conference. We are going back there with another conference this year. Every church was represented, and there was a good report on all lines. Say, did you ever hear a presiding elder who could preach up to the top notch? I tell you we have a preaching elder.

Doctor, don't you think that the parsonage ought to be as nice a house as there is in town and the preacher and his family about as fat as the average? Well, we have been very well fed and I know that I have gained some flesh. The children look rosy, and I believe that Mrs. Campbell has gained at least a quarter of a pound since we moved here; so now we are going to try to improve the parsonage. There are so many things needed that I hardly know where to begin. The parsonage leaks some. You know a "camel" can take a good deal of water, but he likes dry places; so I guess we had better cover the house first.

I wish you could come to see us and visit the Agricultural High School. We have a fine crowd of boys and girls out there. They love the Church and are certainly nice to the preacher.

I had almost forgotten to tell you that we are having large crowds out at the preaching services at all of the churches. You know that this is a great help to a preacher, and I believe that we are going to have a good year here. Did you ever see a "Ford?" There are a good many of them in this country and they are used to go to Church in. You know people can go a long way to church in a "Ford" on good roads. I am going to try to help you out in the Advocate campaign.—J. F. Campbell, P. C.

SIX-YEAR-OLD HAD CROUP.

"I have a little girl six years old who has a great deal of trouble with croup," writes W. E. Curry of Evansville, Ind. "I have used Foley's Honey and Tar, obtaining instant relief for her. My wife and I also use it and will say it is the best cure for a bad cold, cough, throat trouble and croup that I ever saw." Those terrible coughs that seem to tear one to pieces yield to Foley's Honey and Tar.

Men's hearts ought not to be set against one another, but set with one another, and all against the evil thing only.—Carlye.

DON'T USE SOAP

on your hair. It is too strongly alkaline and will do a great deal of damage. The hair should be of a soft and silken texture. Each individual hair is of delicate construction and requires scientific, careful treatment. If your hair is harsh, dry, course and scanty, then you are not giving it proper treatment. The hair needs food just as the rest of your body, and in order to keep your scalp nourished and your hair plentiful and beautiful, you should supply it with the proper food and treatment. The Creoles of Louisiana possessed a formula for keeping the hair beautiful and for many years kept the secret to themselves, but now you may enjoy their discovery by using "La Creole" Hair Color Restorer, the same recipe which the Creoles used. It darkens hair in the natural way and keeps the scalp in healthy condition. For sale by all reliable dealers. Price $1.00. Manufactured by Van Vleet-Mansfield Drug Co., Memphis, Tenn.—Adv.

The instruction will be entirely free and information will be sent on application. An advanced course for evangelistic musicians and singers also is announced, for which a small fee is charged. There are 956 students in the day and evening classes this term, 678 of whom are in residence.

OLD PRESCRIPTION FOR WEAK KIDNEYS.

A medicinal preparation like Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, that has real curative value almost sells itself. Like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited to those who are in need of it.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is a physician's prescription. It has been tested for years and has brought results to countless numbers who have suffered.

The success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder diseases, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

Do not suffer. Get a bottle of Swamp-Root from any druggist now. Start treatment to-day.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure to mention the New Orleans Christian Advocate.—Adv.

A Woman's Problem

How to Feel Well During Middle Life Told by Three Women Who Learned from Experience.

The Change of Life is a most critical period of a woman's existence, and neglect of health at this time invites disease and pain. Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to medicine that will so successfully carry women through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs. Read these letters:—

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I started the Change of Life five years ago. I always had a headache and backache with bearing down pains and I would have heat flashes very bad at times with dizzy spells and nervous feelings. After taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I feel like a new person and am in better health and no more troubled with the aches and pains I had before I took your wonderful remedy. I recommend it to my friends for I cannot praise it enough."—Mrs. Margaret Grassman, 759 N. Ringgold St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Beverly, Mass.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, for nervousness and dyspepsia, when I was going through the Change of Life. I found it very helpful and I have always spoken of it to other women who suffer as I did and have had them try it and they also have received good results from it."—Mrs. George A. Dunbar, 17 Roundy St., Beverly, Mass.

Erie, Pa.—"I was in poor health when the Change of Life started with me and I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, or I think I should not have got over it as easy as I did. Even now if I do not feel good I take the Compound and it restores me in a short time. I will praise your remedies to every woman for it may help them as it has me."—Mrs. E. Kissling, 931 East 24th St., Erie, Pa.

No other medicine has been so successful in relieving woman's suffering as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Women may receive free and helpful advice by writing the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. Such letters are received and answered by women only and held in strict confidence.

From the Field

Williamsburg Ct., Miss. Conf.

Within the past seven years I have served two charges within the bounds of the Jackson District. During that time I had as my presiding elders Rev. J. R. Jones and Rev. P. D. Hardin, both of whom are great men of God. I am now on the Williamsburg Circuit, in the Hattiesburg District, and Rev. G. H. Thompson is our much beloved presiding elder. Since the Annual Conference I have preached 16 times, made 95 pastoral visits, and baptized 17 infants. Pray that I may accomplish much in the field that has been assigned me.—R. T. Nolen, P. C.

Weir, Miss.

We have just closed a union meeting at this place, Brother Chas. D. McGehee, our Methodist pastor, did the preaching. He was assisted in the services by Rev. Mr. Latimer, the Baptist pastor, and by the Rev. Mr. Hawthorne, the Presbyterian pastor. Brother McGehee is a remarkable preacher—not only as to spirituality, but also intellectually. He presented his sermons in such a forceful, practical way that God's Word was sent home to the hearts of his hearers. The services were conducted in the beautiful auditorium of our new school building, where all the students attended in a body. The meeting was a benediction to the entire student body, many of whom expressed themselves as being greatly benefited and declaring that they intended to live a better life. Our entire people were greatly profited by these services. Never before in our history have our people been more closely united in behalf of God's cause. This was indeed a great meeting—never to be forgotten by our people.—H. A. Pollard.

Arcadia, La.

Few preachers get two bites at a cherry and still fewer are privileged to serve two pastorates at the same church. I have had two shots at Arcadia, La., and if the people do not like me they have a charming way of keeping me from finding it out. Why, Mr. Editor, they even love their presiding elder! If you don't believe it, ask Carter. He has completely won the people to him, and they feel that nothing is too good for Briscoe. About five years ago a new church was built. Last year a new parsonage was completed. A debt of $400 remained on the parsonage, and at the beginning of this year Mr. Frank Taylor, a Christian layman, paid this debt. The local Presbyterian congregation has disbanded and come to us in a body. A Presbyterian elder, Judge J. E. Reynolds, is my Sunday school superintendent, and under his wise management the Sunday school has grown until an annex to the church will be necessary to accommodate the classes. In the past few months the pastor's salary has been raised and he has received two handsome presents. Mr. D. M. Atkins gave him a gold watch, and the stewards and trustees gave him a gold-headed umbrella. Both of these are inscribed to "Dr. E. K. Means." Now, brethren, I hold that a congregation which can bestow two valuable gifts and two honorary "D.Ds." on the pastor is well worth serving. Therefore, I expect to stay here four years.—E. K. M.

Houma Mission, La. Conf.

Dear Doctor Meek: It has been my pleasure to be in quite a number of meetings, where Protestantism predominates. Then, too, I have been where Romanism practically holds full sway for the past 7 years and have worked in a number of revivals down here, doing the preaching myself, and working with others who have done splendid work. We have had Brothers A. W. Turner, Walter Harbin, Martin Hebert, J. G. Snelling and Vaughan, all of whom are men of power in evangelistic work, and who wrought exceedingly well while with us, but this meeting has gone deeper, reached out further, touched more hearts, produced more public prayers, with as little unnecessary excitement, than any series of revival services I ever had the good fortune to attend or have a part in. I have never seen in all my life as many prayers answered in the same length of time, nor as many people, who at first were totally indifferent to everything pertaining to the Church of God, touched to the extent that they would darken the doors of a church to hear the gospel after having absented themselves as long as twenty years from the preaching of the Word from pulpits. In an account of the Blue Mountain meeting held by Brother J. H. Bell, of Columbus, Miss., Brother Neblett said: "Brother Bell was at ease and deeply interested, and interesting, in every service wherever we were. His quiet, frank, forceful manner, moved by a sweet spirit of consecration, took firm hold of all classes. Not a useless, foolish, or awkward thing was said or done at any time. He is truly 'a man with a message' and should be used by the brethren." Those words cannot be improved on in describing the man and his methods. Our Louisiana Conference, I am sure, will be blessed wherever he tarries with the brethren for the purpose of helping in meetings which he may be engaged in on our side of the line.—C. V. Breithaupt.

A LIVE PRAYER MEETING.

On last Wednesday night, Feb. 14, it was my privilege to attend the prayer meeting at our church at Wiggins, Miss. The attendance was large—I should think quite a hundred people were present, many men being in the congregation, besides women, and a number of children. After several songs had been sung, in which apparently every one in the Church joined, and several prayers had been offered by the men, the women were called on to pray, and two little girls, apparently not more than 12 or 14 years old, were asked by the pastor to lead the prayer, which they did very sweetly, and without embarrassment. This was the first time in all the years I have attended prayer meetings that I had heard such young girls lead in public prayer, and my heart burned within me as I thought of the words of the Master: "A little child shall lead them." What an inspiration it was!

Being the State Secretary of the Gideons, the pastor accorded me the opportunity to place the Bible work before the meeting; the response was prompt and liberal, and enough was secured to place a Bible in each of the 20 rooms of the local hotel. It was an experience I shall never forget.

Yours very sincerely,
Jackson, Miss. E. C. ROBIN.

BOILS NEEDN'T BOTHER YOU.

Gray's Ointment puts an end to them right away. This remarkable ointment was first prepared in 1820 by a North Carolina physician. For nearly a century the American people have found it the most effective preparation for all eruptions and abrasions of the skin, burns, cuts, wounds, bruises, boils, carbuncles, ulcers, sores, etc. It speedily heals the skin trouble, and prevents the development of blood poisoning, which not infrequently rises from a neglected sore or cut. "The best remedy I ever tried for risings, and all my friends who have tried it say it beats anything they ever used," writes Miss E. M. Manley, Auburndale, Fla. Keep a box in the house. 25c at druggists. Get a free sample by writing W. F. Gray & Co., 806 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.—Adv.

Obituaries

Another bud plucked from the garden of parental affection has been planted in God's own nursery; another little voice tuned to harps of gold is praising Him continually. On January 25 the angels came to the home of D. B. and Sallie Morris, of Lena, Miss., and bore away LEONNE, their infant daughter, who was less than two years old, to that sun-bright clime, "undimmed by sorrow, unhurt by time," where a thousand wings are hovering o'er the dazzling wave and the golden shore that are seen in that "sun-bright clime." Dear parents, grieve not, but rather rejoice that your little darling is safe in the arms of Jesus, and beckoning you to come. AUNT SALLIE.

GEORGE WASHINGTON ROGERS was born on April 21, 1834, and departed this life on Feb. 6, 1916. He was a member of the M. E. Church, South, at Blythe's Chapel for 60 years. Brother Wash loved God and the Church. He always stood by his pastor. His home was the preacher's home, and though not able to look after the affairs of the Church in the latter days of his life, he kept its interests at heart. In his last hours he expressed a willingness to go, for he knew the Savior that he had trusted for three-score years had a crown, laid up for him. Brother Rogers leaves six children, one of whom is Rev. W. F. Rogers of the North Mississippi Conference. We say to them, "Weep not, for your father is at rest." After the funeral services, which were conducted by the writer, the remains were laid to rest in the cemetery at Blythe's Chapel to await the coming of our Lord. M. E. SCOTT.

On the morning of January 21, 1916, our hearts were made sad when we received the news of the death of Mrs. ANNIE CROUCH. Mrs. Crouch was about 49 years old. She was a widow with three children when she was married to Mr. Solomon Crouch about thirteen years ago. She was a member of the Methodist Church, of which her husband was also a member. She was a true and faithful wife, mother, and sister. She will be greatly missed in her home and in the community in which she lived. The loss seems almost unbearable; but when we remember that our loss is her eternal gain, we are encouraged to live the lives of humble Christians, with the hope of meeting her in heaven. She leaves a husband, a son, a daughter, one sister, one brother, and a host of friends and relatives to mourn her departure. After the funeral service, which was conducted by her pastor, Rev. C. O. Pate, her remains were laid to rest in the Asbury Cemetery, five miles south of Waterford, Miss., to await the resurrection. May God's richest blessings rest upon the bereaved ones. A FRIEND.

Waterford, Miss.

The subject of this sketch, Mr. ALBERT MAGRUDER McATEE, was born in Attala County, Miss., on Oct. 11, 1884. He was the eldest son of William and Emma McAtee and was such a reliable boy that, by the time he was twelve years of age, they began to turn the business affairs over to him, and even after he married Miss Katherine Neaves on Sept 3, 1909, he continued to live at home until he came to Tchula, Miss., as manager of Warfield plantation. Here, as everywhere else, he formed many close friends, as he was a man of high moral character. As a son, husband, father and friend, he shone forth as an example for his fellowmen. His mother says of him: "He was always a dutiful and loving son: I always felt that any matter of business was safe in his hands; it was my delight to trust him." He professed faith in Christ during the great Kelly meeting held at Tchula in July, 1915, and became a member of the M. E. Church, South, in which he was ever faithful, always attending Sunday school and church, and ever demonstrating to the world the genuineness of his faith. T. F.

Mrs. SARAH ANGELINE McCASLAND (nee McClendon) was born in Claiborne Parish, Louisiana, near Lisbon, on August 1, 1855, and died in Homer, La., on Sept. 30, 1915. She was married to Mr. B. B. McCasland on Dec. 21, 1876. Of this marriage were born eleven children, nine girls and two boys, and all live to mourn their mother's death except one boy who died in infancy. There are now ten grandchildren. Her husband still lives also to mourn the loss of a loving wife. Mrs. McCasland joined the M. E. Church, South, at the age of eleven years, and lived a consistent member of that Church until her death. She was laid to rest in the Arlington Cemetery, at Homer, La., in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends, on October 1, 1915. It is fitting to say of Mrs. McCasland that no mother was more loving and affectionate in her family relations than she. None could have been more attentive to the welfare, physical and moral, of those in her care than she. None had a sweeter or more even temperament. As neighbor and host her conduct was always ideal. As a worshiper of the lowly Nazarene, she always followed in the path in which his footsteps led. The writer of these lines knew her for many years, and can say, in truth, hers was an ideal life as a wife, mother, friend, and neighbor. Mrs. E. H. FORSTAN.

RALLYING TO EMORY UNIVERSITY.

In reading the copies of our exchanges which have reached us within the past few days, we have been much gratified to note what seems to be an earnest awakening upon the part of a number of our Annual Conferences east of the Mississippi River to the importance of doing something at once in a financial way for Emory University. A large part of the $500,000 pledged by the city of Atlanta has been raised, and it is stated that there is no doubt that the entire amount will be forthcoming at an early date; a campaign is being launched to cover the entire State of Georgia, with Bishop Candler to lead it, the aim being to raise $1,000,000; the State of Alabama has projected a canvass for $50,000, under the direction of Dr. J. S. Frazer, of Montgomery, with a view to constructing a building on the Emory University Campus, to be known as "Alabama Hall," and the Raleigh Christian Advocate has sounded a bugle call in North Carolina, which we are carrying on another page, and the Methodists of that splendid old commonwealth will doubtless soon be giving a good account of themselves in the promotion of this cause, under the inspirational leadership of Bishop John C. Kilgo, who has done so much for Christian education in the South.

These reports are, indeed, encouraging, and we trust that these activities are but the forerunners of others elsewhere. Every Conference ought now to swing into line and lend a helping hand to this movement, that Emory University may be established upon a scale that will leave it second to no institution in the South. It does not now belong to Georgia alone, but to the whole Church; and the entire portion of the connection embraced in its patronizing territory should feel equally the obligation to equip and support it. It is high time for all to get busy—the next General Conference is only two years off.

What is Mississippi going to do to help her University—it is now truly in part HERS? Our young ministers are already going there to fit themselves for their life-work. By every token, it devolves upon her to do her full part. A movement is under way to project a campaign within her bounds in the immediate future, with a Commissioner in the field to carry it forward. He will need the hearty co-operation of the preachers and people if he is to succeed to the extent that he ought. Let the way be opened for him everywhere, and let the response to his appeals be prompt, cheerful, and generous. We believe that the 125,000 Methodists in the Magnolia State will make a record in this movement that is highly creditable if the cause at stake is laid impressively upon their hearts. Indeed, in whatever else we may fail, we must not fall short in this undertaking. We have refused to be bribed by Mr. Carnegie's offer of great sums of money to surrender the control of our higher educational work, and we have proclaimed to the world our purpose to build, and own, and operate our own institutions of learning, and for us now to refuse to make good this proclamation would leave us in a pitiable plight.

Of our ability to do something that is respectable and worthy of our great State, there is not the slightest doubt. There are many Methodists in Mississippi who ought to make contributions of considerable size toward the equipment of our new University, and there are scarcely any who ought not to give something before the campaign is ended. There are local enterprises, here and there, which are of much importance and the needs of which we would not depreciate; but, as we stated in the Advocate last week, we consider the work of establishing our two new Universities upon a safe and adequate basis the most imperatively urgent task that is now before the Church. This is true, because the fate of our whole educational system is largely bound up in the success or failure of these institutions. Such a call as this rarely comes to a Church in its entire history, though it should cover centuries. It should not be permitted to go unheeded, no matter to what extent it may involve sacrifice upon the part of Southern Methodists. This is a sublime opportunity for us to demonstrate our devotion to our great Church as a whole and our unswerving loyalty to the noblest Christian ideals.

Mississippi Methodists can not afford to be found wanting in this time of crisis and opportunity. And we do not believe that they will be.

"LET NOT YOUR HEART BE TROUBLED."

There are many evils which beset the Christian pilgrim in his journey through the world to the Celestial City, but perhaps none is more frequently felt and harder to resist than despondency. Bunyan has done well in representing it as a slough into which the unwary traveler along the road of life falls by mischance. It lies in the path of all who travel any considerable distance along life's busy way. Often men who withstand every other danger sink deep within this miry pool. Witness Elijah under the juniper tree and Jonah and the gourd. Men often go from the highest state of elation to the deepest depths of despair; an unusual amount of joy is liable to be followed by melancholia in its worst form. But why should a servant of God worry? Even though he may live in a stormy time and be surrounded by perpetual gloom, behind the clouds are God and the shining hosts of heaven, and in his soul are to be found a joy and peace which the world can not give and which it can not take away. Christ has said, "I am with you always, even unto the end of the world," and the Christian knows that he will faithfully fulfill his promise. If God be with us, then all is well. Despite the cry of calamity howlers, and though it may now seem that vice is on the throne and that truth is on the scaffold, the ultimate triumph of the right is sure and certain. Christ has founded his Church upon a rock and has declared that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. Ecclesiastical bodies may rise and fall; they are created by men; they have their work to perform, and when that is done they may cease to be, but the Invisible Church of God, founded by God himself, is eternal. The finger of time leaves no mark upon it, and in the end it will triumph over all its enemies, dethroning vice and enthroning truth.

ROBERT EDWIN MEEK.

TRUE MANHOOD AT A PREMIUM.

One of the effects of the great European war has been largely to push aside men of rank and bring to the front men of capacity, whether of aristocratic breeding or not. In great crises, when the fate of nations is trembling in the balance, the individual who possesses the most strength and ability to serve is the one who is in demand. The New York Independent, in an editorial, recently called attention to the fact that the most outstanding figure in Great Britain to-day is Lloyd George, the little Welshman, who before the outbreak of the present tremendous conflict was not very highly regarded by the ruling class in England. But when the time came that the safety of the Empire was in jeopardy and there was a search for genuine manhood to save the day, men of titles had to step back and let the little commoner have the reins. True greatness does not inhere in lineage, or estates, or the trappings of office, but in heart, mind, and character—in the capacity to serve. In the beginnings of governments the actual leader of a tribe or people was their king.

The real nobility of earth is to be found among the toilers. To do unselfishly needed and helpful things, is to be godlike and great. Jesus said, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." A nation's most valuable asset is its working people; and its idlers are to it a source of weakness and reproach, whether they be rich or poor.

"The noblest men that live on earth
Are men whose hands are brown with toil;
Who, backed by no ancestral graves,
Hew down the wood and till the soil,
And win thereby a prouder name
Than follows king's or warrior's fame.

"The working men, whate'er their task,
Who carve the stone, or bear the hod,
They wear upon their honest brows
The royal stamp and seal of God;
And worthier are their drops of sweat
Than diamonds in a coronet.

"God bless the noble working men,
Who rear the cities of the plain,
Who dig the mines, who build the ships,
And drive the commerce of the 'main'
God bless them! for their toiling hands
Have wrought the glory of all lands."

Ruskin said: "Sunshine is delicious, snow is exhilarating; there is no such thing as bad weather—only different kinds of good weather." God's dealings with us are good—all good. He deals in love, in wisdom, and he gives his grace and strength. All his dealings are different kinds of good dealings.—H.

THE HUMBLE WORKER.

I have no gift of eloquence
To preach, exhort, or pray;
I cannot point with glowing words
To Christ, the living way;
But I can tell how wondrous dear
My Jesus is to me,
And let his light so clearly shine
That all around may see.

I cannot cast the fisher's net
Into life's deep, dark sea;
The wisdom for that heavy task
Was never given to me;
But I can kneel upon the shore,
And pray for those who toil,
And when the boats come slowly in,
Help gather up the spoil.

The Master sees the lowest work
Of all His children true,
And in the crowning day will give
To each his honest due;
And when the sheaves are gathered in
From fields that I have sown,
I then shall take from His own hand
The palm, the robe, the crown.

THE INFALLIBLE TEST.

It is said that a friend at whose house Professor Huxley was staying asked the agnostic to go to church with him. "No," he answered, "but you stay at home and talk about religion to me." His friend refused, saying, "You are too clever for me; you'd make me doubt my religion." "Then," said Huxley, "stay at home and tell me what religion has done for you." He did so, to be thanked by Huxley with tears in his eyes for the impression his friend's recital had made upon him.

A Protestant Episcopal Bishop used this story to point an exhortation to his clergy to cultivate an experience of the things of God as an essential to successful preaching. "You are witnesses for Christianity," said Bishop Woodcock, "and you priests of God can lead no man nearer God than you have reached; you can teach him no more than you have experienced, than you have believed."—New York Christian Advocate.

DISTRACTIONS DURING PRAYER.

"Fervent prayer," says an old divine, "like a cannon planted at the gates of heaven, makes them fly open." The common fault with the most of us is our readiness to yield to distraction. Our thoughts go roving hither and thither, and we make little progress toward our desired end. Like quicksilver, our mind will not hold together, but rolls off this way and that.

How great an evil is this! It injures us, and what is worse, it insults our God. What should we think of a petitioner, if, while having an audience with a prince, he should be playing with a feather, or catching a fly?—Spurgeon.

GO YE THEREFORE AND MAKE DISCIPLES.

Replying to the question, "Why are the Socialists in Milwaukee so successful?" Victor Berger, the leader of the party in that city, replied: "Because we put nine-tenths of our campaign funds into literature, and because we have three hundred men who are pledged to get up every Sunday morning at 5 o'clock for the purpose of placing Socialist literature, printed in various languages, into the Sunday morning newspapers found upon the front doorsteps." Would it be possible to secure three hundred churchmen in any city in America to pledge themselves to arise every Sunday in the year at 5 o'clock for the purpose of placing Christian literature under the doorsteps of the people living in their communities, because they felt that the message contained in Christianity was a more vital message than that contained in Socialism?—All the World.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE MISSISSIPPI LEGISLATURE.

(From the Memphis Commercial Appeal.)

Without intending or assuming to dictate to or instruct the Legislature now in session, to call attention to a matter which might result in a serious legislative mistake, Bishop Theodore D. Bratton of the Episcopal diocese of Mississippi has prepared the following as "An Open Letter to the Members of the Legislature of Mississippi," which he thinks explains itself sufficiently, the bill referred to having been introduced in the House by Representatives Stevens of Clay and Hairston of Harrison and Jackson:

"The press reports of Feb. 15 announce the introduction for the consideration of your honorable body of a bill which, if passed, will make it unlawful for any person to serve as a teacher in a school attended by pupils of a different race from that of the teacher.' The purpose of the bill is further declared to be to prevent white people from teaching negroes.

"In a matter of this nature, which is as clearly religious as political, I cannot doubt that the representatives of the people will welcome an expression of opinion from those whom you represent. I respectfully, but earnestly, urge the defeat of this bill, which a well instructed Christian must disapprove.

"In the first place, it would mean the overthrow of long developed plans of Congregational (including several denominational, Roman Catholic and Episcopal school boards, which have been engaged in such work for the negroes. It is useless even to suggest the question, whether they have done good work which has helped rather than hindered the race problem in the South. That was a question of 40 years ago. To-day it is an anachronism even to raise the question. There are schools in Jackson and at Tougaloo, only seven miles distant, taught by the white people. I have yet to hear of one single complication that has ever arisen from that fact. It may be confidently stated that a large proportion of the population of Jackson do not even know that these schools exist.

"In the second place such a bill would limit to a damaging degree the most effective avenue through which the white race, so much older in both religious and intellectual culture, may be helpful to the negroes. It is well known to those whose lives are largely devoted to this 'greatest of American problems,' as President Cleveland characterized it, and who may therefore be said to be experts, that the right development of the negroes depends, in the last resort, upon the leaders of their own race who are developed in each generation. It is equally well known to such experts and to the negro leaders that, at this period of the negro's racial history, the excellence of their leadership depends upon the kindly, sympathetic, Christian helpfulness of those among the white race whose gifts and interests lead them to the task. It would be difficult to conceive that a people so unanimously Christian as our citizens are should not be anxious that the infant race shall have the nurture that can make the best and not the worst out of its members.

"In the third place, it would practically destroy the possibility of Christian education for the negroes. We are justly jealous for the preservation of our religious liberty. To secure and maintain it we have guaranteed such liberty at the expense of religious training in our public schools for our children. Every patriotic citizen stands for the public school system, which is to make intelligent citizens of the pupils. Where the citizen is a sovereign, the safety of the State depends upon his intelligence. The Christian goes a step farther and knows that this intelligence must be moralized by being Christianized. Therefore, every organized body of Christians has its schools for Christian education, according as the means and desires of the members provide them. Can the negro provide such schools unaided by the whites? To ask is to answer the question. And when provided by the white race, more or less of white supervision must follow. There are some remarkably able men and women among the negro teachers, but it would be vain to expect the number to be sufficiently great, at this early stage of development, to even begin to supply the need.

"In the fourth place, such a bill would cut across the general order of Him whom some of us must obey rather than men.' 'Go ye * * * preach, and teach.' All preaching is teaching—the best teaching is preaching, too. The man must represent his Lord and Master who came to save every race. I earnestly urge that you do not shackle the consciences of Christian people, that you do not force by legislative enactment an interpretation of Christian duty and opportunity that is far below that which already the earnest Christian conscience knows to be the Master's mind and purpose. Respectfully yours,

THEODORE D. BRATTON,
Bishop of Mississippi."

A LAYMAN'S VIEW.

Dear Doctor Meek: The following statement was sent out from Chicago and appeared in many of the leading secular papers of the South:

"Chicago, Feb. 18.—Representatives of the Methodist Church, South, speaking at the Conference on the Union of Methodism, at Evanston, sounded a warning to-day against the specific prohibition aimed at dancing in the doctrine of certain branches of the Church. Prof. Fitzgerald S. Parker, General Secretary of the Epworth League, Nashville; Bishop Collins D. Denny of Nashville, and Prof. Wilbur F. Tillett of Vanderbilt University, joined in the warning.

"The Methodist Church, South, Prof. Parker pointed out, has adopted in its General Rules new phases, eliminating the specific naming of the prohibited indulgences. Those, named in paragraph 271 of the Doctrines of the Methodist Episcopal Church, are:

"'Dancing, card playing, attending theaters and circuses.

"'Other branches of the Methodist denomination have prohibitions in the matter of dress, diversions, singings, readings, self-indulgence, boarding, borrowing without prospect of repaying and things that are not for the glory of God.'

"'This question is becoming the storm center of the General Conference to be held in May,' Prof. Parker said. 'A Methodist Episcopal Church, South, decision prohibits the teaching of dancing and the practice of promiscuous dancing. Wesley, the founder of the Methodist Church, said that he could not see a theatrical performance with a clear conscience, but on his way home from Oxford he stopped in London to enjoy a play and enjoyed dancing with his sisters.

"'The life of the founder of our Church must ever be reinterpreted and reapplied to the changed conditions of human life and the advancement of civilization. The hideous result of systems of casuistry are a warning to the Church of all ages against making a catalogue of sins and attaching scales of demerits thereto. In the old church a smile was considered a vice, a laugh a crime.'"

The above associated press clipping is self-explanatory. As a Christian and a Methodist, I read it with a confessed pang. Reinterpretation and reapplication to adapt the old Church Ship to the changed conditions of life and to the advanced civilization does not change the great adversary of souls. He is the same astute, wide-awake old devil. The gospel of Christ is still the power of God unto salvation. In its simplicity, definiteness, and clearness, it was Paul's sufficiency in cultured Athens, power-defied Rome, and among the fishing smacks at Corinth. It has proven the same in power and soul-reaching and saving results to a long, illustrious line of real soul-winners, even up to this advanced age. Optimistic as we may be, our beloved Church and land were never in greater danger of being engulfed by low ideals and compromises with the world than now.

The enemy of souls is no respecter of persons, and he will enter through every open door and through every possible channel. Making a catalogue of sins, or giving special emphasis to the predominant evils that are running rampant within the folds of our Church, and in the social circles, leaving a trail of sorrow and blight of which children's children will not have known the latest limit, may not be up to date and of the highest so-called ethics, but in the name of our Lord let us not, as individuals or as a Church, at the risk of such a sacrifice, stand speechless.

By an almost unanimous vote of both branches of our State Legislature, now in session at Jackson, there has just been adopted (the Governor by voice and signature approving the bill) the most advanced and aggressive chapter (to be placed in the Code) against the whiskey evil and its concomitants that has ever been written. During the years agone the prayers and souls of mothers, wives and sisters, coupled with the chivalry, devotion and labor of husbands and sons, have been against this monster evil and wrong. Mississippi's prohibition record has been one of unbroken aggressiveness. Not one foot of ground has ever been lost; not a single retrograde step taken, and yet the recent chapter has specified, catalogued, named by name, pointed out and so cornered this great agency of the devil, until nothing is to be taken for granted—not even a police officer, a magistrate in the lower court, or a judge in the higher court can have the faintest just ground for a possible erroneous interpretation of what the lawmakers intended.

Some, even in our own ranks, were wont to say, "Just lay down in some succint way or form what we want; state in nicety of terms the general principle; and individual conscience will do the rest, and the desired end will be reached." This policy, in its true analysis and results, has ever proven license. The State Prohibition Executive Committee, after years of experience, prayer and thought, saw otherwise, and found that nearly seven thousand well chosen words and terms were necessary to point out and guard against this enemy. The Legislature and Governor say it in the same light; hence that bill will prove effective.

Brethren, these are times for fasting, prayer and activity. Let the cry of our hearts be for the old, God-honored paths. Under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, let us pay and keep paid the price for answered prayer; then there will be no quibbling as to the known causes that have brought the deplorable spiritual devastation.

In faith and prayer.

A DISCLAIMER.

(Reprinted from the Tennessean and American by request of Dr. F. S. Parker.)

Kindly allow me to disclaim absolulely and most emphatically the construction placed by a special dispatch upon some remarks of mine made at the Conference on Methodist Union in Evanston, Ill., the 17th instant.

The article in The Tennessean and American of this day, dated Chicago, Feb. 18, is misleading in title: "Dancing No Sin, Say Methodists from Nashville." This report can have been founded only upon my comparison of the position of the Methodist Episcopal Church, North, with that of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The former has specific legislation against "dancing, card playing, games of chance, attending the theater, circuses and horse races." The latter has only the general rule that forbids "the taking of such diversions as cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus." I cited the Episcopal decision of 1858, which construes teaching and practicing dancing as violations of the general rule and justified the historical construction placed upon this rule by Methodists by words of John Wesley, quoted from his sermon on the "More Excellent Way," printed in the "Arminian Magazine" in 1787, when he was 84 years old. By way of contrast, I related the fact that Wesley, the Oxford undergraduate, danced with his sisters in the Epworth rectory, and on his way through London to visit an aunt saw a celebrated play. This was more than sixty years earlier than the utterance quoted.

I further pointed out the dangers of a casuistical cataloguing of sins with penalties attached after the manner of the Mediaeval Penitential. Certain forms of immorality are specifically condemned in the New Testament; but the standard of the Christian man rises high above these prohibitions, which are designed for the immature. The law of the Christian is the application to his own life questions of the principles that ruled the life of Christ. The article quoted makes me say that "the life of the Founder of our Church must ever be reinterpreted and reapplied to the changed conditions of human life. In the old Church a smile was considered a vice and a laugh a crime." In the first part of this quotation, I referred to Christ, not Wesley, and spoke not of "our Church," but of the Church Universal, of which we speak in the creed as "the holy catholic Church." The latter part of the quotation is wrongly ascribed to me. I said no such words. I have several times read and heard them, but I never uttered them.

I desire to say that no champion of the dance or of any other of the worldly amusements commonly understood to be condemned by the Methodist Church was heard or could have been heard in the Church Union Conference. Methodism throughout the land still stands upon her historic position.

I regret that the names of Bishop Denny and Prof. Tillett should have been associated with mine in this misconstruction of my own position. I have no authority to say anything for either of these distinguished gentlemen; but I am quite sure that they would not in silence have heard from me or any other minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, any such utter misstatement of the position of their Church.

THE EVIL OF TRYING IMPROPERLY TO FORCE A HARVEST.

Writing on "The Biology of the Church" in the January number of the Biblical Review (New York), Rev. Albert Clark Wyckoff, A. B., B. D., distinguishes very impressively between the Church as an "organization" and the Church as an "organism." The former view he thinks is largely a misconception that leads to many unwholesome results. One of these is the adoption of high-pressure methods to secure so-called converts and new members which have not come naturally and normally, because of a lack of vitality in the Church and a proper cultivation of it. In our opinion, what he has to say on this point is well worth meditating upon; so we quote it for the benefit of our readers:

"Jesus says: 'He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit.' But all fruit-bearing, according to this analogy of Jesus, is to come through the operation of the mysterious but dependable law of organic growth. Failure to secure reasonable harvests must be explained upon the very same basis as we explain the failure of one farmer and the success of another. * * *

"Too often Christian workers, for commercial reasons, for personal reasons—the reputation of a preacher, the supremacy of a local church, the growth of a denomination—have been guilty of attempting to produce unnatural and unwarranted growth, to get a harvest when there was in reality no harvest to be gathered. God foresaw that this temptation would at times become too strong for natural and redeemed man to resist, so He safeguarded the tender life of the Spirit from any such fatal perversion by placing its life under the law of organic growth. In doing this He said to man: Elsewhere you may control, you may manipulate, you may drive, you may force results to gratify your mad desire for pre-eminence, superiority, and power; but when you come within the sacred province of religion, when you undertake to work with Me in My Church, you must give Me My place, you must let Me do My part, for it is essential. You can and you must fertilize, plough, plant, and cultivate; then remember that Paul may plant and Apollos water, but it is God who giveth the increase.

"In order that we might never make a mistake at this point Jesus went out of His way to describe in detail the process of tillage. It is as follows: 'First the seed is cast into the ground, then cometh the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear. And when the fruit is brought forth he putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come.'

"There is only one justification for putting in the sickle, and that is because the harvest is come. To put in the sickle at any other time and for any other reason is unpardonable folly. When the harvest is come we need reapers to put in the sickle, and at harvest time we should not be surprised to see them gathering in the harvest. It is at this point that we come upon the place and work of the evangelist. He is a reaper who comes to help gather in the harvest. If the Church is carrying on its work as it should be carried on, there ought to come times, just as they come in the great West, when help from all quarters would need to be called upon to assist in gathering in the abundant harvest. But because we have misunderstood the nature of our work from the beginning, we also misunderstand it at the end; and so we reverse the true method, and instead of calling upon evangelists to come and help us reap our harvests, it is when we have no harvests of our own labors that we call in the evangelist and ask him to gather one for us from any source. This scheme is resorted to, not because 'the harvest is come,' but because classis or presbytery or conference or council has come, the time of reports has arrived, and we must have something to report—everything depends upon it. We must have a harvest, even though we have to gather our grapes from thorns and our figs from thistles. It is at this point where the conception of the Church as an organization works its greatest havoc.

"I once heard a minister say to his congregation: 'There are thirty-one days in December and so we must have thirty-one new members to unite with the Church for this month.' And he added: 'We will have them.' If the Church is simply an organization and you are after members to enlarge it, then this is a proper method to use; but if the Church is an organism, and you are after Christians, then there are several important factors which have no place to operate under this method, and these the very factors which are most essential to the new birth.

"This conception is not intended to leave in any mind the impression that there is to be less activity on the part of man in carrying forward the work of the Church; it is no plea for laziness. In reality it calls for more activity rather than less. It likens the Church worker to the farmer who has to keep pace with God from the time he begins to plant in the spring until the harvest is gathered. And this in a tropical climate, for there is no winter season of rest for the Church worker. We will still be called upon to do the same kinds of work we have been doing, but in a different way, and with a different spirit. We now know that we have no right to expect to gather a harvest unless we have done our part properly. We must prepare the soil, we must carefully select the seed, we must plant and cultivate properly, then, and only then, have we a right to expect results. It also tells us that if we unduly force the soil, and fail to put back upon it as much as we take off, we sterilize the field. This is the peril of short pastorates. One is in danger of becoming more concerned over the reaping than over the sowing. Wherever a church has been the victim of such a practice, even though it may seem to have been unusually successful, in reality it has suffered serious spiritual injury."

WANTED.

A working housekeeper; cooking and house work. No heavy work; a pleasant home and good wages. R. E. Lee, R. F. D., Minden, La.

AN OPPORTUNE BUT CRUCIAL HOUR.

It is doubtful if Methodism ever confronted a situation of such far reaching possibilities as it now confronts in its educational work. The loss of Vanderbilt University stirred the great heart of the Church to its depths. The General Conference convened at Oklahoma City at an opportune time. It was far enough away from the decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee for the atmosphere to clear and for the Church to find its bearings, and yet not sufficient time for the zeal of the Church to cool and lose the momentum which that seemingly untoward event furnished. The greatest minds of the Church, under the impulsion of the most intense interest, grappled with the situation and evolved an educational policy that challenges the admiration of the entire Church, and elicits its earnest endeavor to carry it forward to completion.

Those of us east of the Mississippi River are directly concerned with the establishment of Emory University, Atlanta, Ga. A good beginning has already been made, but it is only a beginning. Its growth has been marvelous to this time, but there has not yet been time enough to do more than make a beginning. The munificent gift of Mr. Asa G. Candler sounded a buzle call to the whole Church and inspired confidence in the success of the undertaking. The City of Atlanta is now in the midst of a campaign to secure $500,000 for this institution apart from the gift of Mr. Candler, and the news comes to us that the success of this undertaking is already assured. Plans have been formulated, and will soon be in operation, to raise a million dollars from Georgia Methodism outside of Atlanta to keep the movement moving for a great University there. These things show how the people around its home look upon this new child of the Church.

But Emory University is not a Georgia institution. It belongs to the whole Church, and our entire territory east of the Mississippi must rally to its support. We will all be its beneficiaries. The North Carolina Conference is as truly, and as intimately related to this University as are the Georgia Conferences; that is, in its university work. We have Trinity College to do our academic work, and there is none better anywhere. With a pardonable pride we claim to lead the Church in this field of educational work, and we believe that this is generally conceded. Of course, in her field she stands first and last and everything with us. But this will not interfere with our fealty and loyalty to the great policy of the Church in the establishment of Emory University. The North Carolina Conference will do her part in this great movement.

The financial depression, caused by the first shock of the war, has lifted and the business world is rapidly adjusting itself to the new conditions. The educational world has a similar readjustment to make. The shock of this same war has shattered the foundations of the great universities of Europe. Many of their students and teachers are in the trenches, and many of them will never come back. The desolations of war will leave these institutions with depleted treasuries, and they will be in the midst of a demoralized country that will not be able soon to re-establish them. Our students can no longer look to them for the work which they have hitherto done. If the war should stop to-day, it would be generations before they could hope to come back to their old position of leadership in the education of the world. The universities of the North in our own country are not able to carry the added burden which this situation will throw upon them. The South is thrown back upon her own resources for this work as she has never done before; and under our own Southern skies we must build institutions of learning that will furnish our youth with the fullest training and the highest culture.

A deeper reason still for this work, that should appeal to the great heart of the Church, is the type of religious life that still holds its ground in the South. The eternal verities that lie at the foundation of our holy religion are more surely believed among us than among any other people on the face of the earth to-day. This may be in some measure a result of our provincialism; but, if so, it is one for which we can never be too grateful. The subtle infidelity of a rationalistic theology has influenced these Southern States in smaller measure than any other country of which we know. Our theology has not yet been bleached of its blood, and our religious conceptions robbed of their spiritual content, and our religious life despoiled of its supernatural dynamic to lift men to the higher altitudes of moral excellence. Influences tending strongly in this direction were being generated all over the continent of Europe, and were spreading like a deadly miasma over our own land. The theological thought of the world seemed drifting from the standpoint of a Revealed religion, made known to us from a supernatural source and bringing into our daily experience a supernatural power that should give men the victory over evils which they could not conquer in their own strength; and instead of this we were substituting a theology in which God had a small place and discovering a religion evolved out of the processes of man's own development. We have often thought in these recent months that the European war is God's answer to that sort of thing. It may be that He is allowing Europe's soil to be drenched in the blood of its choice youth, and her high seats of learning despoiled of their prestige, that He might save for himself a spot here in this sunny southland where He could erect anew an altar of worship stained with his own blood, and create a new leadership for the world that would acknowledge the sovereignty of his own mighty personality.

Now this movement of our Church to construct anew our educational policy at a time like this, and in the presence of this changing order in the world's educational life, is the providential doorway to Methodism's leadership in the new era that is before us. This throws upon Methodism a tremendous responsibility. Who knows but that we have come to the throne for such a time as this? It has been the fortune of Methodism to move in the light of world visions. Her human founder declared that the world was his parish, and our Church has ever had the vision of a world-wide mission of the gospel. Our Christ, as we have understood it, never died for anything less than the redemption of all men, and we have led the world to believe that the atonement is sufficient for the salvation of every man. Methodism has never failed in her world-wide purposes, and she will not fail in this hour of educational crisis. This country must be saved from the perils of a secularized educational policy, and Southern Methodism must lead the way. It is for this that we are building. Brethren, let's go to the task.—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

WORTH THINKING ABOUT.

Morality in writing! Did you ever think of it? We are not speaking of the subjects discussed by writers, but just simple handwriting. Is there any morality in this? Certainly there is. Every one who has once learned to form the letters of the alphabet commits a crime when he writes so carelessly that another cannot read easily and certainly what he has written. Bad writing grows out of selfish carelessness and indifference to the interests of others. When the writer forms his letters so carelessly that he who receives his communication must take fifteen minutes to read it, when it should be read in five minutes, he has stolen ten minutes of the time, to say nothing of the irritation caused. Every business man knows that many hours of valuable time are stolen from him in this way. When manuscript is prepared for the printer in this careless way, the typesetter must waste much time in deciphering it, and at last only guess at its meaning. Then the proof-reader must lose more time in guessing whether the typesetter was right or not. All this wasted time must be paid for, but the careless writer who has stolen this time does not pay the bill. And if the guessing is not correct, and the letter is not properly answered or the communication is not properly printed, the writer is much offended and gets mad because mistakes were made. Then letters of explanation must be written. The writer never realizes that the bad writing is responsible. The careless writer not only violates the Eighth Commandment, but he also violates the Golden Rule, for he certainly does not do to others as he would have others do to him. Moral: take time to write carefully or get a typewriter.—Presbyterian of the South.

OUR CHURCH.

Dedicated to the Carrollton Avenue, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, on its Thirtieth Birthday.

By Miss Ellie Carver Jamieson.

We love our blest house of prayer
Because we meet our Father there.
Sometimes sin is our only plea,
But still He waits for you and me.

He waits for us—oh! Love Divine,
This precious promise yours and mine.
He bends a tender, list'ning ear,
Our pray'rs to grant, our praise to hear.

Before we ask He knows our needs,
But waits our hungry souls to feed;
He bids us hear His message sweet
And tarry at the mercy-seat.

Together round His throne we wait,
And plead our cause for Jesus' sake;
He knows, He sees each heart's desire,
And gives us what our wants require.

Dear Heav'nly Father, hear our plea:
In tender mercy grant that we
Together may behold Thy face
And sing the story saved by grace.

And when the Church for whom Christ died
At last becomes His holy bride,
May we, a firm, unbroken band,
Eat the blest supper of the Lamb.

Feb. 18, 1916.

It costs the United States Government $7,000,000 a year to finance its printing plant, which is said to be the largest in the world. At the present time a great waste is occasioned by the fact that each Congressman supplies his constituents with such publications as are placed at his disposal, whether they are of interest to them in their work or not. A bill has been introduced in Congress to remedy this by letting each representative have sent out as much as $1800, and each Senator as much as $2200 worth of such documents as he thinks will be of interest to the people that he represents. Should this bill be passed, the full amount allowed each Congressman can then go for one or more publications as his judgment may deem best.

Our Advocate Campaign

We give below the number of new subscribers to the Advocate that have been sent in during the months of December, January, and February. The figures speak for themselves and no comment is needed. We will only say that the first months of the year are the best in which to work for the Conference organ, and that it is quite as important for renewals to be secured in every charge as it is to get new subscriptions. The latter only, however, are given in this exhibit. The next statement will be published in our first issue in April.

RELIGIOUS CONDITIONS IN CALIFORNIA.

Some weeks ago Rev. Carlton D. Harris, the accomplished editor of the Baltimore Southern Methodist, after a visit to California, wrote as follows concerning the religious conditions existing in that State:

"Californians never cease to boast of their incomparable climate and the people who move there soon become intoxicated with the same metaphorical spirit. We heard of a man who went West for his health, and in the first letter that he wrote back to his friends he said that he was ten years younger; in the second he wrote he was ten additional years younger. Then there was a silence and his friends wrote to know what had become of him and learned that he had died of Cholera Infantum.

"But we never heard any Californian boast of the growth and power of religion, or the victories of the Church. The nomenclature of the country would lead one to believe that religion would find a congenial atmosphere there. Everywhere there is Saint this or Saint that. Many of the largest cities begin with 'San' or 'Santa,' one meaning 'saint' and the other meaning 'holy' in Spanish. The Santa Fe Railway has a train called the 'Saint' that runs from San Francisco to Los Angeles, and one that returns called the 'Angel.' There are more saintly names and less saintly people in California than any country we ever saw. One reason is that owing to the climate it is difficult to get people indoors to church. We would suggest open-air services. We met a gentleman who was an official in his church when he lived in the East, who confessed that he had not been to church for two years. He said Sunday was the day to take trips and worship Nature's God. That is a good way to become an infidel, for Nature does not sufficiently reveal the God for whom the soul longs. It goes without saying that in the cities theaters and almost everything else are open on Sundays. At Los Angeles one night several of our young people strolled into a dance hall near our hotel and heard the manager announce through a megaphone that a dance would be held there Sunday night for which fifty cents admission would be charged, and the proceeds would be devoted to the Methodist Hospital. When we spoke of this to a prominent Methodist, he said that a well-known Methodist clergyman of Detroit preached every Sunday night in the hall following the dance, and the dancers in consequence were friendly to the Methodists. Now, what would John Wesley say to such a mixing of the world and the Church? There seems to be no antagonism to the Church in the West, but simply an overwhelming desire on the part of the people to lead a careless, happy-go-lucky life, as far as religion is concerned."

From the foregoing it would seem that the religious conditions in the greatest State of the Far West are most deplorable. Yet there are some who apparently would have the Churches to come to that section to learn how to do modern and effective religious work. A good answer to make to such suggestions is, "Physician, heal thyself." When it has been shown that the use of God's house for grand opera and moving pictures shows on the Sabbath, and for concerts, minstrel exhibitions, and various kinds of secular things during the week, have Christianized the people on the Pacific slope, it will be ample time to consider the question of adopting these methods in the East.

IN MEMORY OF REV. G. W. BACHMAN.

By Mrs. H. B. Perritt.

Thou art gone, but not forgotten'
We who loved thee, love thee still,
Though we bow in meek submission
To our Father's blessed will.

Far above the purple ether,
Far beyond our human sight,
Thou art gone to seek a mansion
In a city fair and bright.

Thou hast passed beyond the portals
Of that blessed heavenly home,
Where no sin can ever harm thee,
Where no sorrows ever come.

Thou art walking with the Savior,
Thou hast seen the Father's face,
Thou dost now behold the glory
Of the millions saved by grace.

How I wish we might behold thee
In that land beyond the skies,
Where the flowers bloom forever,
Where the daylight never dies'

Could we see what thou art seeing,
Could we know what thou dost know,
Would we grieve that thou hast left us?
Would we have thee back? Ah, no!

Though thy body now art lying
'Neath the cold and silent sod,
Yet again we shall behold thee
In the city of our God.

In England all physicians under 45 years of age who can be spared by the communities which they serve are requested by the Government to put themselves at the disposal of the authorities and to take a commission in the army or navy if required.

A naturalist has announced that the busy bee works only three hours out of twenty-four. If this be true the nice little saying, "How doth the busy bee improve each shining hour?" should be heard no more, and the expression "as busy as a bee" will lose much of its force.

An ax, said to have been the one which Lincoln used in splitting rails, was recently brought to the attention of the general public by its owner, a citizen of a Missouri town. If genuine, this ax and the rails that were split with it, probably played quite an important part in the formation of Lincoln's character.

Presumably in order to distinguish corresponding hours of day and night without the use of a. m. and p. m., Denmark adopted the twenty-four hour system this year. Two o'clock p. m. is to be 14 o'clock and so on, midnight being 24 o'clock. Before we know it, this novelty will be advocated by some Quixotic American.

To-day the British Navy is twice as strong as the combined navies of Germany and Austria, which now double the fighting power of the United States Navy. The French Navy is from 15 to 25 per cent stronger than our Navy. It is much to be regretted that so great and glorious a nation as ours should not be better represented on the high seas.

In the United States a million and a quarter dollars have been deposited in the school savings banks by 217,000 pupils. Americans are far too extravagant, and if those now growing up are taught to be thrifty, it will help our country in the years to come when its population shall reach a height at which extravagance can no longer be indulged in without going into national bankruptcy.

The commission for the relief of Belgium has sent the Belgians 296,000 pairs of shoes since the beginning of its winter campaign. There were 100,000 pairs for women, 60,000 pairs for children, 48,000 pairs for boys, 18,000 pairs for girls, and 40,000 pairs for men. Twenty-five thousand dollars worth of leather was also sent for use in mending old shoes and for placing leather on wooden soles.

LOUISIANA WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

By Mrs. C. F. Niepergall.

Water, water everywhere, it seemed, with just a thin, black, snake-like line showing where the track curved ahead; delays and inconvenience, all the usual trials of the traveler at high-water time, were the experiences of the majority of the delegates to the annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society, held in Ruston February 11-15. However, in spite of all these things, the meeting was one of the most successful in the history of the Society. Over one hundred women from all parts of the State enjoyed an unusually large, helpful and spiritual session, as well as showing their hearty appreciation of the splendid hospitality of Ruston homes.

Mrs. Bessie Lipscomb, home-base secretary, and Miss E. Haskins, editor of the "Young Christian Worker," came down from Nashville, and did much toward making the meeting one of interest and helpfulness.

The daily Bible lessons, led by Mrs. George S. Sexton of Shreveport, showed the thought and consecration of one who lives close to the Master and led all who listened "into the secret of his presence," where vows of loyalty and better service were renewed.

Reports showed increased interest along all lines, and this report was verified by the increase shown in the finances.

A campaign for new auxiliaries, new members, and a re-awakening of old members is being launched, this movement to culminate in May in a "whirlwind" campaign. Every Auxiliary is urged to begin this campaign now.

Printed on slips of blue paper and scattered throughout the audience at the various sessions was the Rally Song for the young people:

"Hear the Rally cry of Jesus;
Follow me, disciple true;
Do not fail in love or service.
For the Lord hath need of you."

The "Lord hath need of every woman," and the rally cry has gone forth from the meeting at Ruston: Let none fail him in the love and service for which he asks.

A WORD CONCERNING THE MINUTES.

Dear Dr. Meek: As Editor of the Louisiana Conference Minutes, I claim the privilege of a word.

The brethren have been kind and indulgent with me and the comments I hear are in the main quite kind; but occasionally I hear an under note not so kind. Sometimes it is the Editor and sometimes the printer who is blamed. Both have tried to do their duty, but were hampered by reason of others, and thus the delay in getting them out.

Our unusually efficient Secretary was rushed with work after Conference, having to visit several other Conferences, and hence placed the proceedings of the Louisiana Conference in our hand some four weeks late. For this he is not responsible, having done all that he could under the pressure.

The statistics had to be held up until the statistical secretary could correspond with the presiding elders and secure correct reports from many charges in each district.

Much, if not all, of the apparent decrease in our reports at Conference was by reason of mistakes in the reports made by pastors.

When report blanks are filled in during the sessions of the Conference, and with one's knee used as a table, many mistakes must occur.

Thanking the brethren for their considerateness,

I am sincerely,

JNO. F. FOSTER.

WANTED!

"Wanted! young feet to follow
Where Jesus leads the way,
Into the fields where harvest
Is ripening day by day;
Now, while the breath of morning
Scents all the dewy air;
Now, in the fresh, sweet dawning,
O follow Jesus there!

"Wanted! young hands to labor;
The fields are broad and wide,
The harvest waits the reaper
Around on every side.
None are too poor and lowly,
None are too weak or small,
For in his service holy
The Master needs them all."

HOW ABE BECAME A LAWYER.

He was sitting in front of his country store one sultry day in the early summer of 18—. Long, lank slab-sided, Abe was a fair type of the pioneer Kentucky youth of the early days of the century. He had gone into the country-store business because that was the thing that happened to turn up when he was "out of a job." How he chanced to come to that particular town in Illinois from his native place in "Old Kaintuck" it would take too long to tell. Suffice it to say that there he was, and there he expected to stay indefinitely. But something occurred on this sultry afternoon that completely changed the current of his life.

Nothing had happened for a good half hour, and Abe was beginning to think that trade was rather more than dull, when all at once a nondescript vehicle hove in sight—a sort of improvised "prairie schooner"— and bore down on the store. As it came in front of the rude porch, the schooner halted, and a man, whom Abe recognized as a small and very shiftless farmer who lived some distance out of S———, peered out from behind the canvass cover and said:

"Hello, Abe!"

"Hello, Joe! Where are you bound for in that outlandish old rig?"

"Wal, I've kinder petered out on th' ole farm, an' I thought 's haow I'd try it a leetle further west. So we've pulled up stakes an' er a-going' ter see what we kin dew sum'ers else."

"Well, now, I'm sorry to hear we're going to lose you. Can I do anything for you?"

"Wal, nothin' much in perticler; but I've got a bar'l here in th' waggin ther's rather in th' way—takes up a tarnal sight er room for the truth ont—n' I'd like ter' git shet uv it. What'll ye gimme fer 't?"

"Well, I dunno. What's in it?"

"Wal, a leetle o' most everythin.' Gimme fifty cents, an' take her."

Abe was as good-natured as he was tall, and this is saying a good deal, for he was six feet four in his stockings. Without further parley, for he was willing to do the old farmer a good turn, he went into the store, and in a moment returned with a Spanish half-dollar, which he exchanged for the "bar'l," and after a hearty farewell, the emigrants started on their hopeful westward way to further hopeless wrestling with the fate of the lazy and shiftless, and Abe was again alone. He rolled the barrel into a corner of the store, and soon forgot all about it. And there it stood unnoticed for many weeks.

Toward the end of summer there came another day when business was slack. Nobody seemed to want anything at the store that day, and after "slicking things up," and lounging around for a while in idleness, Abe bethought him of the "bar'l" in the corner, and concluded, as he had nothing else to do, that he would investigate its contents. Wheeling it out by the door, he took out one worthless bit of rubbish after another—odds and ends that even the close-fisted old farmer had no use for—till he came to the very last of the contents a large, well-worn volume, which first attracted his attention by its weight, and then, as he carelessly opened it, by the first words that caught his eye.

"Blackstone's Commentaries." He had heard the name, but never had seen the book before. He glanced at the opening words, and was captivated by the style. Tumbling the other contents of the barrel back again, he sat down to read. Soon he was completely absorbed. Hour after hour he read, every moment becoming more deeply interested. And when at last some one came in to make a purchase, Abe could hardly pause long enough to attend to the customer, who was greatly mystified by the unusual curtness of Abe's replies to the current chaff of the day.

From that time on every spare moment was devoted to the reading of the fascinating volume—more fascinating to this gawky youth of the prairie than were ever "Robinson Crnso" or "The Arabian Nights" to the schoolboy of the more favored cast. He read and re-read, until he had not only mastered the contents, but had nearly learned them by heart.

The fall political campaign came on, and the "boys" chose Abe as one of the delegates to the Whig county convention. During the progress of the convention, while waiting for committee reports, some of the boys thought it would be fun to get Abe to make a speech. They had never heard him make one, but they all knew him for an extremely entertaining talker, and a story teller of singular fluency and humor, when sitting in the store on long winter evenings. So they began to call for him, and at last, with many protestations, he was persuaded to mount the platform. To the surprise of everyone, he made the speech of the day, and was rewarded with a perfect tempest of applause.

At the close of the session, a fine-looking old gentleman approached him. Abe knew him by sight and reputation, but had never spoken to him. He was a judge, and the leading lawyer of all that part of Illinois.

"Abe," said the judge, "you ought to study law."

"I?" replied Abe, in astonishment. "Why, I never thought of such a thing. And besides, I can't afford it."

"Yes, you can," persisted the judge. "You just go home, sell out your business at once, and come into my office at ——— and read law. It won't cost you anything but your board, and at the end of six months I'll admit you to the bar."

Overwhelmed with astonishment, but delighted beyond all measure, Abe did as he was bid, and in six months, as promised by the judge, he was a member of the Illinois bar, and launched on a career that placed the name of Abraham Lincoln among the highest on the roll of "the few, the immortal names, that are not born to die."

* * * * * * *

Now this is, let me tell you, in all the essential particulars a true story. It was told to a friend of mine by Mr. Lincoln himself, who said that the finding of that volume of "Blackstone" was the turning point in his life.—T. O. C., in the Examiner.

HER DAUGHTER'S BIBLE.

"There's only one thing more," said Mrs. Allen, as she consulted her shopping list. "Dorothy wants a Bible for a birthday present. An inexpensive one will do just as well, of course, until she is older."

"May I tell you a story?" asked Mrs. Foster. "When my daughter Gladys was ten years old her grandmother gave her a Bible for a Christmas present. The gift was so attractively bound that I thought of asking Gladys to lay it aside for a year or two, and carry a cheaper Bible to Sunday school; but somehow I neglected to do so. One Sunday afternoon several months later Gladys came to me in great distress. 'O mother,' she cried, 'I've lost my precious, precious Bible!' I put the baby in the crib and joined in the search. When at last we found the lost treasure, my daughter gathered it to her breast.

"'Now I can mark another love verse,' she said rapturously as she opened a box of crayons. 'Mr. Rollins explained it to us in church. I've got thirty already.' And she turned to the fifteenth chapter of St. John and placed a red dot beside the 'love verse'—the text of the morning's sermon.

"'What are the blue dots for?' I asked as she turned several leaves.

"'Oh, these are the prayer verses,' was the quick reply, 'and the bright orange ones are the faith verses, and, O mother, there's your favorite verse marked with a yellow star.' I took the Bible and read, 'When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee,' and I well remembered the hour when I repeated those words to Gladys. My mother was severely ill at the time. 'And there's Mr. Rollins' favorite verse,' the child went on, 'and my Sunday school teacher's, and Aunt Ellen's, and grandmother's—and here's mine!' she finished triumphantly as she turned to the beautiful words, 'Suffer little children.'

"As I felt the touch of the soft leather and noticed the quality of the paper, I was grateful to the wise grandmother who chose a Bible that would stand many years of constant usage. No other Bible would ever mean so much to my daughter as the one with which she was growing up."

"How many things there are for mothers to learn!" said Mrs. Allen, softly. "We will select Dorothy's birthday present together."—The Youth's Companion.

A MISLEADING DISPATCH.

A few days ago, when a conference on Methodist Unity (not officially authorized) was being held at Evanston, Illinois, a sensational report of what was said concerning the so-called "questionable amusements" was sent out by the Associated Press—the names of Bishop Collins Denny, Dr. F. S. Parker, and Dr. W. F. Tillett being given prominence in it. We are carrying on another page a communication from Dr. Parker, in which he disclaims the extreme statements accredited to him, and affirms that the whole occurrence was much misrepresented by the widely published press dispatch. We had but little doubt when we saw the alleged utterances of these brethren in the public prints that they were garbled and misleading, and we are glad to know that this is true.

We have received several articles for publication dealing with this dispatch, but we are printing only one of them—that of Mr. L. P. Brown, of Meridian, Miss., which does not discuss the now discredited statements scattered abroad, but the principle involved, for which some of the brethren from the South seem to have stood, namely, that Methodists in their Book of Discipline should not specifically condemn dancing, card-playing, and theater-going. We regarded this as a matter of such importance that we felt it would be improper not to let Brother Brown express himself on the subject, and we permitted the garbled Chicago dispatch to be reproduced in his communication (knowing that the disclaimer would follow), because it was necessary to make it intelligible—we thought also it might make Dr. Parker's statement somewhat clearer to our readers.

We desire also to state, in this connection, that we stand squarely with Brother Brown on this issue; and, since what is affirmed to be the sentiment of our Church concerning this question is apparently being used to aid that element in the Northern Methodist Church which is seeking to strike out of their Discipline the chapter on worldly amusements, it is our purpose to discuss this matter at some length in the next issue of the Advocate.

As a matter of fact, our Church has never expressed herself adversely to cataloguing specifically dancing, card-playing, and theater-going as things to be avoided by her members. For sixteen years—from 1890 to 1906—she carried in her Discipline an explicit and emphatic chapter on the subject, and the manner in which it was gotten rid of is a story that we think the whole Church needs to know.

For our part, we hope that the Northern Church will stand firm in its present position, as it did at the General Conference of 1912, after a protracted and stormy debate, and that our next General Conference will replace in our Book of Discipline the discarded chapter, or one similar to it. If the Evanston incident shall serve to focus the attention of Southern Methodists upon the situation that our Church is now in respecting this question, it may, after all, do great good.

AN ARTICLE WORTH READING.

We are carrying on another page an article, entitled "The Evil of Improperly Forcing a Harvest," which we hope will be carefully read. In our judgment, it emphasizes an important truth which ought always to be kept in mind by Christian workers, and especially by Christian ministers. To be sure, one cannot be too zealous and constant in one's efforts to win immortal souls to Christ, but it does not lie within man's power to regenerate men, nor is it his province to tell when that great work has been wrought in human hearts. Human agency, of course, usually has a part in opening the way for the operation of Divine power, but the Holy Ghost must effect the new birth, and testify to the changed soul that it is a new creature in Christ Jesus.

The practice of placing little emphasis upon the necessity of regeneration and hurrying people by various enticements into the Church is, we think, one of the growing evils of our time. It was, in our opinion, an unfortunate day for Southern Methodism when the rule of receiving members "on probation" was swept away. It was argued when this requirement was repealed that a pastor could still stop members at the door of the Church until he was convinced that they were properly instructed and prepared to be received; but, as a matter of fact, this is very rarely done. The average Church member has but little appreciation of the true significance of the solemn vows which he assumes; nor is he, in most cases, made to realize, as he should be, that the ordinances of the Church will be of little value to him except as they may lead him into a vital union with Christ and a conscious and increasing experience of grace resulting therefrom.

We confess to a strong dislike for a "mathematical" Christianity—setting out with a proclaimed purpose to save 100 souls in one place and 200 in another. Why not set out modestly, yet determinedly, to seek and save all the lost, if possible, and trust "God to give the increase."

The Church needs ministers who are Christ like enough to prefer to labor faithfully and fail, rather than to adopt spectacular and high-pressure methods and win meretricious success.

LEAVES THE SOUTHERN METHODIST CHURCH.

Dr. Richard Wilkinson, formerly pastor of our Church at Aberdeen, Miss., and of the Rayne Memorial Church of this city, and who also served for a brief period our Church at Monroe, La., announced to his congregation at Petersburg, Va., a few days ago his purpose to leave the Methodist Church and become a minister in the Protestant Episcopal Church. Dr. Wilkinson gave as his principal reason for this action that he felt that he could accomplish a larger amount of good in a settled pastorate than was possible under the four-year limit existing in our denomination. We cannot but wonder if Dr. Wilkinson felt, apart from this objection, a strong attachment to Methodism, why he did not cross over the near-by boundary line and unite with the Northern Methodists, as he was about to do some years ago, since they do not have a restricted pastorate. Being an Englishman, it is not presumable that he has any special aversion to the sentiments and ideals of the people across the Ohio.

However, one has a perfect right to unite with any Church that one may prefer, and we have no disposition to cast stones at Dr. Wilkinson for betaking himself to another fold. Methodism has been giving not a few members and ministers to other denominations ever since it has been in existence, and has yet continued to outstrip them all. We wish our brother well in the ecclesiasticism with which he has now connected himself.

We note that Dr. James Cannon, the Editor of the Baltimore and Richmond Christian Advocate, takes Dr. Wilkinson's exit from our Church as an incitement to write editorially at some length in favor of doing away with the time limit in Southern Methodism. For our part, we sincerely hope that this will not be done; for we believe that when the time limit is removed, the very heart will be taken out of our splendid itinerant system. Any one who reads the Northern Church papers knows that it is not an uncommon thing for a pastor in our Sister Church to be advertising publicly for an exchange of pastorates with some other brother; and even so great an authority as Bishop Berry recently wrote the following, in a brilliant cluster of paragraphs, in Zion's Herald: "It is reported that a few Methodist Episcopal churches will allow the Bishop to appoint the minister this spring." Do we desire such a situation in our Church?

Of course, it is said that the Bishop may still remove the preachers annually; but it would be made much more difficult for them to do so. Bishop McTyeire, who lacked much of being a weak man, in discussing this question, said: "If the people want the Bishops to move the ministers they must keep them movable." But it is said that more changes take place without the time limit than with it. This may be true, for a time, as respects a certain grade of appointments; but, if we may believe what we read, it is not true of the stronger and better charges. We have seen it stated upon what appeared to be dependable authority that the more gifted men soon find their way to the more desirable places and anchor themselves in them. Most any pastor of any shrewdness and force can so build up things about him in a charge, if he wishes to do so, that he can not be taken away without a disturbance.

We do not believe that it can be shown that Southern Methodism is suffering in the cities because of the time limit. She is fully abreast of other denominations in nearly all the leading municipalities of the South—in Memphis, Dallas, Houston, Birmingham, Atlanta, St. Louis, Nashville, and others. Even in New Orleans she is not by any means the hindmost Protestant denomination.

We believe it would be far better to extend the time limit to six years and make it universally apply, than to repeal it.

SOME SIGNIFICANT FIGURES.

The Central Christian Advocate (Kansas City) of February 16 hands out the following sobering figures:

"Taken together, the candy and gum bill of the American people exceeds a hundred million dollars a year. Speaking exactly, the census figures show that $78,000,000 a year is spent for candy, whilst the amount paid all preachers, priests and rabbis is $69,677,587 a year. The national chewing gum bill is $25,000,000 a year, while the Baptist, Presbyterian and Congregational Churches pay their preachers $22,823,000 per year. The soda water bill for the United States amounts to $120,000,000 a year, more than is spent by the entire Christian Church for all purposes. The jewelry bill is $800,000,000. These luxuries—soda water, gum, candy and jewelry—cost each family $13.70 a year. If the Churches assessed each family a minimum of $13.70 a year, there would be some one heard from; but when used for luxuries, soda water and candy there is no complaint."

Yet there are brethren not a few among us who are given to telling us how good humanity is and that the Millennium is almost at hand!

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Baptists are contemplating the establishment of a training school for Christian workers in New Orleans.

The pastors of the several Churches at Baton Rouge, La., have effected an organization. They will meet in consultation twice a month.

We are requested to state that the address of Rev. M. G. Jenkins is now Minncola, Texas, instead of 59 Virginia Ave., San Antonio, Texas.

A meeting will be held in Shreveport on March 3 in the interest of a forward educational movement in Louisiana. Bishop Atkins is expected to be present.

From Hermanville, Miss., Rev. J. W. Price writes hopefully of the present status of his work and its future outlook. He speaks in terms of high appreciation of his people.

Rev. W. D. McCullough, of Iuka, reports that his work is progressing favorably in every respect, and that his Sunday school, especially, is growing. He is serving a delightful charge.

Bishop W. R. Lambuth was in New Orleans last week on his way back from the Panama Missionary Congress. He was expected, while in this section, to deliver a lecture at Lake Charles, La.

Things are continuing to go forward on the Utica (Miss.) charge, where Rev. B. W. Lewis is the popular pastor. Brother Lewis has our thanks for one new and two renewal subscriptions, forwarded on Feb. 21.

Rev. J. W. Ramsey, of Heidelberg, Miss., sends us some additional renewal subscriptions from his charge, and adds the following reference to his work: "Everything is moving along smoothly up this way, and I am already arranging my plans for my revival meetings."

Rev. K. W. Dodson, our pastor of Lake Charles, writes: "Bishop Lambuth was here yesterday, Feb. 27, and preached for us both in the morning and evening; we certainly enjoyed the great sermons. All standing room was taken in the church. It was a great day for our congregation."

The press dispatches have announced that, because of ill health, Rev. O. J. Chandler, our pastor at Alexandria, La., has asked to be relieved of his work. Brother Chandler was transferred from the Kentucky to the Louisiana Conference last fall. He had made a fine impression in his new field.

Rev. J. H. Mitchell, of Indianola, Miss., is, as usual, bringing things to pass in his charge. What a diligent worker he is! His optimistic report of what is going on will appear in the next issue of the Advocate. His good letter brought us a club of 5 subscriptions, for which we extend to him our thanks.

Mrs. Katie Burton Moore, widow of the late Rev. M. H. Moore, was married on Jan. 25, 1916, to Rev. J. R. McGlaun, of the Alabama Conference, their present home being at Coffeeville, Clark County, Alabama. This announcement is repeated, because when made in a former issue of the Advocate an error occurred in it.

It must be that there are some people who desire to write for the Advocate, who do not often read it. Otherwise, in view of our repeated announcements that we cannot use copy written with a lead pencil, they would hardly send us articles jotted down in that manner. This has been a rule of the Advocate office for decades.

Our long-time friend, Rev. G. W. Gordon, of Noxapater, Miss., has been looking after the interests of the Advocate in his rounds, and favored us a few days since with a club of 6 subscriptions. We dare say that his people are hearing some as good preaching with Brother Gordon as their pastor as they have heard in many a day.

Rev. D. R. McDongal, of Kossuth, Miss., writes: "The trend of the work here is upward along all lines, and the outlook is for the best year in the history of this charge. After the first quarterly conference, I expect to send you a report for your 'From the Field' department. I am working to secure a club of 10 subscriptions to the Advocate."

The Aberdeen District Conference will meet this year at Vardaman, Miss., and Rev. E. H. Rook, the faithful pastor, has extended the Editor a cordial invitation to attend. It would afford us much pleasure to mingle with the brethren in that part of the field on that occasion, but whether we shall be able to do so we cannot state at present.

Rev. J. R. James, of Abbeville, Miss., writes: "It is with sadness that we announce the very sudden death of Dr. A. T. Greer of our town, which occurred in Holly Springs on the night of Feb. 24. It shocked our entire community and brought over it a cloud of sorrow and grief." We regret to be apprised of this sad occurrence, and we extend sympathy to the bereaved.

After his good work in the recent excellent revival at Biloxi, Miss., Rev. S. E. Kirby, who is in much demand as a chorister in evangelistic services, returned to Little Rock, Ark., to be at home with his wife and children for a brief season, thus securing a well earned rest. Any one desiring to communicate with him may address him in that city, at 2018 West 8th Street.

We are indebted to the following friends for two or more subscriptions, sent in within the past few days: Rev. B. P. Fullilove, Rienzi, Miss., 2; Rev. R. V. Fulton, Zachary, La., 9; Rev. L. P. Wasson, West Point, Miss., 2; Rev. A. M. Bennett, Sarah, Miss., 2; Rev. J. W. Price, Hermanville, Miss., 6; Rev. M. E. Scott, Marietta, Miss., 2; Rev. R. M. Evans, Calhoun City, Miss., 2.

We noted some days ago that a Methodist Church had adopted the plan of having a grapophone sacred concert as a part of the service to help draw the people. Is not this a rather dangerous innovation. Some progressive brother might possibly want to go a step further and have the machine to deliver a sermon from some celebrity. Where then could be Othello's occupation?

We are indebted to Rev. J. T. Lewis, of Greenville, Miss., for a club of 9 renewal subscriptions. In his letter, Brother Lewis appends the following note: "I am enjoying the additional work necessary to keep things going on properly in my third year in this responsible charge." Brother Lewis is one of the most diligent and successful pastors in the North Mississippi Conference.

Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, of Starkville, Miss., and Miss Ethel Golden will be married at the parsonage at Boyle, Miss., on March 8, with Rev. E. M. Shaw officiating. Brother Lipscomb is one of the most accomplished and largely useful ministers in the North Mississippi Conference, and Miss Golden is widely known for her noble Christian character and good works. We extend in advance our heartiest congratulations and best wishes.

In a business letter, dated February 22 and bringing us two subscriptions, Rev. R. M. Evans, of Calhoun City, Miss., says: "Rev. R. P. Goar, whom I reported to you yesterday as being seriously ill with pneumonia, is much better. I went over to Pittsboro to see him this morning." We regret to know that Brother Goar has been sick, but are pleased to be informed that he is improving, and we trust that he will soon be entirely well.

In a personal note to the Editor, Rev. W. H. Coleman, of Shreveport, Field Secretary of the Louisiana Conference, says: "The outlook for the work of my office is exceedingly encouraging. I have met the heartiest co-operation and responsiveness everywhere." Our Sunday school interests in this State are most fortunate in having Brother Coleman to give his whole time to them. A more faithful and capable worker would be difficult to find.

Rev. H. B. Thomason, of Winnsboro, La., cheered the Advocate office a few days since with a letter bringing us a club of 10 subscriptions, with a handsome check to cover the cost. And to make his communication even more welcome he added the following statements: "The cashier tells me that it will not cost you anything to collect this check. I always feel that I have done something really good for a home when I place the Advocate in it."

We extract the following from a letter from Rev. V. C. Curtis, of Lexington, Miss.: "We are maturing plans to make an addition to our church building, which will give us nine more Sunday school rooms—these are very much needed. We hope to have this extension completed and a new heating plant installed before the close of the year. Brothers Gladney and Dietrich filled their engagements with us on Feb. 22. The attendance was good and the people were much pleased."

A communication from Rev. W. A. Freeman, of Dyersburg, Tenn., brings news of the death of Mrs. Sallie Amelia Newell, widow of the late Rev. T. J. Newell, which occurred at Paris, Tenn., on Feb. 6, 1916. This announcement will touch with sorrow not a few hearts in North Mississippi, where Brother Newell wrought efficiently as a Methodist minister for many years, and where Sister Newell had a large circle of friends. A memoir of the deceased from the pen of Brother Freeman will be published in the Advocate at an early date.

The Bulletin of the First M. E. Church, South, of Baton Rouge, La., for February 20 contained the following statement: "The pastor of this church desires to go on record as earnestly opposing the street fair attachment of the Parish Fair which was maintained last year, in the hope that a reform will be instituted in this direction this fall. Also the running of the Fair on Sunday, as was done last year, was in our eyes disgraceful." No "Illy-fingered Adonis of the pulpit," desiring a truce with everything going on, is Brother Battle. He believes in standing up for righteousness.

Rev. W. H. Saunders, of Fernwood, Miss., writes as follows: "Our first quarterly conference was held this morning, Feb. 26. There was a good attendance of the official members and the reports were up to the usual high standard of this charge. The Fernwood Church reported all the Conference collections paid in full. If the other two churches would make a pull to do likewise—and it would not really require much of an effort—we could wipe all the benevolences off the slate in the outset. Brother Selby, our presiding elder, was in fine spirits, and evinced his customary skill and ability in looking after the interests of the Church."

Rev. E. B. Randle, of Springfield, Ill., an esteemed minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Rev. J. E. Scott, a well known missionary to India, who has been in the homeland for about five years and who is spending the winter in New Orleans, favored our office with a call one day last week. Brother Randle has lately spent four months at Hot Springs, Ark., in the interest of his wife's health, which we are happy to state is much improved. While there he preached several times for Dr. Copeland, pastor of our Central Church, of whose brotherliness he expressed a high appreciation. Mr. and Mrs. Randle will remain in New Orleans for a month or more. Their present address is 1531 Thalia Street.

Rev. J. A. Goad, of Myrtle, Miss., reports as follows concerning his work: "Our first quarterly conference was held last Saturday, Feb. 19. Rev. T. H. Dorsey, our new presiding elder, was at his best both in the pulpit and in the chair. He presides excellently and has a way of so impressing the officials with their responsibility to the Church as to dispose them to do their best. The board of stewards increased the assessment for the pastor over that of last year, and voted to expend $500 for the improvement of the parsonage. We have a good Sunday school at each appointment, and our prayer meeting is well attended. Our Epworth League has taken on new life and we are expecting much from our young people."

Rev. J. S. Purcell sends us the following note from Newton, Miss.: For the benefit of the many inquiring friends, will you please state that my wife, Leslie M. Purcell, who underwent four operations last Friday, Feb. 18, is much improved. She will remain at the Newton Sanitarium for some time. Dr. I. W. Cooper and Dr. W. G. Gill are great physicians and surgeons. We are very fortunate in having our dear friend, Miss Nevada Martin, a returned missionary, to care for our children while we are away from home. We are grateful to our many friends for their many kindnesses." It is with regret that we publish this account of Sister Purcell's serious illness, but we are much gratified to know that it is brightened by the prospect of her recovery.

Rev. J. H. Felts, presiding elder of the Holly Springs District, writes: "The work in this district has many features that betoken better things. My predecessor was a man of affairs. He wrought well—so well, in fact, that I can only hope to continue what he did. You, with all who know him, will regret to learn that Rev. L. A. McKeown, of Byhalia, has been quite sick for some twenty days. He is sitting up a little now, and his physician thinks that he may attempt to take up his work again by the first of March. The Lord may have made a finer man than Luke McKeown, but I haven't had the pleasure of meeting him. His people love him with a devotion that is beautiful." We do indeed regret to learn of the illness of this most worthy itinerant, who fully deserves all that Brother Felts says of him, and for whose complete restoration to health we earnestly pray.

The European War has been going on for about 18 months and during that time $27,051,000,000 has been spent and no decisive blow has yet been struck. Germany and Austria-Hungary have borrowed $10,862,000,000 of the money which has been spent, and England, France, Italy, and Russia have borrowed $16,199,000,000 of it. As a result of the war 2,990,000 men in the prime of life have been killed, more than 2,200,000 have been made prisoners, and more than 9,830,000 have been wounded temporarily or fatally, or maimed for life.

TAKES OFF DANDRUFF, HAIR STOPS FALLING

Save your Hair! Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine right now—Also stops itching scalp.

Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—now—any time—will surely save your hair.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store. You surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine. Save your hair! Try it!

On the 30th day of September, 1915, earth was made poorer and heaven richer because of the sentence of sleep that fell upon our sister, Mrs. SARAH ANGELINE McCASLAND. She passed away in her sixtieth year, neither old in years nor in spirits. There is one word that expresses better than all others her Christian character. She was faithful—a wife beloved, a mother honored, a friend unfailing, and a disciple that fully trusted her Lord. Sister McCasland was a great sufferer during the last year of her earthly pilgrimage, but she bore all with patience and cheerfulness. Death came as a release from her pain, and now with beckoning hands she bids her loved ones come onward and upward to the city of God. J. G. SNELLING.

Whereas, on December 6, 1915, God in his infinite wisdom removed from our Society one of its most faithful and beloved members, Mrs. E. H. ERVIN; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we, the members of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Church of Crawford, Miss., feel keenly the loss that we have sustained, and that her true, loyal life, given to her church, her family, and her friends, will be an inspiration to those left behind.

2. That we not only lost our senior member, but one who was always an example to us in Christian sacrifice and service.

3. That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family and pray that the loving Savior may be their constant and abiding source of comfort.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, to the Columbus Dispatch, and to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed: Mrs. G. P. Waller, Mrs. Alma McGee, Committee.

Mrs. E. V. ODEN EVANS died on Jan. 14, 1916, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. H. P. Matthews, at Greenwood, La. The deceased was born on July 11, 1849, at Bethesda, Tenn. Sister Evans had resided in this town since 1891, during which time she made many friends. In vain did loving hands do all within their power to alleviate her sufferings and keep her with us. She said she was trusting God. Hers was a busy life up to her last illness, which lasted many months. Looking on her hands, we thought of the many times they had ministered to the sick and suffering ones about her. She joined the M. E. Church when fifteen years of age. Eight grown children survive.

A precious one from us has gone,
A voice we loved is stilled;
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be filled.
Dearest mother, thou hast left us—
Here thy loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God that hath bereft us,
He can all our sorrow heal.
Yet again we hope to meet thee,
When the day of life is fled;
Then in heaven with joy to greet thee,
Where no farewell tear is shed.

A FRIEND.

Mrs. ANNIE KENNEDY COX was born in Holmes County, Miss., on Nov. 20, 1841, and died in Greenwood, Miss., on April 4, 1915. She joined the M. E. Church, South, in Crystal Springs, Miss., in early childhood. On Nov. 20, 1866, she was married to Mr. Robt. F. Cox. She is survived by three sons and two daughters.

This noble woman was a constant sufferer for several years previous to her death. The greater part of the time she was confined to her bed. The friends who visited her never went away feeling the sadness that suffering usually sends into one's heart. Her friends went to cheer and strengthen her; they came away cheered and strengthened themselves. Her's was a beautiful character.

I was her pastor in Maben, Miss., for more than two years. I found in Sister Cox a Methodist of the old school. She loved to talk of her former pastors, her Church, and God. Adverse criticism found no place in her conversations. There were too many good things in the world to talk about for that precious soul to waste her time in talking about the failures of others. She invariably had a lesson read from the Word and the preacher to pray with her before she would consent for the visit to end. She had great sorrows to come to her along the way, but she bore them sweetly and courageously. A mother in Israel has gone to her reward.

JAS. T. McCAFFERTY.
Eupora, Miss.

On Saturday afternoon, Feb. 19, 1916, at three o'clock, in the presence of a large number of friends and relatives, we laid to rest in the cemetery at Duck Hill, Miss., all that was mortal of Sister W. H. SYKES. The funeral service was conducted at the Methodist Church by the writer, and Brother Guy Gillespie, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Lexington. Sister Sykes was born in Franklinton, La., on March 5, 1842; joined the Methodist Church when a girl, and was married to W. H. Sykes, in 1864. She was the mother of three children, two of whom God called home in their early life. Brother Claud Sykes is left to cherish her memory and miss her saintly presence. It is so lonely without mother; let all remember Brother Sykes and other relatives at the throne of grace! Sister Sykes loved the Word of God and felt a deep interest in the Church. The constant ministration of friends during her illness, the large attendance upon the funeral services, and the beautiful floral offerings upon the casket and the grave gave strong evidence of the high appreciation and love in which she was held in the community in which she lived. She will be greatly missed by the community and the Church, and her place in the home and hearts of love ones can not be filled. Earth was made better by her life and her influence will remain as a benediction for others. Heaven is enriched by her presence. Bereft ones, be cheerful; she is not dead, but has gone to her heavenly home. All are glad that you weep not as those who have no hope. E. F. BULLARD, Pastor.

WILLIAM C. JOHNSON was born in Winston County, Miss., on Oct. 21, 1850, and died at Aztec, New Mexico, on Nov. 23, 1915. He was married to Miss Lydia J. Carver on Dec. 7, 1871. To them were born twelve children, seven of whom preceded their father to the other shore. The greater part of Brother Johnson's life was spent in Montgomery County, Miss., near Winona. There the writer knew him and had the honor to be his pastor for two years; and he is sure that he has never met a man who was a truer witness for Christ, or one who had greater power in prayer or exhortation.

At his home church, among the people who knew him best, no man, preachers not excepted, could move congregations to tears and to action as he could. His wife, who is still living, by her piety, good judgment, and management was truly a helpmeet for him in their home and in the community in which they lived.

Three of their four boys who lived to maturity became Methodist preachers, two of whom are still living and preaching, viz: the twin brothers, John G. Johnson, of the North Mississippi Conference, and Jesse S. Johnson, of the Oklahoma Conference. Their elder brother, Rev. W. M. Johnson, was first a member of the North Mississippi Conference, but later transferred, on account of ill health, to one of the Western Conferences, where he died several years ago. The other children, J. T. Johnson of Pueblo, Colorado, and Mrs. Lucy Plaugh, and Miss Ethel Johnson of New Mexico, all show the touch in their rearing of their godly parents, for they are all esteemed for their piety and usefulness. Brother Johnson died as he had lived, in the full triumph of the Christian's faith. T. H. PORTER.

BATON ROUGE DISTRICT NOTES.

The first quarter of the year has passed. The men are all at their posts, and are standing true to their work. There has been advancement in all departments of the church work, except in the way of finances. Conditions in the district hinder this to a great extent.

The assessment for ministerial support will hold its own with last year, which was the largest in the history of the district; but the payment of the same will depend largely upon conditions.

Young, at Amite, is planing for a revival and has plans well under way to retire the indebtedness on our church there. He is making good.

Sholars, at Kentwood, has about gotten that church free from debt. He is likewise getting ready for a revival.

Kelly, at Hammond, is advancing rapidly, and at the present time it looks as if he will far surpass the record made there last year, which was the greatest in years.

Cudd, at Keener Memorial, Baton Rouge, is getting ready to build a parsonage. This little church is reaching out and is a live body. It promises to be a great church.

Battle, at First Church, Baton Rouge, is getting ready to modernize the Sunday school department of his church, and by making some $2000 worth of improvements will have it in fine shape for Conference. His official board is wide-awake, energetic and progressive. With men like Holmes, Sanders, Himes, Flemming, Ives, Quine, and numbers of others to lend a hand, things are bound to go.

Cady, at Greensburg, is moving off well, and Fulton, at Zachary, is trying himself, and that work is being built up on the four years' foundation of faithful work done by his predecessor.

Andrews, at Gonzales, is busy now building a parsonage. He will have use for it later.

Murphy, at Springfield, the faithful local supply, is laboring under great difficulties, but moving on.

ERROR IN REPORT.

Dear Dr. Meek: In examining the statistical report of the Mississippi Conference Minutes for the Jackson District, I find that, as a result of defective figures on my part, or the part of some one else, an injustice has been done both myself and the charge which I served. The Minutes show that the Edwards charge assessed for presiding elder $95 and paid $60, and for the pastor $970 and paid $351. I intended to report as paid to the presiding elder $66.50 and to the preacher $831.

Now let me repeat that I feel that I myself am most probably responsible for this error, and that the secretaries are not to be blamed for it.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, God in his all-wise providence has seen fit to take unto himself from our midst Judge Chas. A. Stovall, for years one of our most faithful and efficient Sunday school teachers and church members, and

Whereas, we know he was ready to receive the reward of the faithful in that City not made with hands eternal in the heavens, we yet miss his presence; therefore, be it

Resolved, by the officers and members of the Shubuta Sunday School, M. E. Church, South, That we make this expression of our appreciation of his regular attendance upon Sunday school and church, his thoroughness of preparation of the lessons he taught, and his love for the Word of God.

Resolved further, That we commend his example of devotion to duty to all the members of our Sunday school, and pray that the memory of his life may ever be a stimulus to others to a like devotion.

Be it also resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of our Sunday school, a copy given to each of his children, to whom we express our sympathy in their bereavement, and a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and to the Mississippi Messenger for publication.

Cured His RUPTURE.

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that quickly and completely cured me. Years have passed and the rupture has never returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell, but will give full information about how you may find a complete cure without operation, if you write to me, Eugene M. Pullen, Carpenter, 597B Marcellus Ave., Manasquan, N. J. Better cut out this notice and show it to any others who are ruptured—you may save a life or at least stop the misery of rupture and the worry and danger of an operation.

I took the Compound when my ten year old daughter came and it helped me a lot. I have also had my oldest girl take it and it did her lots of good. I keep it in the house all the time and recommend it."—Mrs. DEWITT SINCEBAUGH, West Danby, N. Y.

BACKACHE, SWELLING OF HANDS AND FEET.

Dear Reader:

I appeal to those of you who are bothered with backache and a constant tired feeling to give "Anuric" a trial. It is a remedy recently discovered by Dr. Pierce, of the Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y. I suffered from backache, swelling of hands and feet, too frequent excretion from the kidneys and many other symptoms. Was unable to work, but after taking just one box of "Anuric" according to directions, I am again able to perform my daily duties.

(Signed) W. R. BRAY.

Note: Folks in town and adjoining counties are delighted with the results they have obtained by using "ANURIC," the newest discovery of Dr. Pierce, who is head of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, in Buffalo, N. Y. Those who started the day with a backache, stiff legs, arms and muscles, and an aching head (worn out before the day began because they were in and out of bed a dozen times at night) are appreciating the perfect rest, comfort and new strength they obtained from Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets. To prove that this is a certain uric acid solvent and conquers headache, kidney and bladder diseases and rheumatism, if you've never used the "Anuric," cut this out and send ten cents to Doctor Pierce for a large sample package. This will prove to you that "Anuric" is thirty-seven times more active than lithia in eliminating uric acid—and the most perfect kidney and bladder corrector. If you are a sufferer go to your druggist and ask for a 50-cent box of "Anuric." You run no risk, for Dr. Pierce's good name stands behind this wonderful new discovery as it has for the past half century for his "Golden Medical Discovery," a general tonic made from roots with pure glycerine which makes the blood pure, his "Favorite Prescription" for weak women and "Pleasant Pellets" for liver ills.—Adv.

TRY THIS FOR YOUR HEALTH.

For diseases which do not readily yield to drug treatment, such as chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism, Bright's disease, gall stones, uric acid poisoning, and diseases of the kidney and liver, the best physicians send their wealthy patients to the famous mineral springs. Some even spent months at the Spas of Europe and were almost invariably cured or greatly benefited.

I believe that the Shivar Spring is the greatest mineral spring ever discovered and I believe it so firmly that I offer to send you enough water for a three week's treatment (two five-gallon demijohns) on my guarantee that if it fails to benefit your case I will refund the price. You would hardly believe me if I told you that only about two out of a hundred, on the average, say that they have received no benefit. The water is restoring thousands. It restored my health when my friends and physicians thought my case was incurable and I am willing and anxious for you to match your faith in the Spring against my pocketbook. If I win you become a life-friend of the Spring. If I lose I will be sorry for you, but I will appreciate your courtesy in giving the water a trial and will gladly refund your money on request. Sign the following letter:

Shivar Springs,
Box 17-C, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if it fails to benefit my case you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

FROM THE WINONA DISTRICT.

Dear Doctor Meek: I have almost "finished" my first round on the Winona District; so I send you the second. It has been a labor of love and an abiding pleasure in my associations with the splendid, self-sacrificing men who are the leaders and pastors of the flock in the several charges, and in meeting and becoming acquainted with the noble band of laymen who are the equal of any in zeal and love of the Church within our bounds, and the good, consecrated women who are always to the fore in Christian work. No district, I think, can exhibit finer specimens of strong, loyal, devout, efficient workers in the Master's cause.

The preachers are in their fields with coats off and sleeves up and hard and faithfully at it. They all seem happy as the husbandman who toils in love, looking for a rich harvest to reward his labors. The people are happy, in each charge, over the pastor they have. They all seem to feel they got the best that was to be had. There is a note of good fellowship, brotherly kindness, and reciprocal confidence everywhere. In fact, pastors and people are felicitating themselves upon the "fine fitness of things" and are working side by side like trained mates in harness.

With the exception of three appointments, the whole of the Winona District is in the Delta and the resources of that country are immeasurable. The incomparable fertility of its soil, the mild climate, the abundant, pure artesian water supply, which is so clear, beautiful and so healthful that it sparkles like the very elixir of life held up in a glass before you, and the growing sanitary conditions incident to the opening up of vast reaches of former forests, and the drainage canals which are everywhere they are needed, make it now a very desirable place in which to live. There is an ever-growing influx of people from the poorer hill sections of the State to this rich and wonderful country. Egypt, in the heyday of her power and wealth and luxury, only had five million acres of fertile Nile valley lands, while we have, in the stretch from New Orleans to Cairo, twenty millions of acres that outclass the Nile valley. What were the lands of the Nile valley in point of fertility compared to the deep, black, satin-finished, silt-filled, nitrate-saturated, huckshots and loams of old Sunflower County? And Sunflower can't claim it all either, for there are other sections of the Delta lying around in the great domain of the "Father of Waters" of equal fertility, they say. Rich soil attracts population, population produces wealth, wealth fosters problems, and problems, in turn, produce, if unsolved, poverty, squalor, want and degeneration, and history goes back to the bottom and starts again on its endless round of poverty, wealth, affluence, immorality, decay, degeneration and on, ad infinitum. What about all this? It is easy to see the relation between dirt and soul, soil and spirit, luxury and intellectual and moral poverty. History has yet to record the death of a single nation of poor, hard-working people, but her annals are full of the rich that died—in fact, everyone that has died, died of gout. A clear, right vision of God; a deep, controlling sense of the spiritual ends of being, and a decided and positive experimental knowledge of Jesus as the sum of all life's needs, are indispensible prerequisites to a sane and safe life and the perpetuity of virtue and righteousness in the earth.

Well, what is all this about, you say. This, that the evangelical note of the ministry must be the major key. The preacher who omits this in his message is playing "old hundred" to the sense of "yankee doodle" or is dry-farming in the skies. He will find after a hit that he had no call; he had no distinctive message; he had no help for the poor, wretched, soul-destitute, heart-hungry and spirit-starved multitudes of men. Now, I think above all, and best of all, the vital, stirring, evangelistic note is ringing clearly in the whole district. This is the crux of the whole problem—not only of the kingdom of God, but likewise of the intellectual, social, moral and economic advancement of the race.

The preachers are making a fine start in the right direction. Some of them are doing great things now and laying plans for still larger and better things in the future. Brother Savage is building a handsome $10,000 or $12,000 church at Webb. They all there have the "new-church-itis," and they are working like Trojans to see their hopes materialized in the near future. Savage is leading them, too, and they are coming round the bend with a whoop. Brother Ingram at Ruleville is pulling for a $10,000 or $15,000 church, and his people are anxious to build, so far as I heard. They need it worse than any place I almost know of. They are a loyal, whole-souled set and are able to build a railroad to Kalamazoo, if they were all to get the idea it ought to be done. Be it said to the credit of the fine women there, that they have raised the money, and through Brother Ingram's leadership, have spent $1000 on the parsonage. It is a handsome, ample home for their pastor. Unless all signs fail, there is a great year ahead of the people at almost or quite every place in the district. The faithful men who have wrought heretofore in this district have left evidences of their toil and a name which helps.

Happiness and prosperity to you, Doctor, and the dear old Advocate.

Yours cordially,
L. M. LIPSCOMB.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

On Sept. 4, 1915, God in his infinite wisdom saw fit to call from our midst our friend, Mr. W. P. DARNALL. His death brought grief to our hearts, but we know that for him it was a glorious victory. He served the Mt. Carmel Sunday school as superintendent from the time of its organization in 1891 until 1913, when the infirmities of age and ill health caused his voluntary resignation. During all these years he was never absent from Sunday school without some serious reason. As an expression of our love and appreciation for the deceased, be it resolved by the Mt. Carmel Sunday School:

1. That we will ever love and revere the memory of one who was so faithful in the work of the Sunday school and church.

2. That we will try to follow his example in doing our duty as we see it, leaving, with childlike faith, the results with God.

3. That we extend to the hereaved family our sympathy and pray that God's grace may sustain them and enable them to meet him in the heavenly home.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication and a copy spread on the minutes of our Sunday school.

Signed: Mrs. Effie Speer, Mrs. Maggie Carson Srite, G. A. Fore.
Rankin, Miss.

KIDNEY MEDICINE DISSOLVES GRAVEL STONES.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root sells well with us because it invariably produces good results in Kidney, Liver and Bladder troubles. We sold a dollar bottle to one of the inmates of our Soldiers' Home near here, and after using it he brought in about one dozen gravel stones, some as large as a pea, which he had passed. He states that he obtained wonderful relief from the use of Swamp-Root.

AN ERROR.

In Dr. I. L. Peebles' article, entitled "Is The World Growing Better?" which appeared in last week's issue of the Advocate, two most regrettable typhographical errors occurred. In enumerating the prevalent evils the Doctor spoke of the desire of some people "to succeed in their wickedness, whether their wickedness be the ruination of character, the limitation of colaborers, robbing of others of their rights, bringing up and educating their children with other people's money, etc." The printer made the word "colaborer" in this sentence calabooses and the word "bringing up" bribing. We are very sorry that these mistakes occurred. Our esteemed friend, Dr. Peebles, was in no way responsible for them, except that his hand writing is not easy to read.—Editor of the Advocate.

Big Eaters Get Kidney Trouble

Take Salts at first sign of Bladder irritation or Backache.

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys; to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.—Adv.

Lime Against Tuberculosis

In the May 25, 1912, issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association appeared this statement concerning calcium (lime) medication in the treatment of tuberculosis;

"Under the systematic, continued and persistent regime of calcium assimilation, Van Gelson has seen a number of his patients improve. The sputum clears up of tubercle bacilli, which finally disappear, and the patients are discharged with healed pulmonary tuberculosis."

Ethical Journals seldom speak so positively about a remedial agent, yet this testimony coincides with that from many consumptives who have secured like results through the use of Eckman's Alterative.

Since calcium is a constituent of this remedy, its healing power may be due to the way this element is so combined with other valuable ingredients as to be easily assimilated.

Eckman's Alterative contains no opiates, narcotics or habit-forming drugs, so it is safe to try. Price $1 and $2 per bottle. Sold by leading druggists or sent direct from the Laboratory. We would like to send you a booklet containing information of value and references.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The fifth annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference was held in the Crawford Street Church, Vicksburg, Miss., Feb. 14-18, 1916. The historic old city was lavish in the cordiality of its reception of the seventy-five delegates present. Nothing was left undone which would add to the comfort of the visitors, or the success of the meeting. Rev. L. L. Roberts, of Gibson Memorial Church and his people, were untiring in their efforts to assist the Crawford Street women in entertaining the Conference body. We cannot pass on to the proceedings of the meeting without first alluding to the splendid music which was rendered at each night session. It gave an inspiration to the services which will not soon be forgotten.

The opening session of the Conference was on Monday evening at half-past seven. Rev. T. B. Holloman and Rev. L. L. Roberts conducted the devotional exercises, after which Mrs. R. L. McLaurin, of Vicksburg, in a masterful yet cordial and loving greeting welcomed the Conference into their midst. This address was responded to by Mrs. A. E. Wyatt, of Natchez, who in her inimitable manner made a speech so gracious and charming that she made her hostesses feel the very heart-throbs of the women present.

On Tuesday morning the devotional exercises were conducted by the President, Mrs. R. E. Johnson, of Gulfport, whose theme was "Partnership with God." All hearts were closely drawn together and were fittingly prepared to partake of the Holy Sacrament, which immediately followed, and which was administered by Revs. T. B. Holloman and L. L. Roberts.

The business of the Conference began in earnest after this spiritual preparation, and the President in her message pursued the same line of thought as in her devotional exercises, and urged that in all our plans for the year we take the Master as our partner.

Mrs. H. O. Middleton presented the work accomplished by the young people during 1915, and it was a report which showed steady and vigorous growth. The Meridian District leads in the number of young people's organizations, with Jackson a close second. Seventeen new auxiliaries have been organized during the year, and 371 new members have been added. The total amount raised by the young people for all purposes was $709.54. Some one asked if the young people of Mississippi would be on the Honor Roll of 1915, and it was most emphatically affirmed that they would, as they showed a gain of 73 per cent.

The children's work showed a healthy condition. Five baby divisions and twelve junior divisions had been added during the year. We were surprised to learn that Miss Irma Weems, who has had charge of this department for the past year, was contemplating taking a step which would necessitate her giving up the work. Perhaps she feels that she is entering upon a larger sphere of usefulness, and, while we are reluctant to give her up, we are sure she will continue working for the Master. A message of love, good wishes, and congratulation was sent to her from the Conference.

The report of Mrs. B. F. Lewis, Corresponding Secretary, was of vital interest. It showed a growth along all lines, but the greatest being in the young people's department. Fourteen adult auxiliaries were organized during the year. Sixty-eight reported having observed the Week of Prayer, which was an increase of 21 over the preceeding year. There is room for a still larger increase. We should not be satisfied until every auxiliary in the Conference observes this season of prayer set aside by the Council. Mrs. Lewis reported three volunteers for the work, and this was news which caused much rejoicing, for we realize that the harvest is white, but the laborers are few—so few. Attention was called to the shortage on the pledge. At the 1915 meeting $4499.50 was the amount actually pledged, and of this sum $4359.48 has been paid, leaving a deficit of $140.02. This would not have occurred if every woman in the auxiliaries had kept a firm hold on the ropes. Some one let them slacken—was it you, my sister? Keep a firm hold this year, and let us start out early to see that our pledge comes up in full. Be untiring and diligent in your efforts. "Think, talk, and pray" pledge, and you will surely surpass your highest expectations.

Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb said for our encouragement that, despite the fact that 1915 was the first year of organic union, and some women as well as auxiliaries had dropped out of the work, the treasurer's report showed an increase in funds of $26,000 over 1914.

Tuesday afternoon a number of young people, with Mrs. Gunter, of Jackson, gave a presentation of "Young Priscilla's Monday Society," which was greatly enjoyed by all present. While it added variety to the program, no one failed to catch the spirit of the lesson which it was designed to teach.

Tuesday night Mrs. Lipscomb gave a magnificent address on the aim and purposes of our work. She is a pleasing and magnetic speaker, and as she beautifully interpreted the meaning of the words, "Education, Finance, Service, and Intercession," all present caught the vision which she so graphically sketched upon the canvas.

The treasurer reported from all sources $11,016, a little less than the preceding year. Mrs. Lipscomb made the gratifying statement that more than $22,000 was raised during the Week of Prayer, thus enabling us to go forward with our work in Japan; also to adequately finance the work on the Pacific Coast. Of this $22,000, Mississippi paid over $515.

Miss Estelle Haskin, Editor of the "Young Christian Worker," was introduced to the Conference and made a plea for a larger subscription list for that valuable little paper. At present there are only 8000 subscribers, and in order to be self-supporting it must double its number. The different districts pledged their support by volunteering to secure more subscribers. It was found that the Mississippi Conference pledged itself for 535 new subscribers.

Miss Haskin also presented the Negro work, having labored for some years among this race in Nashville. She stressed proper race co-operation and proper race feeling. These are essential to the solution of the problem in the South.

Mrs. W. W. Moore presented "The Why and How of Social Service," and several women well versed upon the subject discussed it from the extensive, as well as intensive, point of view. We gained a broader, more comprehensive understanding of the work from these timely discussions.

Miss Rosalie Edwards gave an address on "World-wide Evangelization Realized Through the Influence of the Mothers." She said to help accomplish this end three things are needed: an informed motherhood, an informing motherhood, and a surrendered motherhood.

Mrs. Harrell presented the Christian Advocate and Missionary Voice, and made a strong plea for a larger and better support of the Advocate. She urged the women to be more loyal to their Church paper, and to co-operate with the preachers in reaching the 10,000 subscribers set as the goal for 1916.

Rev. J. L. Neill, Sunday school field worker, presented "The Sunday School as a Missionary Agency," and if there were any doubts in the minds of his hearers upon this subject, they were dispelled after this energetic, thoroughly informed young minister finished his talk.

Miss Mary Hasler, deaconess from the Biloxi Wesley House, presented the work for that place, and did so in a stirring, attractive manner. She showed the great need for the erection of a gymnasium. Our Meridian Wesley House had no representative, but its needs were not forgotten.

The Conference pledged $4750 for 1916, and the finance committee urged that each auxiliary pay a fourth of its pledge each quarter.

Gulfport was selected as the place for the next annual meeting.

The following officers and district secretaries were elected for 1916: President, Mrs. R. E. Johnson, Gulfport; 1st Vice President, Mrs. H. O. Middleton, Mendenhall; 2nd Vice President, Mrs. J. Lloyd Decell, Waynesboro; Cor. Secretary, Mrs. B. F. Lewis, Hazlehurst; Rec. Secretary, Mrs. H. L. McCleskey, Hazlehurst; Supt. Study and Publicity, Mrs. W. H. La Prade, Gulfport; Supt. Social Service, Mrs. W. W. Moore, Bogue Chitto; Supt. Supplies, Mrs. J. K. Dunn, McComb; Treasurer, Mrs. J. T. Sharp, Jr., Canton.

District Secretaries—Brookhaven, Miss Bessie Kearney, Hazlehurst; Hattiesburg, Mrs. H. McMillan, Mize; Jackson, Mrs. Sam Ewing, Jackson; Meridian, Mrs. C. R. McQueen, Meridian; Newton, Mrs. J. C. Clarke, Laurel; Port Gibson, Miss Mabel Porter, Natchez; Seashore, Mrs. T. T. Ford, Columbia.

CHASES RHEUMATISM.

Every drug store is stocked full of all kinds of remedies which are supposed to benefit sufferers from Rheumatism, but the one remedy that has been tried and proven efficient is called "RENWAR." It is sold on a positive guarantee of money back if not satisfied. R. A. Foster, of Petros, Tenn., writes as follows: "The bottle of 'RENWAR' I got from you has done my wife more good than all the other remedies she has ever tried. I shall always keep a bottle on hand as I consider it the best remedy on the market." Send fifty cents for a bottle, if your druggist cannot supply you. If not satisfied we will cheerfully refund your money. Prepared and guaranteed by the Warner Drug Company, Nashville, Tenn.

Calomel Makes You Sick, Ugh!

"Dodson's Liver Tone" better than calomel and can not Salivate.

Calomel loses you a day! You know what calomel is. It's mercury; quicksilver. Calomel is dangerous. It crashes into sour bile like dynamite, cramping and sickening you. Calomel attacks the bones and should never be put into your system.

When you feel bilious, sluggish, constipated and all knocked out and believe you need a dose of dangerous calomel just remember that your druggist sells for 50 cents a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone, which is entirely vegetable and pleasant to take and is a perfect substitute for calomel. It is guaranteed to start your liver without stirring you up inside, and can not salivate.

Don't take calomel! It makes you sick the next day. Dodson's Liver Tone straightens you right up and you feel great. Give it to the children because it is perfectly harmless and doesn't gripe.

REV. A. B. MOWERS ADVOCATES NERVE REMEDY.

Nervous indigestion is one of the commonest of the many forms of nervous trouble. It is very hard to treat usually, but those who have used Dr. Miles' Nervine all report that it was not long before their trouble vanish entirely.

Every ailment must have a cause and the cause is what should be removed. When the cause lies in the nervous system, Dr. Miles' Nervine cannot be too strongly advocated. It is backed by thirty years of successful use.

The Rev. A. B. Mowers, of York, Pa., is an ardent advocate of this remedy since it completely relieved him. He made the following statement for publication:

"Nearly 10 years ago I was troubled with nervous indigestion in its worst form. I had sick headaches nearly every day with a dizzy, dull feeling. I was extremely nervous, confused and suffered much with constipation. I was informed of Dr. Miles' Nervine and Liver Pills and determined to give them a trial. I used them as directed and received much relief. I continued the Nervine until I had used several bottles. I now enjoy good health, relish my meals and can eat any kind of food without fear. I take pleasure in recommending Dr. Miles' Remedies to the public."

Dr. Miles' Nervine or Liver Pills can be purchased at any drug store and the purchase price will be cheerfully refunded by the druggist if after using the remedies you are not satisfied with the results obtained.

From the Field

Kosciusko, Miss.

Dear Brother Meek: Brother Gladney and Mr. Dietrich held the Attala County Institute for pastors and Sunday school superintendents here yesterday. It was a decided success. They were both at their best and their choice of subjects as well as the discussion of them was wise. Every pastor in the county was present and a larger number of superintendents and teachers than they have had in any of the seventeen counties visited up to date. Many expressed themselves as having been greatly benefited and all wanted these gifted workers to return again.

The Executive Committee of our Sunday School Board met in Durant last Thursday and set in motion plans looking to the development of the larger ideas of Sunday school work in our Conference. Two district secretaries have been employed who will greatly strengthen the work in four districts. The necessary funds were appropriated to the mid-year meeting to be held in Grenada in June. We are much gratified with the hopefulness and purpose of the great host of Sunday school workers in our bounds. The contests between Sunday schools for increased attendance (which some of us at least cannot approve) seems to be at least turning the thought of the people to the need of having "every member of our Church a member of the Sunday School."

In conclusion, I would urge the pastors and superintendents to do their utmost to secure a large attendance when Brothers Gladney and Dietrich come to hold their institute. It will bring large returns.—S. A. Brown, P. C.

Buford Charge (Miss. Conf.)

Dear Dr. Meek: The work of the current year is progressing nicely along all lines. My people seem to have started out with renewed energy, and we are looking forward to the completion of a successful year's work. We spent the first fifth Sunday holding a Sunday School Missionary Rally here in the town of Foxworth. The Lord blessed us with a beautiful day and the congregation throughout the day was large and attentive. The subjects which were discussed by the young people were very inspiring and edifying. The sermons, which were preached by Dr. W. H. Huntley, of the Methodist Church, and Rev. Mr. Bolin, of the Presbyterian Church, both of Columbia, added much to the helpfulness of the services, their discourses being in harmony with missionary work. We were much encouraged and uplifted by the gentle influence and strong spiritual sermons delivered to us by our beloved presiding elder, Rev. Robert Selby, on Feb. 5 and 6. We all enjoyed the sweet and gentle spirit he displayed while in our midst. The outlook for a successful year's work is good. The people have showed their thoughtfulness of and loving kindness toward their pastor and his family by sending many good things to eat to the parsonage; and as they have thus remembered us, we pray that the Lord may bless them abundantly in spiritual things. We are planning for a revival of true and undefiled religion at every church, and we are trying to show every family that reading the Advocate will contribute much toward securing it. Readers, let us unite in the great work of saying souls for the Master.—W. H. Lane, P. C.

ONE MORE REPORT.

Three months have passed since the session of the Louisiana Conference at Mansfield, and this old superannuate has but little to report. On my birthday, December 5, we were startled about 8 p. m. by the arrival of a crowd of ladies and gentlemen sloshing through the rain and mud, and each with something in the grocery line. The whole only amounted to a few dollars in value, but the eagerness of each one to bring something in such weather indicated the prompting power.

I did not attend Conference as usual, and now, as my physical condition renders my life uncertain, I wish to give a little of my unknown history. At the session of the Little Rock Conference held in Monticello, in 1877, I became the victim of a serious affliction, which has not left me yet, and all of these years I have suffered, traveled, and preached at a disadvantage. For years back, when efficient, I seldom remained through a Conference session because of suffering and, of course, I seldom served on a committee. I regretted this, and mention it that my brethren may understand.

It has been my custom to tithe what I received in the way of salary, and to help some of the superannuates, to the extent I thought I could afford, besides I have not owed a dollar since 1880, in Mineral Springs, Arkansas. I have had a little money ahead, until I lost my truck crop while in a sanitarium three years ago, and since then I have been unable to work much. Before that I got considerable aid from old friends, but since the war in Europe that has almost ceased. Housekeeping is attended with much difficulty and suffering, and we are unable to board.

At our last Conference my allowance was one-third below what I had been getting, with no children nor any one to look to for help. The Book says, "All things work together for good to them that love God." I am very happy all the time, and when I go away, you will know where to find me. God bless you!

Olla, La. H. ARMSTRONG.

To Darken Hair Apply Sage Tea

Look Young! Bring Back Its Natural Color, Gloss and Thickness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant, remove every bit of dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, gray or dry, scraggly and thin. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use tonic, costing about 50 cents a large bottle at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, no one can tell because it does so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.—Adv.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Since the last session of the Louisiana Conference the Field Secretary has been busily engaged planning for District Institutes, arranging dates and programs, and, as opportunity afforded, visiting various Churches and holding charge institutes.

The following churches have been visited: J. S. Noel, Jr., Memorial, Texas Avenue, Queensborough, Greenwood, Stonewall, Ida, Homer, Leesville, Zwolle, Mitchell, Pelican, and Natchitoches.

At each place an interesting and profitable conference was held with the Workers' Council, each council pledging to bring their school up to the Standard of Efficiency as speedily as possible.

At a number of these places the Secretary delivered several sermons and addresses and more or less institute work was done with gratifying interest and results.

Under the leadership of the capable pastor, teachers and officers, the Noel Sunday School is growing in numbers, interest, and efficieney.

The Texas Avenue school is increasing in membership every Sunday, and a splendid new classroom has just been completed for the large and enthusiastic Young People's Bible Class.

The pastor and superintendent of our Queensborough Sunday School, with the co-operation of the faithful workers, are leading sueeessfully up toward the Standard of Efficiency.

Dr. Wynn and the Field Secretary accompanied the new presiding elder of the Shreveport District on his first visit to Greenwood, and a brief institute was held in connection with the Quarterly Conference. The elder distinguished himself in both pulpit and administrative efforts; the new pastor seemed to be in high favor; a new church-building enterprise was being talked, and the Sunday school interest and outlook were encouraging.

In Leesville we found Brother Williams already in high favor with his excellent people and projecting plans for a new parsonage and church. The Sunday school interest was exceedingly good and plans for greater efficiency were adopted. One of the pleasant features of this visit was the privilege of baptizing the infant daughter of Brother and Sister Williams. Another delightful day was spent in Leesville, at a later date, when the Field Secretary, on the invitation of the Parish Superintendent of Schools, returned to address the public school teachers in their semi-annual institute. There should everywhere be a hearty co-operation existing between these faithful trainers of our youth and the great Sunday school movement.

Brother Lipscomb is starting off well in the work at Zwolle, and the Sunday school outlook is good.

There are few communities like Mitchell, and while we did not find the Sunday school work quite up to the standard, we met with a hearty responsiveness that indicated great developments in the immediate future.

The Pelican Sunday school is making rapid progress, and plans are on foot for either ereeting a new church building or enlarging and remodeling the present one. At the evening hour, by previous arrangement of the pastors, the Secretary spoke to a large congregation in a union service at the Baptist Church.

In Homer we felt like one returning home after a long absence. There came sacred and hallowed memories of other days, as we met many dear friends and sadly missed others who had been called to the home above. During this visit two members of the Cradle Roll, Mary Elizabeth Smith and James Angelo Smith, were dedicated to the Lord in baptism. Brother Snelling, the pastor, and Professor Darden Ford, the Sunday school superintendent, are both demonstrating great capability in their work, and the Homer Sunday school has already reached a high standard. The last of the debt on the elegant church building has been paid and plans are being pushed for the erection of a commodious Sunday school annex.

In Natchitoches we renewed pleasant associations with our esteemed personal friends, Rev. P. M. Brown and family, and had the pleasure of addressing the Workers' Council on Saturday evening and preaching twice to large, attentive, cultured congregations and addressing the College Y. W. C. A. on Sunday. Brother Brown is doing a great work in this important educational center, where his effieient ministry and big-hearted, sympathetic, brotherly touch reaches and inspires hundreds of the splendid young teachers who are going out to help mold the charaeter and shape the destiny of our sons and daughters in Louisiana. The entire Conference should eoncentrate more attention upon and give a larger support to this important charge. The pastor, Brother Posey, reports the organization of a new Sunday school at Big Bayou, on the Lake End charge.

Let every Sunday school worker in the Louisiana Conference carefully read the announcements regarding our coming District Institutes and then be sure to attend the one most convenient to him. We expect these programs to be of interest and profit to all who attend. Let us all work together for a great Sunday school revival throughout the entire Conference this year that shall result in a large increase in membership, the perfecting of our organizations, and the salvation of many souls.

WM. H. COLEMAN,
Conference Field Secretary.

OUR CHURCH AND THE AMUSEMENT QUESTION.

We stated in the last issue of the Advocate that we would have something to say this week concerning the present situation of our Church respecting the so-called questionable amusements, and we will now proceed to the fulfillment of this promise. It has been our intention for some time to discuss this matter before the assembling of our next General Conference; so the recent developments in the officially unauthorized meeting in the interest of Methodist union, lately held at Evanston, Illinois, did not lead to the formation of this purpose upon our part, though it has hastened us somewhat in its execution. In taking up this subject, we desire to affirm that we accept fully the affirmation that the speakers at the Conference just referred to were grossly misrepresented by the press dispatches and did not make the extreme utterances which were attributed to them. But we are at complete variance with the position that it is wise to keep out of our Book of Discipline any specific warning against the evils of dancing, theater-going, and card-playing, and we do not believe that the manner in which the chapter therein which dealt plainly with these harmful diversions was eliminated, justifies the claim that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has ever knowingly expressed a preference for the round-about policy which has been fastened upon her and which is now declared by some to be the wisest and best.

How the Specific Chapter Went In.

The chapter to which we have referred was inserted in the Discipline by order of the General Conference of 1890 after much deliberation. The Episcopal Address to that body, a most masterful and comprehensive document, was read by Bishop A. W. Wilson, who doubtless had written it. It contained an emphatic deliverance concerning the worldliness existing in the Church and the need of seeking faithfully to combat it. Later, a Special Committee of Fifteen on the State of the Church was appointed, who, after carefully considering the prevailing conditions, reported a vigorous address to the Church at large, which was endorsed by the General Conference, prefaced by a strong resolution, and ordered printed in the Book of Discipline, which was done. The General Conferences of 1894, 1898, and 1902 had this resolution and this address, which we print below (taking it from the Discipline of 1902), continued therein:

ON WORLDLY AMUSEMENTS.

The General Conference of 1890 ordered the following resolutions to be inserted in the Appendix to the Discipline, as a preface to the address which was reported by the Committee on the Spiritual State of the Church and adopted by the Conference:

¶ 660. Resolved, That inasmuch as the deliverances of our bishops, as contained in their quadrennial addresses to the General Conference from time to time, and as quoted at length by the Special Committee of Fifteen, have declared dancing, theater-going, card-playing, and the like worldly indulgences, to be contrary to the spirit of Christianity, and violative of the General Rules and moral discipline of our Church, as also the vows of our Church members; we, therefore, heartily indorse the aforesaid deliverances as containing the just and correct interpretation of the law in the premises, and as such this General Conference accepts the same as having equal force and authority as if contained in the body of the Discipline.

The General Conference of 1891 adopted the following resolution:

¶ 661. Resolved, That the Address on Worldliness contained in the Appendix of the Discipline of 1890 be continued in the Appendix of the Discipline of 1894.

¶ 662. The General Conference of 1902 ordered that the Address on Amusements be continued in its place as an Appendix of the Discipline.

THE ADDRESS.

The Address reported by the Committee of Fifteen on the Spiritual State of the Church:

To the Ministers and Members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

¶ 663. Brethren: The General Conference of 1890 is sorrowfully constrained to believe that the description of the spiritual state of the Church employed by the bishops in their pastoral address of 1874, and published by order of the General Conference in 1882, is in large measure true of the Church now as then. After reviewing the causes of devout gratitude to Almighty God, for his signal mercies vouchsafed to our Zion, the bishops add: "In this gratifying review, however, we find nothing to flatter our pride, but much to foster our humility, to awaken sentiments of repentance, and to cherish purposes of amendment. Our piety, our self-sacrifice, our Christian enterprise, have not been equal to our growth, much less to our standards and to our time-honored ecclesiastical landmarks. Fundamentally correct in our views of scriptural truth, and, in the main, commendably consistent in our conduct, we have departed, in some instances, from the simplicity of the gospel as we first received it. An inordinate love of the world, in the forms of wealth, of fashion, and of amusement, has largely diffused itself amongst our people and corrupted their spiritual integrity. The peculiar institutions and usages of Methodism have been frequently neglected or abandoned, and a relaxation of wholesome discipline has diminished our strength and impaired our testimony against the vices of the age in which we live. To these tendencies, to which we are perpetually exposed by the pressure of the world, the flesh, and the devil, and to these actual departures from 'the old paths,' we earnestly call your prayerful attention."

¶ 664. At a later point of the address, to which are attached the signatures of the sainted Paine, Pierce, Kavanaugh, Wightman, Marvin, Doggett, and McTyeire, and of our present senior bishop, occurs this still more explicit and emphatic statement:

¶ 665. "An explicit utterance was given by order of the last General Conference in our pastoral address on the subject of 'Worldly Amusements.' We now repeat that utterance. We abate none of its teachings with respect either to the manifest inconsistency of such indulgences with the spirit and profession of the gospel, or the peril which they bring to the souls of men. Their multiplied and insidious forms are a source of perpetual temptation and damage, and are denounced by the word of God, and by that part of the General Rules which forbids 'the taking of such diversions as cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus.' This denunciation is explicit and comprehensive, and 'the name of the Lord Jesus' in this connection is a decisive test, and we are content to leave the issue to its sovereign arbitrament. Amongst these indulgences which cannot stand this solemn test is the modern dance, both in its private and in its public exhibition, as utterly opposed to the genius of Christianity as taught by us. When persisted in, it is a justifiable ground of judicial action by the Church authorities."

¶ 666. In this same condemnation, as equally contrary to the Scriptures, which declare that "the friendship of the world is enmity against God," to our General Rules, and to the vows which all our members have voluntarily assumed, this General Conference would include card-playing, theater-going, attendance upon race-courses, circuses, and the like. These offenses are, likewise, justifiable grounds of discipline.

¶ 667. What is the remedy? Our appeal is, first of all, to the government of the family, which, in the nature of the case, is the most efficient ally of the Church. Fathers and mothers, by both precept and example, can do much to restrain the young people of our Church from the practice of the commoner forms of worldliness. "It cannot be disguised," say the bishops in the address already quoted, "that family religion has been sadly neglected in many of the households of our people. Our own observations confirm the too general complaint on this subject. The duty of offering the morning and evening sacrifice of prayer and praise upon the family altar has not only the sanction of scriptural authority, of the constitution of the domestic relation, and of the practice of the Christian Church in all ages, but it has been uniformly recognized and enjoined by Methodist economy as an indispensable exponent of consecration to God, and a rich and influential means of grace. It is hallowing in its effects upon parents, children, and servants—enduring in its results, and it transmits to posterity, by the agency of the family organization, the legacy of the faith and the habits and the associations of genuine piety; it transforms the household into a Church replete with blessings, and capable of infinite succession."

¶ 668. We greatly deplore the danger that comes to the purity and power of our beloved Church from such worldly practices among our members as those named and described above.

¶ 669. As a further remedy we urge our pastors to give all diligence in warning our people against the dangers of every kind of worldliness, and to execute with love and fidelity the requirements of the Discipline in all cases of the violation of our General Rules. "The mild but firm administration of discipline," say the bishops, "is an integral and essential part of our economy. The purity and integrity of the body of Christ must be preserved at all hazards, so that neither heresy in doctrine nor corruptness in life be tolerated for a moment, lest they increase unto more ungodliness. There is a growing tendency, we fear, in this direction, and we take the liberty of speaking a seasonable word on this behalf. Our legislation is sufficient on this subject. It only remains that its processes be faithfully followed according to the provisions of our Discipline by those intrusted with its execution. A solemn responsibility rests upon the respective authorities of the Church to see that its sanctity be fully maintained."

¶ 670. This General Conference unreservedly adopts this utterance of the bishops as its own, and most earnestly invites the attention of all our ministers and members to every regulation of our Discipline. Methodism has won evangelical Christendom to her way of thinking concerning the incompatibility of the spirit of this world

THE PRESIDENT'S FAVORITE POEM.

By the Rev. Frank B. M'Allister.

Wordsworth's "Character of the Happy Warrior" has been named as the favorite poem of Woodrow Wilson. If this announcement calls renewed attention to a noble piece of English verse, it will not have been made in vain. Rightly the poet calls him a "happy warrior" who, seen or unseen of men, goes forth to battle for the right; who owes

To virtue every triumph that he knows;
Who, if he rise to station of command,
Rises by open means, and there will stand
On honorable terms, or else retire,
And in himself possess his own desire.
* * * * * * * *
Who, whether praise of him must walk the earth
Forever, and to noble deeds give birth,
Or he must fall, to sleep without his fame,
And leave a dead, unprofitable name,
Finds comfort in himself and in his cause;
And, while the mortal mist is gathering, draws
His breath in confidence of heaven's applause.

Let the last article in the warrior's creed, for the moment, engage our attention. Surely at this point he is in advance of multitudes of his fellowmen. To how many it seems unwelcome postponement to wait for the applause of heaven? They plead before a nearer court aud crave an immediate verdict. The applause of earth is good enough for them. Perhaps not one in ten of us is really willing to discount the hasty judgments of to-day in favor of those coming by and by.

In the presence of immediate temporal advantage men excuse a wide variety of shifty trieks. When the prize is glittering enough, the end can be made to justify the means. Sacrifices to the great god, Success, are made with no niggard hands, and without too careful a counting of the cost. The one inexcusable failure is failure to gain the prize—and to get away with it.

The love of success is common to all men, but the definitions of it vary widely. Some think of it in terms of present acquisition, by fair means or foul, of all possible earthly good. Others take the longer view, inject a moral quality into their conception of it and extend its full realization out beyond that dividing line that men call death. Thls is to overrule the decisions of all lower courts and to carry the case up to the supreme tribunal. It is to apprehend the vision of the great Christian seer who wrote, "And I saw the dead, both small and great, stauding before God."

The happy warrior is happy in the knowledge that he is in for a square deal; that the universe, in the long run, plays fair with him and with every man. He knows that right, whatever its seeming defeats, will ultimately triumph.—Chrlstian Intelligencer.

IS ENGLAND TIRED OF WAR.

By Sir Robert Parks.

In answer to the Methodist from Boston, who asks whether England is tired of the war, I say very confidently that I see no such signs anywhere. The war has already, it is true, lasted far longer than either the Allies or Germany at first expected. It was evidently thought in many military and diplomatic quarters that the struggle was to be a short, sharp one, like the war of 1870. The awful losses of life on both sides must for several generations leave their mark upon the social life of all the belligerent nations. The cost of the war is already gigantic. It has already cost England twice the entire cost of twenty years' war with Napoleon. Our children and our grandchildren will have to carry a terrible burden of taxation. The hospitals are crowded with wounded soldiers. Thousands of homes are desolate. But with all this the ancient spirit of our people is not broken. Nobody dreams of or intends there shall be defeat. The Zeppelins come now and then. They do some damage, and unfortunately kill some people, but they frighten nobody. Our navy has been steadily improved and is larger and far stronger than it was a year ago. Our "contemptible little army" has grown from 600,000 to 3,000,000 men. In spite of the work of the German submarines the gross tonnage of the British mercantile marine has increased by 300,000 tons since the war began.

And yet the country is under no illusion. We are well aware how great is the task before us, how momentous are the issues at stake for ourselves and prosperity. Mistakes have undoubtedly been made. As I have said the war found us unprepared. It came upon us like a thief in the night.

Our navy was ready; our army was not. Would America have been ready if in the year 1907 she had suddenly been called to defend herself on her Atlantic and Pacific coasts against Germany and Japan? Incapable men may have been employed in our munition and other departments. Waste, and very great waste, has unquestionably occurred. Foolish advice may have been given by politicians who thought themselves strategists. Needless controversies between capital and labor have taken place, encouraged unquestionably in certain cases by foreign pecuniary aid. Precious time has been lost. Suppose all this to be true. Has it not been the experience of every nation In every one of the great wars that have ever been waged? England has never pretended to be a warlike nation. We have kept "militarism" at arm's length; and notwithstanding all the difficulties we have had recently to face, the balance has been in our favor. History shows that past great wars have been won by the nation which held the command of the seas and had the deepest purse.

Our objects are exactly what they were twelve months ago, when the Prime Minister defined them: "We shall," said Mr. Asquith, "never sheathe the sword until Belgium has recovered all, and more than all, that she has sacrificed; until France is adequately secured against the menace of aggression; until the rights of the smaller nationalities of Europe are placed upon an unassailable foundation; and until the military domination of Prussia is wholly and finally destroyed." If the Prime Minister were speaking to-day, I think he would add: "Until Italy recovers her lost provinces; until Germany is driven back from Russian soil, and Poland secures her freedom."

A Mother's Letter From Her Soldier Boy.

I read some weeks ago a little American song commencing, "I did not raise my boy to be a soldier." I do not know whether that singular song really represents the mind of the Daughters of the Revolution. A mother who could feel like that would hardly bear a son who could write such a letter as the following from the trenches: "Don't worry too much, mother dear, about me. I am not afraid; not nearly so frightened as I used to be when you came to my cot, when I was a little chap, and you tucked me up, and kissed me, and left me in the dark. When I enlisted it was not the call of Kitchener that I heard. It was not even the call of the King. It was the call of my country and the call of God. You may rely upon me fighting hard, and fighting, I hope, well; and, mother dear, should I fall I know that father will be waiting for me at the gates of heaven, and he will say, 'Well done, Harry, my boy.'"

What our nation, and our government, and even some of the military leaders have not yet understood, Is that the new British army is a religious army. There have been no such soldiers or sailors since the days of the Commonwealth and the times of Drake. They know that behind them they have the vast resources of a united people. They will fight with courage to the end. Peace talk is at present out of place. The "pacifist" is unknown here. He or she is, I fancy, still something of a force in America, or may continue so until danger looms ahead.—New York Christian Advocate.

A law has been passed in Oregon which prohibits the sale of hard cider, but the farmer is allowed to sell the cider after it has turned to vinegar.

"PEACE AT ANY PRICE."

Dear Mr. Editor: I have been laboring under the impression that I was pretty well known, but since Mr. Barbee calls me an unknown knight I presume I must have been mistaken. It punctures one's self-esteem to learn that he is not as well known as he had thought, but I console myself with the thought that my acquaintance with Mr. Barbee is as limited as his with me.

I feel like I had been shot at—shot at, mark you, not hit—by a Gatling gun, and who would not after reading Mr. Barbee's rejoinder, the chief characteristic of which is its verbosity? If that term is too dignified, let me say that it is "wordy." I want to congratulate him on his ample vocabulary, but he must allow me to chide him for using his beautiful flow of language in ridicule, rather than for argument. His pretty words cover nearly a page of the Advocate, but it would take a microscopic vision to discover a single argument of value. Let him come from under the cover of his verbosity with which he conceals the weakness of his position and produce an argument worthy of the consideration of serious-minded men. The question under discussion demands argument, not ridicule. Let me remind him that ridicule is the worn-out weapon of the sophist, conscious of the weakness of his position, and is no longer used by fair-minded men engaged in controversy.

Mr. Barbee calls those who stand for peace a "company of bureaucrats." Such talk is in keeping with the spirit of all who advocate preparedness—poltroons, cowards, and unpatriotic are terms peculiar to their nomenclature. But who is the poltroon, who is the coward, and who is the unpatriotic? Is it the man who would rush the nation into war that the flower of our manhood may die in the trenches like dogs? or is it the man who is in earnest in his effort to check the hysteria started by an organization of men known as the Navy League? Calling names is an indication of weakness.

If my champion of preparedness prefers to take his intellectual pabulum from a secular magazine, however respectable it may be, rather than from an authorized periodical of his own Church, I have nothing to say; but when he characterizes the peace number of The Voice as a "propaganda in opposition to the great governmental policy" and says "the law of the Church requires a different course of conduct," I have to refer him to the reply of the apostles to the Jewish rulers: "Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you rather than unto God, judge ye."

Mr. Barbee evades every argument in my reply. For example, iustead of meeting squarely my contention that preparation for the defense of national honor is to apply to the nation the doctrine by which the wicked custom of duelling was once maintained, he says: "But Brother Ramsey is not going to draw me into a discussion of the duello." It seems difficult to draw him into any discussion that means real argument. He also evades my statement that the tendency of preparedness is toward universal service, and does not even allude to my affirmation that Germany has exploded the theory that preparedness makes for peace. These are fair samples of his evasions. He tries to be humorous by relating the chivalrous conduct of the husband whose wife was slapped while she was on the street; but his joke does not apply here, for this is a case of a husband trying to prevent his wife from going on the street. Some men would laugh in the presence of death and joke at a funeral. Cheap wit and old "chestnuts" come easy.

After referring to one of Bishop Hoss's letters of travel, in which he is said to have attributed China's pitiful plight to military unpreparedness, Mr. Barbee asks, "Will Brother Ramsey repudiate Bishop Hoss?" He does not seem to see that there is a difference between the repudiation of a man and the repudiation of the man's opinions. Certainly I do not repudiate Bishop Hoss, whom no man honors more than I, but as an American citizen I claim the right to differ from him; and, if I may say it sub rosa, as an American citizen, freeborn, I may be permitted to differ from even Mr. Barbee, and affirm that China's pitiful plight is to be attributed to the fact that as a nation she has never received the Christian religion, which is the solution for all the pitiful plights of all the nations of earth—even for the "instant peril" which, as he thinks, is now threatening this nation.

I have never yet surrendered my right to think for myself, and never will; but Mr. Barbee apparently is letting the President do his thinking for him. Hear him: "The solemn warning from the responsible head of the Republic that we stand in grave and instant peril." If there is "instant and grave peril," then let the responsible head of the Republic "give the facts to the public. The ordinary American citizen is hard-headed and demands facts—not mere innuendos with nothing tangible to substantiate them. Let the "responsible head" of the Republic point out the foe who is about to invade our shores and then the common people, the backbone of the nation—not the political demagogues and munitions manufacturers who cry "wolf" when there is no wolf—but, I say, the common people, the patriots of the nation, will rally to his standard. But where will Mr. Barbee be? There is a difference between shouting patriotism and carrying the flag in the forefront of the battle line.

Mr. Barbee says: "There has been an immense amount of loose talk on the subject of peace." I have seen the word presumption in the dictionary, but I shall not use it in this connection. It seems to me that he has done some "loose" writing, yet he apparently regards himself as an expert in his exegesis of Scripture. Look at this: "He distinctly affirmed that he came not to bring peace but a sword," as if he did not know that our Lord alluded to the antagonism of sin to that of righteousness which is the fruit of faith in him. Why did he not quote those other words: "Peace I leave with you, my peace give I unto you?" He quotes Paul: "I have fought a good fight," as if these words of the apostle were written in justification of war. Let's try this original method of exegesis on another text. Paul said: "Let us run with patience the race set before us." Now, according to this new exegete's method, we conclude that Paul was in favor of the races, and the pastors of New Orleans are making a mistake in inveighing against the races of their city. Why did he not quote those other words of the same apostle: "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal but spiritual?"

The author of the "wordy" rejoinder appeals to history and it is not strange that he does so, for the history of the world is written in blood; but I challenge him to show by any fair interpretation that Jesus or any of the New Testament writers ever said or wrote a word in justification of war.

Mr. Barbee ridicules my assertion that we have no need to prepare for war, but I repeat the assertion and add that for a hundred years Europe has been fully armed and we have been safe. Now, with Europe bleeding to death, why should we work ourselves into hysteria and fear an invasion?

In December, 1914, the President said: "We have not been negligent of national defense." Now he says he has changed his mind, but vacillation of mind does not change facts. Despite rumors of war, no material facts have been given to the public to show that the President had any military reason for his change of mind. Gen. Nelson A. Miles, on Feb. 8, said to the Committee on Military and Naval Affairs that he did not fear an invasion, and Rear Admiral Victor Blue declared that the navy is now ready to meet any enemy it might be called upon to encounter in the Pacific. Why, then, the preparedness policy of the administration? I think this question may be answered by remembering that this is a presidential year, and the Democratic party is only frantic in its effort to anticipate the Republican party in manufacturing campaign thunder. In the meantime, the munitions manufacturers are cheering while the political pot boils, and will be close at hand when the time comes to divide the spoils. If this nation assumes the military burden advocated by the administration, as predicted by Mr. Barbee, I believe that within ten years the industries of the United States will be paralyzed, the young manhood giving its best years to military service, and the flower of this nation's citizenship will be dying in trenches. With this conviction, is it strange that I should lift what Mr. Barbee has been pleased to call my "puny" voice against the insane effort to frighten our people into believing that this nation is in "grave and instant peril?" I wish that The Voice would continue to raise its voice against preparedness, and that every other religious journal would join in the demand for peace till the voice of peace reverberates among the lofty mountain-peaks of this country and echoes along the valleys, so that the angels might almost be tempted to come to earth and sing again, "Peace on earth, good will toward men!" I quote from a beautiful poem by Mrs. L. M. Lipscomb, published in the issue of the Advocate containing the "wordy" and brilliant (?) rejoinder of Mr. Barbee:

"Tell me not in thrilling story
Of war's lasting fame and glory:
'Tis not true, believe it never,
Give me peace, sweet peace, forever.

Lay down your guns! With fiery pen,
Write, 'Peace on earth, good will to men!'
Send this message round the world,
'Till war's red flag's forever furled.

God haste the glad and glorious day
When peace and love shall hold full sway,
When bursting bombs and cannons' roar
Shall be heard nevermore."

Now, so far as I am concerned, this controversy is ended, if Mr. Barbee will let it end. Words from his brilliant pen can not change my convictions, which are based, as I believe, on the principles of the Christian religion as taught in the Bible, which is the rock upon which my faith is founded.

In closing, let me suggest that all who stand for peace write to their Congressmen, for, I tell you, this nation is indeed threatened with "grave and instant peril"—not an external peril, but an internal peril, the peril of militarism. Let me also urge that all who are for peace write to Hon. Clyde H. Tavenner, House of Representatives Office Building, Washington, D. C., for speeches revealing the motives at the bottom of the "preparedness" agitation. JOHN W. RAMSEY.

WHAT ABOUT VICKSBURG?

Dear Doctor: Having seen a letter recently asking if the waters would allow one to get into Vicksburg, I thought I would, with your permission, communicate to those in the east and elsewhere about the State, that Vicksburg is still on the map and that the Walnut Hills are high and dry. By the way, Doctor, that letter recalled one that was written some years ago by a traveler from the North, who had seen the Big Mississippi, opposite Natchez, when the Louisiana country was flooded, in which the writer said, with pathos, that Premiss' grave was ten feet under water! Being a citizen of that community at the time, my smiles were broad, for I knew that those ashes were safe from any floods that might come upon us unless God should forget his promise to Noah. But, Doctor, we have "shore had some water," as I heard a colored brother say, and if I may speak with the same emphasis, "we have also shore made some light." All trains on the Y. & M. V. were annulled for a few days, but they are again running fairly well on time, and it is an inspiring, as well as an awful, sight to see these trains plowing through water up to the steps. Several times I visited the levee street to watch the work go on, and could'nt suppress the exclamation, "Hurrah for the railroad!"

By the way, Doctor, I never had any kick coming or going against the railroads. When I recall how Bob (my horse) and I pulled through that swamp mud, fortunate to make two miles an hour, and some times one mile in two hours, it just will out, 'Hurrah for the railroads!" They may need regulating sometimes but I am inclined to think that public sentiment and gratitude needs a little regulating toward them.

Well, the water's falling, and in only a few days more we shall breathe easily again and start operations for the growing of cotton and the corn

It's been such a long time since I've seen anything from Vicksburg in your columns that I scarcely know where to begin. Since my old friend and presiding elder is writing you some interesting notes from the Hattiesburg District, I have been asking who is reporter for the Port Gibson District, and I've hesitated because I was afraid of "butting in" on some other fellow's joy; and, but for that letter, I might still be waiting patiently about, like Mary's little lamb.

Well, where shall I begin? O, yes Conference has come and gone and Jim did the kind thing to return me to Crawford Street (although he gave us a brand new elder), and Roberts to Gibson Memorial. If ever there was a fitting fit it has been Roberts' pastorate in that charge, and if ever a fellow had a true yokefellow, it's been L. L. Roberts to this pastor. His time goes out one year ahead of mine, and already I'm asking myself where can I find his match. By the way, Doctor, Roberts is the only first-class preacher in this city of 20,000 people—he rides around in his "auto" like a lord and often does the lordly thing to his foot-sore co-pastors. If you want to see our great National Park, now's your time to get a free ride with a first-class chauffeur and a first-class Methodist preacher.

The biggest event in the Methodism of Vicksburg since my last letter to the Advocate was the session of the Woman's Missionary Conference which was entertained jointly by the Gibson Memorial and Crawford Street Churches. Somebody said when we were securing homes for the entertainment of the delegates that "women don't love women;" but on the part of our women of Vicksburg, I will state that they feel lonesome yet because of their sisters' going. The danger of invidious distinctions forbids personal mention, but let me tell you, Doctor, those women dispatched their business just like Bishops, and D.D.'s, and connectional officers, and distinguished male visitors. Our Methodism in Vicksburg is richer for their coming.

Following immediately upon the adjournment of the Missionary Conference, Brother Neill, our Conference Secretary of Missions and Sunday Schools, gave us an institute of five sessions, all of which were good to edifying. Neill has a difficult work, but the beginning that he is making warrants a prophecy of success. If the Sunday school work does not take an upward movement, it will be no fault of his and his helpers. There is an inspiration, however, in his work. Although it may develop slowly, he is interesting the rising generation in church work.

This letter would not be complete, did I neglect to mention the visit of Dr. I. W. Cooper to our city and the helpful sermons he gave us. I would have resented his critical inspection of my comfortable, well apportioned quarters, had I not thought that his knowledge of a good thing would not let him consider a move from Whitworth and those agreeable surroundings. Come again, Doctor: these pulpits are open to you without further notice.

As long as there was anything like a fighting chance for our claims in Vanderbilt University, I was on that side; but it now appears to me that our energies would be better spent in concentrating on Emory University and the great institution at Dallas, and let bygones be bygones so far as Vanderbilt is concerned. Therefore, I am with you in your exhortation to that end. Good-bye.

OUR CHURCH AND AMUSEMENTS.

with vital godliness. Faithfulness at this juncture, on the part of preachers and people, will secure the proximate universality of the old-time simplicity and purity, and, with these, of the old-time power. What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? What communion hath light with darkness? What concord hath Christ with Belial? What agreement hath the temple of God with idols? Ye are the temple of the living God. "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

How This Chapter Was Eliminated.

Such was the open, deliberative, and careful process by which the foregoing chapter mentioning specifically the harmful amusements most widely prevalent was inserted in the Discipline, and such the method by which it was kept therein for sixteen years. We will now proceed to show how it was eliminated therefrom. The General Conference of 1906, held at Birmingham, Ala., had been in session for fifteen days, and the last day, the sixteenth in number, was fast speeding by. We quote from the Daily Advocate of May 22, 1906, giving the proceedings of the day of adjournment, the following being among the stenographer's final paragraphs:

"G. Alexander: I want to get some instructions from the General Conference with reference to the Appendix, Part IV, in the Discipline, containing the address on worldly amusements. It has been considered necessary that the General Conference order its continuance in the Discipline from time to time. And if it is desired that it be continued, the action will have to be taken now. But I understand that a member of the Conference has a resolution to propose, and I will be very glad if you will consider it now. I think it will occasion no discussion."

"O. E. Brown: I call for the order of business prepared by your sifting committee."

"R. E. Blackwell: I propose that the Bishops be requested to prepare a statement on the subject, to take the place of that item of the Discipline. It seems to me that the Bishops of 1906 are better able to make a statement on that subject than the Bishops of 1874."

"The Bishop: Reduce that to writing."

"A. F. Watkins: I make the point that unless a majority votes to take this out of order, it is not in order. And such a vote has not been made."

"G Alexander: I move to take this resolution out of its order, and that it be put upon its passage at once."

"This motion prevailed.

"The resolution was read as follows:

"'Resolved: 1. That Appendix No. 4 be left out of the next edition of the Discipline.

"'2. That the Bishops be requested to prepare a statement on the subject to take its place.'"

"This resolution was adopted.

"A. F. Watkins: A privileged communication: 'To the General Conference: Resolved that we, your pages, do thank you with unspeakable language for your kindness to us.' Signed by Edward Newell," and others.

There are several things in this procedure that should be specially noted:

1. It took place on the last day of the General Conference, within a few hours of its adjournment. The reference to the pages, who doubtless had been rewarded for their services and whose note of thanks was in hand, indicates how near the Conference was to being ended. As all know, at such a time many delegates have gone, and there is a great rush of business and everything is done in haste. It is the danger period of all legislative assemblies—the season when hurtful measures are enacted which would have little chance of passage when all the delegates are in their seats and are in a carefully deliberative frame of mind.

2. Not one word was said to call attention to the true significance of the action that was being taken. There was not the least indication that the policy of specifically mentioning dancing, card-playing, and theater-going as contrary to our General Rules was to be abandoned.

3. It was not intimated to the Conference, so far as the record shows, what the character of the new address was to be. Under the resolution adopted, there was quite as much authority to endeavor to make it more explicit, as there was to make it less so.

It was at this General Conference that the scheme to place a new statement of our Methodist faith in the Discipline, without repealing or modifying the Twenty-five Articles in a constitutional manner, was brought forward and adopted; and a large number of the ablest members of the body registered a ringing protest against this action, in which the following language was used: "Upon the convening of this Conference, the question had never been suggested to the Church at large. If it had ever been considered theretofore, as a matter for legislation, its authors kept it a secret from the great heart of the Church. A few days are not sufficient for the consideration and decision of such a momentous question. It is hasty legislation."

If such language could be used (and we think it was fully merited) against an enactment which was brought forward toward the middle of the General Conference session, which was referred to a Committee that submitted a report concerning it, and which was debated at considerable length, what ought to be said of the summary and most inconsiderate manner in which the deliberate action of four General Conferences was railroaded out of the Discipline and the Church's method of dealing with some of the most pernicious and generally prevalent evils of modern society was weakened and materially changed? And in view of the foregoing facts, what justification is there for, at least, an implied representation that the general membership of our Church has had a fair opportunity to pass upon the two policies in question, and that our people desired the change that was provided for in Birmingham in 1906, to be made?

What We Have Now.

Let us next examine the address of the Bishops which was substituted for the chapter in the Discipline that was discarded in the manner described. In our copy of the Discipline of 1906 no address of any kind appears—though the earliest editions of this little book are seldom issued sooner than three or four months after the adjournment of the General Conference; but we take it that the utterance referred to was printed in the later editions of that volume. As this deliverance appears in our copies of the Disciplines of 1910 and 1914, it is as follows:

THE ADDRESS OF THE BISHOPS ON WORLDLINESS.

(Prepared and published by order of the General Conference.)

It has been the custom of the bishops, in watching over the souls of those for whom they must give an account, to warn against the insidious influence of worldliness, which is one of the most subtle and relentless foes of spirituality. It is the spirit of the world in opposition to the spirit of Christ. It is this against which the beloved disciple warned the early Christians when he said: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world." The apostle had in mind the same harmful worldliness when instancing the foes of faith he summed them all up in one, and declared: "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

Imagine a state of society where all were dominated by the lust of the flesh and the lust of the eyes and the pride of life, and where all the customs of society were determined by such low standards, and it is evident that the conditions are absolutely opposed to a life of faith. Only Christianity could stop the brutal and inhuman ferocity of the gladiatorial shows and other forms of amusement which long dominated and brutalized the Roman populace. The indecencies of the stage can be checked by the same divine influence at work in society, as the obscenities and gross improprieties of the printed page, whether of the drama or the novel or the sensual poem, have been outlawed by the spirit of Christ that cleansed the temple of those who profaned it by unholy customs. Custom cannot make right. Custom is too often the unbridled spirit of worldliness, as in the days before Christianity exercised any restraint whatever. It is the mission of Christianity to change the customs of the world until they conform to the spirit of Christ.

The one law of the Church is to avoid what we know is not for the glory of God. This forbids the taking such diversions as cannot be used in the name of Christ, the singing those songs or reading those books which do not tend to the knowledge of God, and those forms of needless self-indulgence that unfit the believer for communion with God or for faithful and effective service for man. The law of expediency has the grip of moral duty when we abstain even from what is doubtful for the sake of others. To go to no place of amusement where we cannot invite our Lord to go with us, and to engage in no recreation on which we cannot invoke his blessing, is a safe rule of conduct toward God and man. This leaves to the Christian the safeguards of a divine presence in all things. Our Lord knew well the value of relaxation from a too strenuous life when he said to his disciples, "Come apart into a desert (or uninhabited) place, and rest awhile;" and he looked with complacency upon the sports of children as he noted their very language when at play in the streets of Jerusalem; but it was "The Lord in the Midst" who gave to such recreation the sanction of his presence and blessing.

The family altar, with its sanctities; the right observance of the Sabbath made for man; the avoidance of all that would secularize its sacred hours; the faithful attendance upon all its means of grace; and the cheerful co-operation with all who are aiding in the religious instruction of our children—must make the home the beneficent agency for good in forming and maintaining those lofty ideals of right living for which Christianity has ever stood. Thus the spirit which was in Christ must be in us also, and as many as are led by the spirit of Christ show themselves the sons of their Father. If we would be the children of our Father in heaven, we must adopt the rules of heaven for life on earth. In vain do we pray the model prayer if we do not seek to do his will on earth as it is done in heaven. Thus alone can his kingdom come.

The true mission of Christ is both to save and to leaven—to destroy the works of the devil, and to impart the power as well as the spirit of right living. Because the spirit that now rules among the children of disobedience is a spirit of worldliness, making men lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, making self rather than Christ the center of life and thought, bidding men live without God in the world, the avowed aim of Christianity is to enthrone the Lord Jesus Christ in the heart and to make no provision for fulfilling the lusts of the flesh. The expulsive power of a new and holy affection has ever been needed to keep the life of God in the soul of man. If Methodism has often seemed strenuous in insisting on abstaining from every form of evil, she has found her justification in the blessing of her Lord in influencing the lives of men. God forbid that she should ever fall so low as to throw down all barriers about the flock of Christ and, in her lust for numbers, admit to her communion those who have no supreme desire to flee from the wrath to come and to be saved from their sins, and who do not show this desire by the fruits of holy living. A passion for the souls of others, born of this desire, as well as the desire to please Him who has called us to be soldiers, will best prevent becoming entangled in the affairs of this life inconsistent with the discipline of holy living. With the battle lines drawn against the devil, the world, and the flesh (the sworn and cruel foes of the soul), this is no time to relax our vigilance. "There is no surcease in that war."

Finally, brethren, be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day; and having done all, to stand. Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God. Thus was our Lord equipped and armed in his temptations when he was tempted in all points as we are, yet without sin; for there is no temptation that overtaketh you but that there is provided a way of escape. Satan ever desires to have us that he may sift us as wheat. Our hope, O Lord, is in thee, who dost ever pray for us that our faith fail not.

Read this utterance carefully and compare it with the pronouncement which it displaced. Note its indefiniteness: dancing card-playing, and theater-going are not so much as even mentioned. It is made up of glittering generalities. And since it was written, if it has ever been passed upon and given the endorsement of any General Conference, we are not aware of it. Nor does it seem to have been held to be necessary, as in the former case, to have the action of each succeeding General Conference as a prerequisite to its continuance. What factor in the latter enactment differentiated it in this particular from the preceding one, we are unable to state.

Whether this address, along with all else that we have in the Discipline or elsewhere bearing on this important matter, is adequate, and whether the present status in our Church respecting it is preferable to the one which it superseded, are questions that we must leave to be discussed next week, having already consumed more space than we could well spare at this time. We would respectfully suggest to our readers that they preserve this number of the Advocate, that they may be able to review and weigh all that may have been said when the issue under consideration shall have been fully presented. It is our conviction that the things therein involved are of sufficient gravity to be entitled to the earnest and prayerful attention of all our preachers and people, from the most distinguished to the most obscure.

IS THE WORLD GROWING BETTER?

The word "better" occurs 117 times in the Bible. The first time is in Gen. 29:19 and the last time is in 2 Peter 2:21. It is used with the definite article or limiting adjective, "the," four times: Eccl. 6:11, 1 Cor. 8:8, 1 Cor. 11:17, and Heb. 7:7. It is used in our language as a noun, adjective, adverb, and as a transitive and intransitive verb, but its true import is, the increase of what is already good. It implies comparison and, of course, it is the higher and more excellent degree, and yet it is used with reference to human beings, circumstances, conditions, states, morals, progress, etc., irrespective of the original character of each. But in answering the question, "Is the World Growing Better?" we must hold ourselves rigidly to what "better" really is in the light of the Bible when applied to human beings as to their rightness with God and their preparedness to meet Christ in judgment and their fituess for Heaven. In order to a correct and complete conclusion. If in our answer to this question we should conceive of the world as an existence so completely dissociated from the Church as to be without its influences, we should not hesitate to answer most emphatically that it is not growing better, but worse and worse in all of its different relations of life. Again, if we think of the world in the sense of all the human family within the range of Bible light and Christian influences, whether in the Church or not, we would say that it is growing better in mentalities, physicalities, temporalities, and even faith in the sense of an assent or mental state, if we use "better" as its plasticity allows. To be certain of that, we have only to view the achievements of science, the learning and scholarship of this age, the universality of education, the training and development of the body, the commodious and comfortable school buildings, health-favoring sanitariums and hospitals, railroad accommodations, the autos, the ocean palaces, the submarines, the flying air machines, the increasing wealth, the rapidly growing universality of Jesus Christ, our Lord, the increasing membership of the Church and the most perfect organization of nearly everything.

Let us now answer the question, "Is the world growing better?" in the Scriptural sense of "better." In order that our answer may be clearly seen as being truly Scriptural, let us show the real meaning of certain Scriptures that have been misunderstood. They are these: "That unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear" (Isa. 45:23), and Christ said, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." (John 12:32.) Others like these could be quoted, but these are sufficient. These and like Scriptures are understood to mean that the time will come, and is rapidly approaching, when all and every one will be a Christian in the real sense of the term Christian; but let it not be overlooked that what seems to be taught by one Scripture must not contradict the teachings of another, and if it does, then one must remember that the meaning he thought was so evident is not its meaning at all. The meaning of the above and all like Scriptures is not that the period will come when all will be right with God—not at all; and to be convinced that it is not, let us quote the following: "Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." (Matt. 7:13, 14.) "So shall it be at the end of the world: the angels shall come forth and sever the wicked from among the just." (Matt. 13:49.) "And as it was in the days of Noe, so also shall it be in the days of the Son of man." (Luke 17-26.) "Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" (Luke 18:8.) From these Scriptures any one should see that it is clearly taught that all will assent to the fact that Christ is the Savior of the world. In other words, all will believe that he is, as the Jews believed God to the degree that they met to worship him, paid tithes, fasted twice weekly, were honest in their dealings, observed the Sabbath, and compassed land and sea to get converts; and yet Christ said of them: "This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me." (Matt. 15:8.) When Christ comes he will find all believing and howling, confessing, building fine churches, having fine preaching, paying good salaries to Christian workers, every one hearing the gospel, studying the Bible, and every department of Church work carried on in a most finished style.

But the answer has not been completed to the question, "Is the world growing better?" In Biblical teachings no one is growing better truly and normally until he has had a spiritual change as Christ declared necessary, when he said: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the Kingdom of God." (John 3:5.) He can not grow better in anything in the true sense till he is born again, and therefore "growing better" in the Scriptural sense begins with "being born again," and is a broadening, a developing, an unfolding, or as Peter expresses it: "Add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity." (2 Pet. 1:5, 6, 7).

The following are some signs of not "growing better:" (1) Self-vindication even when wrong, whether in word or deed; (2) ignorement of other's rights, whether possessions, relations, or merits; (3) a growing impatience and nervousness; (4) a growing greed that disregards the comfort, claims, and character of others, whether in religion, edueation, money matters, Christian or secular work; (5) a declination of true courtesy, publicly or privately; (6) the tendency of organizations and cliques to cower and control, irrespective of principles; (7) a growing disregard for sound devotion, seriousness, gravity, and normal emotions in religion; (8) a growing desire and effort for self-exaltation; (9) a decrease of family and private prayers twice daily; (10) a growing neglect of a Scriptural training of children; (11) an increasing hatred for opponents in politics that does not hesitate to slander them and take delight in repeating even lies against them; (12) the restlessness, dissatisfaction, and unhappiness of womanhood; (13) a decline in family religion; (14) a greater emphasis placed on finances and numbers than on the salvation of souls; (15) advocating and accomplishing reforms for selfish ends; (16) sacrificing honor, truth, and principle in order to be classed as optimists.

Other signs of not growing better could be added, but we feel sure that these are sufficient to justify the answer to the question that the world, in the seuse of our whole race, or that of a majority of our race, is not growing better in the Scriptural sense to which we have already called attention. Then "is the world growing better," in the sense of limiting it to the Church as an organized spiritual force? Remembering that the true spiritual Church of God does not consist of any but those born of the Holy Spirit and who are adding the Christian virtues to character; or in other words, those who are holy in heart, teachable, humble, meek, self-sacrificing, grave, reverent, honest, unspotted from the world, truthful, diligent in good works, confessing and avoiding faults, hating all sins, talking their religion everywhere, increasing in faith, in love, in efforts to save the lost, in all useful knowledge, self-control, in mortifying the deeds of their bodies, etc., it must be concluded that the world in the sense of the true spiritual Church of God is growing better, whether its number is 100, or 1000 or 1,000,000 or more. Let every one be sure he is a part of God's true Church.

MRS. HOYLE RETIRES.

Dear Brother Meek: At the recent session of the Woman's Missionary Conference it was deemed wise to elect another President, owing to the fact that Mrs. Vic Thompson Hoyle is in such poor health. She is recovering from her recent surgical treatment, but not so speedily as her friends wish, and those who love her most thought she should have rest of mind and body until she is herself again. Let the Church be much in prayer that this competent, consecrated handmaiden of the Lord may rapidly recover and soon take up the labors in which she is so useful. Under her presidency, the Woman's Missionary Society made wonderful advancement, and it seems a strange dispensation of Providence that she should be forced to lay aside her plans and aspirations for this work that she loved so much; but sometimes we must wait patiently on the Lord. Your friend,

Starkville. HELEN P. WOODWARD.

A decline in Germany's birth rate has alarmed the Teutons. In commenting upon what must follow if it is not checked, one statesman went so far as to predict that Germany would soon be in the position of France, with deaths exceeding births. The Government is thoroughly awake to the danger which confronts it and has consulted specialists about the best methods to be used in combating the evil.

During the year 1915, 759,060 men were employed in mines in the United States. The number of deaths was 2264, which was a death rate of 2.95 per thousand, as against 3.22 the previous year. The death rate for last year was lower than it had been for sixteen years. We are led to believe that the mining industry is being made less dangerous, or that the men engaged in it are learning to take better care of themselves.

Cats and mice lick themselves, while monkeys scratch. These are animals' ways of bathing."

The three hundredth anniversary of the death of William Shakespeare will occur next April. The English will not be able to have the great national celebration which they had long been planning for, on account of the European war, and so the duty of paying homage to the Bard of Avon will devolve chiefly upon America. No better way to celebrate this great event in the history of English literature can be found than to begin at once a study of the poet's works.

AS A MATTER OF INFORMATION.

(This utterance appeared as an editorial in the Texas Christian Advocate of February 17, coming from the pen of Dr. W. D. Bradfield. It is illuminative in some respects, and is very suggestive as to why the pro-Vanderbilt men are apparently so desirous of hanging on to the patronage of the Southern Methodist Church, after having, by the most reprehensible methods, stripped her of her rights in the government of the institution.)

Having graduated in both the Academic and Theological Department of Vanderbilt University, naturally we have been interested to know how our old alma mater started out on her new career as an independent school. But until now we have found no one who could give us the desired information.

Dr. H. C. Tolman, Dean of the College of Arts and Science of Vanderbilt University, in the October-December number of the University Quarterly, gives the record of new students entering the College of Arts and Science and the School of Engineering in September, 1915. The total number is 158.

The institutions from which these students came are given by Dean Tolman. Three schools in Nashville, namely the Hume-Fogg High School, the Ward-Belmont College and the George Peabody College, furnished thirty-eight of the 158 students entering in September last, leaving 120 as coming from all other schools in the South. The University of Texas furnishes the lone student from our great State.

The Quarterly also gives the number of theological students as follows: "Since the fall term opened forty-five theological students and candidates preparing for the ministry or for other forms of missionary and distinctly Christian service have entered the university."

Dr. Tillett thinks the Biblical Department, "in the providence of God," has entered upon "its wider and more beneficent service to the larger Kingdom of Christ."

Well, we do not wish Dr. Tillett and his university any harm, but what a pity that a few ambitious men should have diverted the institution from the plans of its founders and those of its largest single benefactor, good old Commodore Vanderbilt! Mr. Vanderbilt (Chancellor Garland tells us) was constrained to make his gift to the corporation of the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, because he believed our great Church would insure the university a dependable constituency. What a pity, we repeat, that ambitious men with dreams of a "New Harvard of the South" and else should have upset the old Commodore's cherished hopes! The sin of these ambitious men is as great against Commodore Vanderbilt as it is against the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

We strove earnestly during our membership on the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University to get our fellow-members on the Board to realize that it requires a student body as well as a faculty and an endowment to make a university.

We have been wondering what Dr. Tillett will do with his great lectures on "Calvinism," "Arminianism," "Moral Free Agency," "Future and Eternal Punishment," etc., now that he enters upon his "wider and more beneficent task." These great lectures cannot be reconstructed to suit the "points" of liberal theology in his new program. Will not the Dean give his Church one last service by publishing his great lectures upon which his old boys so voraciously fed?

THE LITTLE WHITE RABBIT AND THE WISHING WELL.

(An old story retold.)

By Helen Argyle.

Once upon a time there was a dear little white rabbit, a nice little cuddly rabbit, with a pink nose and pink lined ears. He was just the nicest, cuddly little rabbit, but somehow he never was satisfied with himself. He always wanted to be something that he wasn't.

One day old Mrs. Puddy Duck went by on her way to the pond, and Little White Rabbit looked kind of unhappy and said, "Ma-ma, I wish I had nice webbed feet and could go swimming."

Soon Mr. Grey Squirrel came frisking by. "Ma-ma," whined Little White Rabbit, "I wish I had a pretty bushy tail like Mr. Squirrel."

Don't you know that silly little rabbit even wanted Mr. Hedgehog's quills? So one day Mr. Hedgehog said to him, "Why don't you go down to the Wishing Well and make your wish?"

"Where's the Wishing Well?" cried Little White Rabbit.

"Go right through the woods and down into the valley and you'll find it. You make a wish, take a drink, get up and turn around three times and you will have your wish."

Almost before he was through speaking Little White Rabbit started off as hard as he could go through the woods. Presently he found the prettiest little green cup of a well. Now, just as he was about to take a drink a beautiful red bird flew into the tree just opposite to him.

"Oh, I wish I had pretty red wings like Mr. Red Bird," he said, before he thought. Then he remembered about the well and leaned over and took a little drink. Then he raised up and turned around three times very slowly.

What do you think happened then? He felt a little pain right in his shoulders, just like he was cutting teeth, and presently two pretty red wings came out. Little White Rabbit was so delighted he couldn't keep still. He hopped all around. He didn't know much about flying, but he thought he'd try. So home he went, half hopping, half flying. When he got home—would you believe it?—his own mother didn't know him.

"Get away from here. I don't know you. I never saw anything like you before; you can't come in here with my little baby rabbits." She was so frightened and so excited that she pushed the door to so suddenly that she almost caught his little pink nose in it.

He was beginning to be very unhappy, but he went on down the road to Mrs. Puddy Duck's. She had wings and all the little ducks had wings; surely they wouldn't be afraid of him. His red wings were lots prettier than theirs anyway. But, no sir, the little ducks screamed when they saw him and Mrs. Puddy Duck waddled out and gave him one look. That seemed to be all she could stand, for she hurried in and slammed the door right in his face.

So he went on down the road to Mr. Grey Squirrel's house. Mr. Squirrel came out and looked at him "kind of undecided like." At first he took Little White Rabbit for his cousin, Mr. Flying Squirrel, and was about to invite him in. Little White Rabbit began to feel more comfortable, but as he turned around a little to show his pretty new wings, Mr. Squirrel saw that he didn't have a bushy tail, but just a little ball of cotton where a squirrel's tail ought to be. So Mr. Squirrel shook his head slowly and frisked away in search of nuts for supper. Then Little White Rabbit remembered that he wouldn't have liked Mr. Squirrel's supper even if he had invited him in.

So there wasn't anything else for him to do but to go on to Mr. Hedgehog's house. When he got there Mr. Hedgehog laughed and laughed. He knew Little White Rabbit and remembered telling him about the Wishing Well, so he wasn't afraid. He laughed so that the unhappy little rabbit was miserable, but he finally told him that he might come in and spend the night if he could sleep on the floor. Little White Rabbit was very grateful, but when he tried to go to sleep, no matter which way he turned, he rolled against sticky little burrs that hurt his soft little sides, and he didn't know what on earth to do with the new wings. They were dreadfully in his way.

He was very miserable and wished very much that he was back in his own warm home with his little brothers and sisters. Then he began to cry for his mother. This woke up old Mr. Hedgehog and put him in an awful humor, but Little White Rabbit just kept on crying all night long.

By the time it was dawn the next morning Mr. Hedgehog was completely worn out, so he leaned out of bed and said to poor Little White Rabbit, "Here, you little scamp, just as soon as the sun gets up well you take yourself down to that Wishing Well and wish those pesky wings off again."

But Little White Rabbit didn't wait for the sun to get up high. Just as soon as he saw the light peeping through the trees he was out of the house and running lickity-clip down the valley.

Somehow now he is glad he is a nice, cuddly little white rabbit, and doesn't even want to be what he isn't.

Are boys and girls ever like this little rabbit, I wonder?—The Presbyterian of the South.

THE INDIAN ON THE NICKEL.

Not many people know that the new five-cent piece bears the portrait of a real live Indian. It is the famous Sioux Chief, Iron Tail. In foreign countries the faces of kings or queens are often placed on the money of the land. In the United States we have a picture of Lincoln on our new pennies, and McKinley and a number of other statesmen on our paper money, but Iron Tail is the only living man who is shown in this way. Of course the designer used his picture because his face is typical of all Indians. But the chief is very proud of his distinction. When any one asks him for his picture he promptly gives them one of the new nickels. On the opposite side of these coins is an excellent representation of the buffalo, which was so closely associated with the old life of the Indians of the plains.—Christian Intelligencer.

MAN IS WEAKEST ANIMAL OF ALL.

In proportion to size, man is one of the weakest animals on the earth. The muscles of a large sized oyster will support a weight of thirty-seven pounds. There is a crab that will lift 192 times its own weight. This is the equivalent of an average size man raising 73,800 pounds.

Felix Plateau, a Belgian scientest, who made many experiments, found that the strength of a fly which was able to lift a matchstick compared with a man's supporting with his feet a beam fourteen feet long and two feet six inches square.

There is a little bug that can drag six matches, equivalent to a man's pulling 330 beams as big as himself.

To measure the strength of insects, Plateau constructed delicate harness attached to a weighing machine. By prodding the insects he made them move. Then he piled on weights until they stopped. By this means he found that a bee, weight for weight, was thirty times as strong as a horse.—St. Louis Republic.

DEBT EXTINGUISHED.

Dear Dr. Meek: The Main Street Methodist Church, Hattiesburg, celebrated the first of March by paying in full its $15,000 debt. We are preparing for a great dedicatory service in the early spring, the date to be announced later. The Lydian Circle of the Church is installing a handsome pipe organ which costs $3000. It will be ready for use by Sunday week with no debt on it.

A RECOLLECTION OF MY FATHER.

Perhaps the most exalted picture of my father (Dr. C. G. Andrews) that I hold in memory is as he used to sing two of Fanny Crosby's hymns "More Than Life To Me" and "Thou My Everlasting Portion." It was at Pe Jackson, Miss., prayer meeting that I heard him sing them; probably they had just been issued from Fanny Crosby's precious song treasury. As he sang:

"Every day, every hour,
Let me feel that cleansing power.
May thy tender love to me,
Bind me closer, closer, Lord, to thee.

"Through this changing world below
Lead me gently, gently as I go;
Trusting thee I cannot stray
I can never, never lose my way."

we felt sure that this was the language of his heart.

"Thou my everlasting portion,
More than friend, or life, to me;
All along my pilgrim journey,
Savior, let me walk with thee."

—this expressed his desire to value our Savior above all and to walk with him.

OUR HONOR ROLL.

This roll is to be made of the charges in which all of the stewards are subscribers to the Advocate. At present it stands as follows:

1. Ripley and Blue Mountain, Miss., Rev. R. P. Neblett, pastor.

YET EFFICACIOUS AND AMPLE.

The Gospel of Christ is still "the power of God unto salvation." None of its efficacy has been lost. When it is preached in its purity and fullness and is believed, it will produce the same results in human hearts to-day that it did in Apostolic times. That it should be faithfully presented from the pulpit, and illustrated in consecrated, holy lives, is now, as has ever been the case since the primal fall, the world's greatest need. Thus to proclaim it and live it and influence others about him to translate its sublime truths into experience and conduct, is every pastor's highest duty and privilege. And it is by leading his own flock to embrace it in its deepest and largest significance that a minister may feel certain that he is effectively aiding in the mighty struggle that is going on between right and wrong throughout the earth. Every man who keeps the light brightly burning in his own corner helps to increase the radiance that sin-blinded men need to make them see the pathway to the skies.

And so far as our own Church is concerned, while many things are far from what they should be, there is no cause for despair. The great body of our preachers and people are yet sound in the faith and are loyal and true. When they see the existing situation as it is and bestir themselves, we believe that the things that now seem menacing will be swept away. At any rate, the future of the pastor who is faithful is as bright as it ever was. The promises of God still stand, and are undiminished in their fulness. They who serve the Master with fidelity here below shall triumphantly reign with him above. The assurance of this should be enough to call forth the best that is in every disciple of Jesus—especially so in the case of those whom the Chief Shepherd has chosen to be the under-shepherds of his sheep. What greater honor should any Christian crave than that of remaining unshakenly true to his Lord at a time when so many are forsaking him, as Demas did Paul, because of "a love for this present world."

A BEAUTIFUL DEVOTION.

Miss Helen Keller, perhaps the most famous blind woman now living, visited Jackson, Miss., last week on a lecturing tour, speaking there at the Capitol Street Methodist Church. The Jackson Daily News of March 3 thus describes a very interesting incident connected with her trip to Mississippi's Capital City, which illustrates anew the strong and beautiful attachment that often springs up between white and black people in the South:

"This morning, as the ladies of the committee on decoration of the Capitol Street Methodist Church went down to the spacious church on Capitol and Adams, to place their flowers for this evening's entertainment they found the steps preempted by a colored woman, evidently from the country, who even at that early hour was waiting to see the great woman who is to lecture there to-night, and but one glance at her was necessary for Mrs. Dunning of the committee to discover that something out of the ordinary had brought this woman to Jackson to see Helen Keller.

"And so it proved, as the woman had been Helen Keller's nurse in her baby-days, and was without doubt deeply devoted to her dependent little charge. For many years she had lived in Alabama and though she had not seen Helen Keller since her twelfth year, she had lovingly and loyally served her in her baby-days, and when yesterday she chanced to hear that Miss Keller was to visit Jackson to-day and to lecture in the Methodist Church she determined to come to see her, and so she walked the six miles from her country home, leaving her four children alone in their cabin, that she might again see the child of her adoration.

"Her anxiety to see Miss Helen was pathetic, and very beautiful, and Mrs. Dunning sent her to the station with a note to the matron, and when the G. & S. I. train came in the faithful nurse was the first to give a loving greeting to Jackson's distinguished visitor, and her friend, Mrs. Macey. Mrs. Macey at once recognized the negro woman, and bade her, seemingly, a glad welcome, and Miss Keller was even more pleased to find so unexpectedly in this city so strong and true a link to her childhood.

"Indeed so pleased were they that they gathered the travel-weary woman up with their other belongings, and as this story is being written the faithful negress is at the hotel with them and again doing for her beloved charge the little intimate services which long ago were her privilege, and thereby is she giving happiness to her own heart and to the sweet heart of the noble woman whom she served in baby-days."

A TIMELY DISCUSSION.

Colonel E. C. Reeves, of Johnson City, Tenn., hit the mark squarely in his recent discussion of the proposed new charter of our Holston Conference schools in a recent issue of the Nashville Christian Advocate. No Methodist Board of Trustees ought to have the initiative in selecting its members. Why distrust to any extent the Methodist Church, acting through its regularly organized Conferences, in such matters? We believe that potentially, at least, some Church body should have full control of all the agents who execute any trust for the Church. This is the case in the government of Millsaps College; the patronizing Annual Conferences exercise, without restriction from any other quarter, the right to name its trustees.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

In renewing his subscription on Feb. 29, Rev. W. D. Bass, of Corinth, Miss., says: "I have just returned home from Dexter, Ky., where I assisted my brother, Rev. J. H. Bass, in a fine meeting."

Rev. A. R. Beasley, of Poplar Creek, Miss., reports that the work in his charge has started off well. His letter brought us 3 subscriptions to the Advocate, for which we extend him our thanks.

Rev. J. J. Garner, of Kilmichael, Miss., gives us a club of 5 subscribers, and reports a good meeting at Stuart, Miss., in which he had the valuable assistance of Evangelist J. H. Bell, of Columbus.

It is stated that our Algiers congregation has selected as a site for their proposed new church a choice lot on Opelousas Avenue, between Verret and Valette Streets. Much interest is being shown in this projected enterprise.

Dr. S. H. Werlein preached to two large audiences at the First Methodist Church last Sunday. He discussed at the evening hour in a forceful and impressive manner the evils of the restricted district in New Orleans.

The Sunday school room of our First Church at Baton Rouge, La., is soon to be overhauled. The Junior Aid Society, which obviously must be a very live organization, has pledged itself to raise $600 of the money needed for this purpose.

Rev. J. G. Johnson, of Black Hawk, Miss., gives us a club of 10 subscriptions, and adds: "All goes well up this way." Several of these subscribers were from Coila. Nowhere would we rather have readers than among the good people of Carroll County.

Mr. S. D. Gordon, whose devotional talks have made him famous, will be in New Orleans again in April, and will deliver addresses daily while here at the First Methodist and First Presbyterian Churches. His stay will extend from April 9 to April 13.

Rev. S. A. Brown, of Kosciusko, Miss., has our thanks for a club of 5 subscriptions (four of them new), forwarded on March 3. We have learned from other sources that Brother Brown is having a largely successful pastorate in his present historic charge.

Rev. James L. Cady, of Greensburg, La., has called for lists of our subscribers at all the postoffices in his charge. Referring to his pastorate, he says: "Our work is making progress along all lines. Our prayer meetings especially are increasing in interest."

The work of repairing old Felicity Street Church, which was wrecked by the storm last September, is going steadily forward. This congregation has been fortunate in having as its pastor at this crucial time Dr. Felix R. Hill, who is a remarkably tactful and resourceful leader.

Brother A. L. Dietrich, our Divisional Sunday School Field Secretary, is expected to be with Brother Coleman at a number of his announced Sunday School Institutes in Louisiana. Brother Dietrich has given an excellent account of himself at similar gatherings in North Mississippi.

Brother L. R. Bock, an enthusiastic Epworth League worker of this city, sends us the following notice: "The New Orleans Epworth League Union will meet Tuesday evening, March 14, at the Mary Werlein Mission, 1026 Tchoupitoulas Street. All are cordially invited to attend."

Rev. I. T. Reames, pastor of Queensborough Church, Shreveport, observed "Advocate Day" on February 21, and forwarded us 6 subscriptions on the day following. And he thinks that there may yet be others. Thank you, Brother Reames. We wish that more of our pastors would have an "Advocate Day."

Rev. V. C. Curtis, of Lexington, Miss., spent a couple of days in New Orleans last week, and we scarcely need to say that we were glad to see him. There is not a more effective pastor in the North Mississippi Conference than Brother Curtis. He is now doing at Lexington a most remarkable work.

Rev. C. A. Battle, of Baton Rouge, La., writes: "The subscriptions sent in by Rev. J. R. Murphy, as shown in your last week's statistical exhibit, were from First Church. Brother Murphy is helping us." The Baton Rouge brethren are doing a good part by the Advocate, and we highly appreciate their efforts in its behalf.

Rev. P. O. Lowrey, of Donaldsonville, La., writes: "Rev. J. H. Bell, of Columbus, Miss., is to begin a meeting with us here next Sunday. Brother Breithaupt, of Houma, La., will also be with us to help in a general way. We will use a tent. We crave the prayers of the readers of the Advocate that these services may be crowned with a large measure of success."

Rev. W. E. Thomas, pastor of the Mary Werlein and St. Mark's Missions, is one of the most wide-awake workers in New Orleans. He is having success in his labors, though his facilities, especially at St. Mark's Hall, are by no means what they should be. We ought to have a commodious plant of our own, properly arranged and equipped, for that thriving mission.

From Bay Springs, Miss., our worthy pastor, Rev. J. B. King, sends us 16 subscriptions—1 new and 1 for two years. We scarcely need to say that we are grateful for this good work in the interest of our paper. Referring to his field, Brother King says: "Things are progressing nicely in the Bay Springs and Montrose charge. We will begin our revival meetings the last of April."

Rev. Hilary Westbrook, one of our Meridian pastors, writes: "We are getting along smoothly with our work at the Seventh Avenue Church. The interest manifested in the various phases of Church activity is most gratifying. Our parsonage is now in process of construction. Our faithful and much loved presiding elder, Rev. J. T. Leggett, is helping us to push this enterprise."

In a business note to our office, Rev. E. L. Langford, of Anguilla, Miss., says: "The water is now going down rapidly and things look more encouraging. I think that within the next two weeks I will be able to get over my work again." A number of our pastors and flocks residing on the Mississippi River have had rather a trying time for the past few weeks and we are pleased to know that there is a prospect of brighter days in the near future.

In a letter bringing us 6 subscriptions, Rev. C. B. Powell, of Plain Dealing, La., appends the following note: "Things are progressing in an encouraging manner in my charge. We have already had several accessions to the Church. I am much pleased with my people, and am praying that we may accomplish much for the Master this year. We have made one Sabbath in each month 'Missionary Sunday,' which is something new here."

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere for two or more subscriptions sent in within the past few days: Rev. R. V. Fulton, Zachary, La., 4; Rev. A. H. Parker, Coushatta, La., 4; Rev. W. E. Akin, Clay, La., 4; Rev. W. S. Shipman, Itta Bena, Miss., 10; Rev. J. F. Dring, Ringgold, La., 5; Rev. J. C. Park, Sardis, Miss., 2; J. B. Conner, Arkabutla, Miss., 7; Rev. C. A. Battle, Baton Rouge, La., 5.

Dr. U. S. Wasson, of Moorhead, Miss., has sent us an interesting report of the work of our church in that growing town, under the leadership of the accomplished young pastor, Rev. R. H. Ruff, which, because of the crowded condition of our columns, we had reluctantly to defer publishing until next week. This congregation has lately enjoyed a gracious revival meeting, in which the pastor was assisted by Rev. W. B. Hogg, of Laurel, Miss.

Several typographical errors occurred in the Advocate of last week—some in the Editor's own writing, and some in the articles of others. But in all cases the meaning was obvious; so we will not take the space to correct them. Since the war conditions have been prevailing, our office force has been weaker than it was formerly, and at times there come calls which prevent us from exercising as much care in this respect as we should like to do.

Rev. W. W. Jones, our hustling pastor at Lula, Miss., cheered us a few days since with a club of 10 subscriptions (9 of them new), with a check to correspond. A number of these names looked quite familiar to the Editor, who has by no means forgotten the many kindnesses that he received in the years agone at the hands of the good people of Lula, Dubbs, and Rich. May a gracious Providence continue to smile upon them! We thank you for this good work, Brother Jones.

It is expected that a meeting of the Executive Committees of the Boards of Education of the Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences will be held at Jackson, Miss., on Friday afternoon and night, March 17, to plan for making a campaign in the interest of the Lamar Law School building at Emory University. Bishop Candler is expected to be present and make an address. Other members of the Boards of Education, the presiding elders of the two Conferences, and any others interested are cordially invited to attend.

Writing on February 24, Rev. H. M. Ellis, Field Secretary of the Memphis Methodist Hospital, says: "We have to-day passed the $4000 mark in our receipts from 'Hospital Day'; but this is a long way from the needed $35,000. I got nearly $600 in cash and subscriptions at Cleveland, Miss., last Sunday, and several of them proposed to double their amounts if it is made $1000 later, which of course it will be. Brownsville, Tenn., recently resolved to undertake to raise $5000 for an endowed memorial room in the hospital, and they will do it."

Under date of February 28, Rev. J. W. Bell, presiding elder of the Aberdeen District, writes as follows: "Rev. A. H. Williams and his wife have been critically ill with la grippe for the past ten days. They are thought, however, to be better at this writing. Brother R. P. Goar has also been seriously sick, but has now passed the crisis and is improving. Let the brethren join in prayer for these faithful workers." We regret to be apprised of the illness of these friends, but we are gratified to know that the worst seems to have passed, and we hope that they will soon entirely recover.

Rev. C. A. Northington, pastor of the New Albany (Miss.) Circuit, leads the van, and both the Publisher and Editor take off their hats to him in grateful appreciation of the service which he has rendered the Conference organ. Read what he says: "I am mailing you a club of 45 subscriptions, with a check to cover the cost—25 of these are new. We have held our first quarterly conference. Rev. T. H. Dorsey, our new presiding elder, is one of the best. Things are moving on well with us, and, with some 300 people reading the Advocate within the bounds of my charge, I am expecting great things to happen this year."

Rev. W. T. Woodward, of Oak Grove, La., sent us an order for 7 Bibles and 1 subscriptions to the Advocate—a service for which we extend to him thanks. Referring to his pastorate, Brother Woodward says: "My work is doing finely—better in some respects than in any charge I have ever had. The outlook is very bright, though we are completely surrounded by water now." We are happy to have this good report from Brother Woodward, and we hope that his charge will not be subjected to the hindrances of an overflow.

Brother F. E. Otts, of Homer, La., has brought us under obligations to him for a club of 20 subscribers (2 of these paying for two years). Brother Otts, a layman, is one of the Advocate's highly esteemed friends. We shall not soon forget this and other like kindnesses that he has performed for our paper. Homer is one of the choice towns of Louisiana, and our church there is enjoying a large degree of prosperity under the pastoral superintendence of Rev. J. G. Snelling. The debt on the present attractive house of worship was liquidated a few weeks ago, and there is now talk of enlarging its Sunday school facilities.

The Centennial of the American Bible Society was celebrated here, at the First Methodist Church, last Sunday afternoon with appropriate exercises, which began at 4 o'clock. Dr. William I. Haven, Corresponding Secretary of the Society, delivered the principal address. Since its organization in the spring of 1816, this Society has been one of Christendom's most effective evangelical agencies. It has branches in various parts of the world, has been instrumental in getting the Scriptures translated into more than 80 languages, and has scattered abroad among the nations millions of copies of the whole Bible and portions of it. The chief centennial exercises will be conducted in New York in May.

Rev. A. S. Lutz, the capable and brotherly presiding elder of the Monroe District, in forwarding his second round of appointments, says: "At present we are hampered by the high waters coming through the Arkansas and Newelton breaks. All the low land in my district is covered with water, and some of the preachers cannot meet half of their appointments. The outlook is serious, but we are hoping that the situation will soon improve. Every pastor is standing at his post of duty and doing what can be done amidst the great anxiety of the people. Some of our preachers are in need because of the high waters, and the future has possibly little in store for them. I am looking forward to a year of gracious revivals, and as a consequence hope to see an advance all along the line."

We are receiving very much more copy, especially that bearing on the work of boards and lay leaders, etc., these days that we can possibly find space for. We are doing our best to get in all the matter than we can, but our forms will hold only so much; and there are certain departments that must be kept up. It would, on account of the pressure that is on us for space, be well for the directors of the various departments of the work to communicate directly with those whom they wish to reach by means of multiple copies, etc., sending to the Advocate only brief announcements or statements of general interest. Why send to a publication read by 30,000 or 40,000 people lengthy exhortations which concern only a few persons in a single locality or district, who in a little time could be reached by personal letters? The former may be an easy way to discharge such a task, but is it just and fair to the over-burdened Conference organ?

MERIDIAN DISTRICT NOTES.

Rev. C. A. Schultz, of the Daleville charge, continues to work in his usual vigorous style. As it should be, the spiritual comes first with this pastor. At his regular Wednesday night prayer meeting service recently, when he had Rev. B. L. Sutherland, who was visiting him, to preach, there were ten professions of conversions. He is planning an aggressive evangelistic campaign throughout his charge.

The Sunday schools of this district are planning for a great "forward march" under the leadership of Rev. J. L. Neill, Field Secretary of the Conference. There are to be three Institutes held within the next month or so: one for the north division at DeKalb; one for the central division at Meridian; and the third for the southern division at Shubuta. The pastor and the superintendent and one delegate from each church within the division are expected to attend.

Bishop Morrison, while holding our Conference at Hazlehurst in 1912, said: "It would be a means of grace if some of our brethren would purchase and USE a typewriter." Some folks are slow in availing themselves of this "means of grace." However that may be, it appears to be a certain fact that Rev. J. M. Corley, of Enterprise, Miss., has purchased himself just recently one brand-new Woodstock typewriter. Let's write to him, brethren! He tells the writer that he is well pleased with his venture and would be delighted to even sell typewriters to the derelict brethren. Brother Corley is one of our most faithful men, and is now past the first quarter of his fourth year at Enterprise and Stonewall.

THE METHODIST REVIEW FOR APRIL.

To the Preachers and Laymen Methodism:

The April number of the Methodist Review, to appear about March 20, will carry a full content of fresh and timely theological and discussional matter. But its exceptional interest will center in three articles on Bishop Asbury, specially written for the Review and adapted to the points of the Asbury Centenary, to begin March 25, and continue until the end of the Conference year. The order of these articles is as follows, viz.:

I. "Francis Asbury, Apostle."

II. "Francis Asbury, Theologian."

III. "Francis Asbury as an Educational Reformer."

These will give a complete and illuminating view of the character and work of the great Methodist leader whose memory is now being renewed.

Order the Review at once if your name is not on its list. The subscription price is $2 per year. If you cannot see your way to subscribe for the year, send 50c for the April number. In this case you should order very promptly, as the margin above the regular edition is likely to be exhausted at an early date after publication. Send orders to Smith & Lamar, Publishing Agents, Nashville, Tenn.

A NEW BOOK OF SERMONS.

Dr. W. C. Black was well and favorably known in Mississippi and Louisiana. To know him was to love and honor him. Now that he has left us, we cherish his memory.

We are indebted to Rev. M. M. Black, of the Mississippi Conference, for the new book, "God's Estimate of Man and Other Sermons," by his lamented father. The binding and type of this work are all one could wish—the work having been done by Smith & Lamar. The book is exceedingly attractive as to subject matter.

Dr. Black was pre-eminently a preacher. He was clear, strong, convincing, and always interesting. His sermons when transferred to type still possess the force of the preacher. They are live coals. No doubt many who heard him will delight to buy this book and thereby recall the sacred past. We predict a wide circulation for the new work of our departed friend.

Send eighty cents to Rev. M. M. Black, Canton, Miss., for a copy; postage prepaid.

Brookhaven, Miss. I. W. COOPER.

On January 25, 1916, Mrs. IDA E. SMITH received a summons to the home eternal. She was born in Eureka, Panola County, Miss., on Jan. 12, 1857. She moved to Claiborne Parish, La., with her parents when quite small. On Nov. 28, 1878, she was married to N. D. Smith, and lived near Athens until 1896, when they moved to Montgomery, La. They immediately won the friendship of the whole community, placed their letters in the M. E. Church, South, and lived and died in the old-time Methodist faith. Her husband's home-going was on May 8, 1904. Mrs. Smith's health had been failing for the past three years, and about a month prior to her death she received a severe stroke of paralysis with complications, which she was unable to resist. She was beautifully resigned, and welcomed death as only those who love the Lord can do. For her it had no sting, nor had the grave any victory. She leaves one son, J. T. Smith, of Naborton, La., and two daughters, Mrs. T. L. Dean and Mrs. W. R. Jones, of Montgomery, La., with a host of friends and relatives to mourn their loss. We commend them to God, who alone can comfort them in this hour of bereavement. Her remains were laid to rest by the side of her husband in the Mt. Zion Cemetery, to await the morning of the resurrection.

Mrs. F. G. WARDLOW.

Dr. JNO. D. CALHOUN, the subject of this sketch, came of a family distinguished in the history of the South. He was a son of J. C. Calhoun and Elizabeth Davidson. His great-grandfather was a son of James Calhoun and a first cousin of the famous statesman and orator, John C. Calhoun. Dr. Jno. D. Calhoun was born in Troup County, Ga., on August 6, 1846. When he was five years old, he moved with his father's family to Louisiana and settled in Claiborne Parish. At the age of eighteen he attended a meeting at Hickory Grove and was soundly converted to God. He joined the Methodist Church at the same meeting and became active in all the work of the Church. When he was thirty years old he was happily married to Miss Mary Corry, at Arizona, Claiborne Parish, who survives him.

Dr. Calhoun was a Confederate veteran. When the war broke out he enlisted in Company C, 31st Louisiana Volunteers.

In his domestic life the doctor was deeply loved by the whole family circle. The dear ones of the home, his children and his brothers, always looked up to him and regarded him as a sure and safe counselor and a wise guide. His good life left its impress not only upon his own home circle, but upon the community in which he lived, and his influence was far-reaching. He had good blood in his veins and a good spirit within him. The writer, together with the Rev. D. C. Barr, an old and valued friend of the family, laid his remains to rest in the little cemetery in Rayville, La., on Dec. 31, 1915. And so passes from our midst a good and true friend, a life-long Christian, a genial and courtly gentleman of the old school. May God's blessing be upon his widow and children, upon his brothers, his relatives, and upon that large circle of friends here and elsewhere who esteemed it a privilege to know and love him!

APPRECIATORY RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, on Feb. 18, 1916, it pleased God in his wisdom to remove from our midst our beloved president, Mrs. W. H. Sykes, who organized and served faithfully our Duck Hill Missionary Society for many years; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That our Society has sustained an incalculable loss in the decease of one whose love for the work has shown itself in unfailing service.

2. That we, as a memorial to her, change the name of our Society to "The W. H. Sykes Missionary Society."

3. That we pledge ourselves to continue the work lovingly and faithfully.

4. That we extend to the bereaved family our sympathy in this sad hour.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be given the family, a copy be spread upon our minutes, and a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed: Mrs. Rosa M. Conger, Mrs. B. F. Bullard, Mrs. W. H. Brinkley.

"You can make kindness a habit—if you want to."

TO THE PASTORS AND LAYMEN OF THE SEASHORE DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren: I am sure that many of you know about the condition of our district parsonage. No doubt you have heard of its wretchedness over and over again. I need not rehearse to you what it is, or what it is not. I am interested in making it something of what it ought to be. I believe that you are also. I am sure that every Methodist in the district would rejoice to know that the district parsonage was at least habitable, which it is not now. I am sure you are interested enough to help put it in that condition. It is the property of the whole district, and one is as much responsible as another for its upkeep. So, believing that you are willing to help me, and that you will respond to my call, I have appointed the third Sunday in March, as District Parsonage Day. I trust every pastor will present the matter to his congregation, and take a collection on that day, and on other days until each congregation has had a chance to contribute. Let the collection be in cash and subscriptions—the subscriptions to be paid as early as possible.

A contract has been given, and the work of remodeling the parsonage will begin at once, at a cost of about $1600; so, funds will be needed as soon as they can be secured. You, brethren, can help me a great deal if you will, and I believe you will. Send all the money collected for this cause to Hon. J. C. Ross, or to myself, at Gulfport, Miss.

In this connection, let me say that I appreciate very greatly the interest in church work which I found to exist on my first round of quarterly conferences. Let's push with righteous zeal every department of the Church during our second quarter.

I suggest that the month of March be taken for the educational campaign. Let every pastor arrange for an institute in the bounds of his charge, secure speakers, and have discussed the several claims of our Church. Practically every pastor has volunteered himself for service, and stands ready to help his neighbor in campaign work. Besides this, Rev. J. L. Neill will spend the month of March in our district representing the Sunday school work of our Conference. Let every pastor open the way for him; secure other help, and arrange for a real campaign.

Let me urge each pastor to elect delegates to the district conference as early a date as posible, and to furnish me with their names and addresses.

Owing to a lack of numerical strength in our church at Mississippi City (the place elected for the meeting of our district conference), the place of meeting has been changed to Biloxi where we will meet on Wednesday, May 3, at 8:30 o'clock a. m. Rev. W. G. Forsyth will preach the opening sermon on Tuesday evening, May 2, at 7:30 p. m. Dr. W. H. LaPrade and Dr. B. F. Jones will administer the sacrament of the Lord's supper at the close of the opening service. Please furnish Rev. H. F. Tolle a list of your delegates, local preachers, and lay leaders.

Let's strive to have at least half of our Conference collections in hand by the time the District Conference convenes. The pastor who delays will hazard his claims, and will likely fail in the end.

Let all pastors fill out this first quarter's "report blanks," and let me have them by March 1. I am yours for the work. J. R. JONES, P. E.

GRAY HAIRS

mean that your hair is not receiving proper attention, and yet a gray hair will do more to make you look old than anything else. Rid yourself of an aged appearance by giving the hair correct treatment and proper food. There can be no life without food, and unless you give your hair the proper attention you cannot expect it to retain its lustre and beauty. Use "La Creole," the best of all hair dressings and see your gray hairs disappear. This dressing was discovered by the Creoles of Louisiana many years ago, who were famous for their beautiful hair. Since then it has worked wonders, banishing gray hairs and restoring the hair to its original lustre. As a hair dressing it has no equal, keeping scalp in a clean, healthy condition. It has stood the test for over fifty years. Don't use strong alkaline soaps as they do more damage than good. Use "La Creole" hair dressing, the natural preservative. For sale by all dealers. Price $1.00. Manufactured by Van Vleet-Mansfield Drug Co., Memphis, Tenn.—Adv.

"ANCIENT HISTORY."

Well, the copy of the Minutes of the last session of the Louisiana Conference have at last made their appearance. Often have we been asked, "When will we get our Minutes?" As I had no information, I was not able to answer, but judging from the past I thought that we were likely to get them some time during the first four months of the Conference year. Well, we did get them inside of three months.

There is this in favor of late Minutes; very few people are given to studying "Ancient History," and therefore the mistakes and failures will be discovered by the few who love to deal with musty records.

Why can we not have our Minutes in a reasonable time? Other Conferences get theirs out in a very short time. Who is at fault? Let the blame lay where it will. If the publisher is tardy, then let us hunt another publisher. If the Editor of the Minutes is at fault, let us get one that can get them out. If the Secretary is the slow one, let's get one who can put on more steam, if we have him in the Conference.

I do not know who is to blame. It lies between the Secretary, Editor, and Publisher of the Minutes. If all three are at fault, then let's change the three. Let us quit running in the rut of past ages, and move up a little in this department of our Conference work. H. W. BOWMAN.

Turn Hair Dark With Sage Tea

If Mixed with Sulphur it Darkens so Naturally Nobody can tell.

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grandmother's treatment, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Now-a-days though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product called 'Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" for about 50 cents a bottle. It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive; besides, prevents dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair.

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRUFF

Girls! Try it! Hair gets soft, fluffy and beautiful—Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine.

If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You can not have nice heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store and just try it.

COLUMBUS DISTRICT NOTES.

Dear Brother Meek: Some items from the Columbus District, North Mississippl Conference, may be of interest to the readers of the Advocate.

It was my privilege and pleasure to spend Sunday, January 16, in Columbus, and to preach, both in the morning and evening, at Central Church for Brother J. M. Carpenter, the young pastor, and those of his congregation who braved the inclement weather and came out to church. Brother Carpenter is a graduate of the State University. He has been returned for the second year to this church, and is doing well in his pastoral work. Sister Woollard, wife of our presiding elder, works in the primary department of the Sunday school at Central Church, where her services are greatly helpful and appreciated. She is associated also with the Woman's Missionary Society at First Church. Rev. W. L. Duren is pastor of First Church in Columbus, for the third year. He has a large congregation, and is making a fine record.

My visit while in Columbus was made enjoyable by kind and hospitable entertainment in the homes of Brother W. W. Woollard, Professor Dabney Lipscomb, Dr. Jas. W. Lipscomb, and Mr. John Laws.

A call, with Brother Carpenter, upon Rev. A. P. Leech was met with a warm and brotherly greeting. Brother Leech, one of our faithful retired veteran ministers, lives in Columbus. He has some trouble with sciatic rheumatism, but otherwise seems fairly well. With the help of his faithful wife, he is taking care of himself during the wintry weather.

I greatly enjoyed also the kindly attentions of Brother Carpenter. May the presence and blessing of the Master crown his labors with success!

Monday morning a sheet of sleet and snow covered the ground. This and the cold temperature limited somewhat my plans for the day. I remained over, however, and on Tuesday was home again at Starkville in time for dinner.

Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, our faithful Starkville pastor, finds enjoyment in the work and experiences of his fourth pastoral year. His work is progressing favorably, and the outlook is promising. Let us hope and pray and work for a year of great spiritual prosperity! I have long thought that the fourth pastoral year of the faithful preacher is his best year. Let all our pastors and their congregations, as well, cultivate staying qualities.

Saturday and Sunday, February 5 and 6, I attended a quarterly meeting at Longview, a few miles by rail from Starkville. The small town gives name to the circuit, served this year by Rev. A. J. Beasley. The presiding elder, Rev. W. W. Woollard, was punctual in reaching his appointment, as usual, and rendered good service during the meeting. His message Sunday morning was a strong, earnest gospel sermon which was listened to by an attentive congregation. He left during the afternoon for another appointment in his large district, and this writer preached at the evening hour. Brother Beasley, the bachelor pastor of this charge, has been for some time in the local ministry. He is well educated, and has taught school for a number of years. This, however, is his first itinerant year. He occupies a neat and comfortable parsonage at Longview, and is a pretty good housekeeper himself, but rumor says there is a prospect and hope for a better housekeeper before a great while.

Having been more than half round his district, Brother Woollard reports the outlook better than at the corresponding time last year. By his courtly and pleasant address and faithful work, Brother Woollard commends himself to the esteem and confidence of the brethren. He is planning some aggressive and intensive work for his district during the year. His plan as outlined is somewhat as follows: Friday night, preaching; Saturday, services beginning at ten o'clock a. m. —preaching at eleven—dinner on the ground; quarterly conference, and perhaps some other service in the afternoon. Sundsy services beginning at ten a. m.—preaching at eleven, dinner on the ground; preaching again in the afternoon. Some of the services may be after the order of institute work. Such a plan for the quarterly meeting where it can be properly executed gives promise of gracious results. Why may we not, as in the days of the pioneer Methodist preachers, have a revival and conversions at a two or three days' meeting?

With pleasure, I acknowledge the hospitality and brotherly kindness of Brother Beasley and other friends at Longview, extended to the visiting brother during the quarterly meeting.

SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTITUTE AT FAYETTE.

A very successful Sunday School Institute was held at Fayette, Miss., February 21-23, under the auspices of our Church at that place, of which Rev. J. O. Ware is pastor. Although this is his first year at that place he gives evidence of having the work well in hand and of making progress in the year's work. To him and his superintendent, Mr. Ellis, together with the good people of Fayette, much of the success of the Institute was due. Every courtesy was shown the visitors and delegates and everything possible was done for their convenience and comfort.

Representatives were present from the churches of the following charges: Natchez, Fayette, Washington, Harriston, Hermanville, Utica, and Nebo. Presbyterians, Baptists, Christians, and Episcopalians joined in making the meeting a success. It was an occasion of harmonious co-operation in the study of a great work and every one derived inspiration and benefit.

On Monday night Rev. J. L. Neill, our Conference Field Secretary, brought to us an inspiring message on "The Relation of the Child to the Kingdom of God." On Tuesday morning he spoke to us briefly on "Sunday School Plans," both of the whole Church and of our Conference. At the same session Mrs. Neill discussed the child as "The Chief Factor in Sunday School Work," and Dr. W. G. Henry, pastor of the Galloway Memorial, of Jackson, spoke on "The Adult in the Sunday School." On Tuesday afternoon Dr. Henry led a round-table discussion of a number of interestlng questlons. That night Mr. Neill discussed "Missions in the Sunday School." Wednesday morning Mr. and Mrs. Neill led an informal discussion on "The Business Affairs of the Sunday School." It would be impossible to give a resume of these excellent speeches, and we must be content with saying that the speakers measured up to their usual standard.

The following resolutions were adopted by the visitors and delegates:

Whereas we have had the pleasure during these few days of being in attendance upon this Institute, of hearing the helpful messages brought to us from time to time, and of being entertained in the homes of the people; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we express to Rev. J. L. Neill, Dr. W. G. Henry, and Mrs. J. L. Neill, our appreciation of their splendid and instructive messages and pledge ourselves to more earnest and effective work in the Sunday school.

2. That we express our hearty thanks to Rev. J. O. Ware and the people of Fayette for their gracious hospitality and untiring efforts in our behalf.

Signed: B. W. Lewis, O. B. McLaurin, R. I. Davis.

Altogether it was good to be there. Every one enjoyed the occasion to the utmost and all were helped by what they heard.

J. B. CAIN, Secretary.

What Causes Tuberculosis

In the opinion of many medical authorities, tuberculosis is aided, if not actually caused, by a loss of lime from the system. "Where there is a decalcification, the lime salts must be supplied medicinally," says Dr. J. W. Carhart, of San Antonio, in the May, 1913, issue of "Medical Progress."

To supply these salts often is difficult, since in some forms they are not easily assimilable.

In Eckman's Alterative, however, calcium (lime) is so combined with other valuable ingredients as to be assimilated by the average person, and to this, in part, is due its success.

We make no boastful claims, but many cases of tuberculosis apparently have yielded to it. It contains no opiates, narcotics or habit-forming drugs, so is safe to try. Price $1 and $2 per bottle. Sold by leading druggists or sent direct from the Laboratory. We would like to send you a booklet containing information of value and references.

UGH! A Dose of Nasty Calomel

It salivates! It makes you sick and you may lose a day's work.

You're bilious, sluggish, constipated and believe you need vile, dangerous calomel to start your liver and clean your bowels.

Here's my guarantee! Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone and take a spoonful to-night. It it doesn't start your liver and straighten you right up better than calomel and without griping or making you sick I want you to go back to the store and get your money.

Take calomel to-day and to-morrow you will feel weak and sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day's work. Take a spoonful of harmless, vegetable Dodson's Liver Tone to-night and wake up feeling great. It's perfectly harmless, so give it to your children any time. It can't salivate, so let them eat anything afterwards.—Adv.

SEVERE RHEUMATIC PAINS DISAPPEAR

Rheumatism depends on an acid in the blood, which affects the muscles and joints, producing inflammation, stiffness and pain. This acid gets into the blood through some defect in the digestive process.

Hood's Sarsaparilla, the old-time blood tonic, is very successful in the treatment of rheumatism. It acts directly, with purifying effect, on the blood, and improves the digestion. Don't suffer. Get Hood's today.

A GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY.
1866—1916.

On Monday, Feb. 14, 1916, at their home two miles south of McComb City, Barnabas Simon Alford and Anna Rebecca Norman celebrated their "golden wedding," having been married on Feb. 14, 1866. Eight children were born of this happy union, two daughters and six sons, two of whom died in infancy. Five sons and one daughter are living, and all were present on this occasion, except one son, who lives in Memphis, Tenn., and is a boiler maker by trade.

Rev. L. E. Alford, is a member of the Mississippi Conference, and now stationed at Lake, Miss. He is one of our strongest young men, and has won considerable reputation as a church and parsonage building preacher. Brother and Sister Alford are justly proud of their preacher boy. Three sons and one daughter live in McComb, and enjoy the friendship and confidence of the community. All of the sons are stewards in Centenary Church. J. B. Alford, the eldest, is a leading merchant in the city; L. W. Alford is a jeweler, and Norman Alford is the trusted cashier of the First National Bank. Miss Carrie Alford, the youngest child, is assistant bookkeeper for the Dennion-Alford Co. There are thirteen living grandchildren.

Brother Alford has been a subscriber for the New Orleans Christian Advocate 45 years, a steward of our Church 35 years; and for many years Sunday school superintendent. He is now serving in this office at our La-Branch Street Church in McComb. During the year, 1915, he was present at Sunday school 51 Sundays of the 52.

On the occasion of their golden wedding a number of other relatives and friends were present, and the occasion was one long to be remembered, not only from a social standpoint, but because of the intense spiritual atmosphere prevailing.

A brief programme was greatly enjoyed by all present. Their preacher boy was master of ceremonies, which consisted of a prayer by their pastor, a few appropriate remarks by Rev. G. H. Galloway, pastor of Centenary Church, followed by the presentation of five ten dollar gold pieces from their five boys.

Opportunity was then given any one who desired to do so to speak, and several expressed their appreciation of the friendship, and sterling worth and characters of these faithful servants of God, who for one-half century have traveled together, hand in hand and heart to heart, enjoying God's blessings, and sharing together the joys and sorrows of life.

Two features of the exercises were most beautiful, and impressive. One was the response of Brother Alford to the expressions of their friends and children, especially when he said: "If I had the fifty years to go over again, with the knowledge and experience I have of life, I would probably make a few changes along the way, but one thing I would not change. If I were just beginning these past fifty years, I would go back to H. C. Norman's after the same girl."

The other was the expression of confidence and love for his father and mother by Mr. J. B. Alford, when he said: "So thoroughly did I learn the lesson of obedience to parental authority that even now should either of them say to me, 'Jimmie go do this, or that,' I would go just as quickly and reverently as I did when a boy under my father's roof."

As the pastor of Brother and Sister Alford I desire to say that no pastor ever had more faithful members than they have been to this writer and his family. As superintendent of our Sunday school he has the utmost confidence of all, both old and young.

May God give to these two faithful souls many years of happiness and service in his kingdom. Their pastor,

F. B. ORMOND.

McComb, Miss.

Old Folks Saved From Suffering

Mrs. Mary A Dean, Taunton, Mass., in her 87th year, says: "I thought I was beyond the reach of medicine, but Foley Kidney Pills have proven most beneficial in my case."

Mr Sam A. Hoover, High Point, N. C., writes: "My kidney trouble was worse at night and I had to get up from five to seven times. Now I do not have to get up at night, and consider myself in a truly normal condition, which I attribute to Foley Kidney Pills, as I have taken nothing else."

Mrs. M. A Bridges, Robinson, Mass., says: "I suffered from kidney ailments for two years. I commenced taking Foley Kidney Pills ten months ago, and though I am 61 years of age, I feel like a 16-year-old girl."

Foley Kidney Pills are tonic, strengthening and up-building, and restore normal action to the kidneys and to a disordered and painful bladder. They act quickly and contain no dangerous or harmful drugs.

Glass of Salts Cleans Kidneys

If your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you, drink lots of water.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a teaspoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which every one should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no douht you will wonder what heeame of your kidney trouble and hackache.

THE COUNCIL MEETING.

The Council meeting will be held in Atlanta, Ga., April 12-20, 1916. It will be an occasion of unusual interest as it will partake in part of the nature of an anniversary celebration, the Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, having been organized in Atlanta in May, 1878. In view of this fact the first meeting, Wednesday evening, April 12, will be Founders' Night, and will be a historic portrayal of the work. It will be participated in by those who were the pioneers in the several organizations which have come together to form the Woman's Missionary Council. Thursday will be given to home work. Friday to foreign work, and prominent speakers will be on the program. Sunday will be a feast day; and Wednesday will be the day of days, as it will witness the consecration of missionaries and deaconesses.

Missionaries at the Council Meeting.

Much of the inspiration of this great meeting comes from the presence of the returned missionaries, and the following will be present at this session of the Council: Misses Bertha Tucker, Alice Dean Noyes, Ellasue Wagner, and Bertha A. Smith, from Korea; Misses Annie Bradshaw, Sallie J. Smith, May Hixson, from China; Misses Florence Barton and Virginia Howell, from Brazil.

A Council Visitor.

One of the most interesting speakers and visitors at the Council meeting will he Dr. Mary Stone, of Danforth Hospital, Kinkiang. Dr. Stone is recognized as one of the foremost Chinese women physicians. Her parents were among the first Christian converts in China. She was baptized when a baby, and has the distinction of being the first girl not a slave in Central and North China to have feet as God had made them. She was an apt student, and at the age of nineteen was matriculated in the University of Michigan. She graduated in 1896 and returned to work among her own people, where she has had a wonderful career.

The Council Daily.

We have told you above of some of the good things which are in store for those who attend the Council meeting. All of us however, cannot go—it is not expedient that we should. But there is one thing which all can have and enjoy, and that is the "Council Daily." It will come to you each day filled with the most important happenings of the day. Of course, it cannot contain everything—that would be well-nigh impossible; but there will be enough to keep your interest and enthusiasm stirred, and whet your appetite for the contents of the Minutes which will follow some time later. Do not put off sending in your subscription. An informed woman is a transformed woman. We want every woman to take advantage of this splendid opportunity for getting informed.

The price of the paper has been placed so low that no one can fail to take it on that account. Remember it is only twenty-five cents. Our missionary editors will have charge of it this year, and one of the largest printing firms in the South will attend to all business matters. Send your subscriptions to Mr. John Hancock, care of Foote & Davies, Atlanta, Ga.

LOUISIANA ANNUAL MEETING A SUCCESS.

Mrs. John C. Calhoun, recording secretary of the Louisiana Missionary Society, writes as follows: "At our annual conference, which closed Feb. 15, we had a most splendid meeting. More than one hundred delegates were in attendance. There is every evidence of a forward movement in the work in our State. We are especially fortunate in our president, Mrs. Abel Bliss, who is a deeply consecrated woman. The messages of Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb, our Council guest, were indeed inspirational and very instructive."

The Conference sent love and greetings to the Editor of this department, and we take this occasion to express our heartfelt thanks for the same. We were sorry not to be present at this Conference, for we had looked forward with so much pleasure to meeting with the women of Louisiana again. We trust some one will send us a longer account of this splendid meeting, for we learned through Mrs. Lipscomb and Miss Haskin that it was good to be there.

RESOLUTION PASSED AT CLARKSDALE.

Mrs. B. E. Eskridge, of Shelby, sent the following resolution to us and we feel that it should appear in our department, for it shows appreciation of the work which we are trying to do through our women:

Resolved: That we extend hearty thanks to our co-laborer, Mrs. Harrell, for her untiring efforts on our behalf in publishing missionary news of our Conference in the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Signed: Mrs. Woollard, Mrs. Baker, Mrs. Eskridge.

Mrs. Eskridge writes that they had a splendid session. Mrs. Lipscomb and Miss Wagner were especially enjoyed. We feel sure that a full account of this meeting will reach us in time to appear in our columns next week.

GOOD NEWS FROM NATCHITOCHES AUXILIARY.

Mrs. Gaiennie Hyams, Press Superintendent, writes as follows: "We feel like our Society is on the 'boom,' and we want to keep it 'booming' all through the year. Just at present we have two prayer circles in operation. Six ladies are praying at a stated time for more gospel help for India—more answers to the cry of need there. Six of the young girls are praying at a stated time for our prayer meetings, which have come to be a great inspiration to our Church. "I want to pause here long enough to remark upon the eager spirit with which these young folks entered into this sacred compact of prayer. Their willingness and even eagerness was beautiful.

"We are all in love with the 'King's Highway,' and I think the study of this book will do much towards fanning into flame a greater love for foreign missionary work. It is my purpose and desire to utilize this wonderful material to the greatest extent possible for our advance in the Master's work."

HUSBAND SAVED HIS WIFE

Stopped Most Terrible Suffering by Getting Her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Denison, Texas. — "After my little girl was born two years ago I began suffering with female trouble and could hardly do my work. I was very nervous but just kept dragging on until last summer when I got where I could not do my work. I would have a chill every day and hot flashes and dizzy spells and my head would almost burst. I got where I was almost a walking skeleton and life was a burden to me until one day my husband's stepsister told my husband if he did not do something for me I would not last long and told him to get your medicine. So he got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for me, and after taking the first three doses I began to improve. I continued its use, and I have never had any female trouble since. I feel that I owe my life to you and your remedies. They did for me what doctors could not do and I will always praise it wherever I go."—Mrs. G. O. LOWERY, 419 W. Monterey Street, Denison, Texas.

If you are suffering from any form of female ills, get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and commence the treatment without delay.

Makes Stubborn Coughs Vanish in a Hurry

Surprisingly Good Cough Syrup Easily and Cheaply Made at Home

If some one in your family has an obstinate cough or a bad throat or chest cold that has been hanging on and refuses to yield to treatment, get from any drug store 2½ ounces of Pinex and make it into a pint of cough syrup, and watch that cough vanish.

Pour the 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth) into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. The total cost is about 54 cents, and gives you a full pint—a family supply—of a most effective remedy, at a saving of $2. A day's use will usually overcome a hard cough. Easily prepared in 5 minutes—full directions with Pinex. Keeps perfectly and has a pleasant taste. Children like it.

It's really remarkable how promptly and easily it loosens the dry, hoarse or tight cough and heals the inflamed membranes in a painful cough. It also stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough. A splendid remedy for bronchitis, winter coughs, bronchial asthma and whooping cough.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol, which is so healing to the membranes.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex," and do not accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction goes with this preparation or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., 235 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

From the Field

Indianola, Miss.

Dear Brother Meek: I feel encouraged over the outlook in this charge. I have never had a kinder people than these to serve. They are now spending about $800 on the parsonage, so that we will have as good a home as any of the preachers. The attendance upon preaching and at Sunday school is increasing every Sunday. The membership of the Men's Bible Class has increased from about six to thirty-five. Several persons have joined the Church by letter and I am hunting others up. Indianola is soon to take its place among the first charges in the Conference. We are well pleased with our field. May God continue to bless the work here!—J. H. Mitchell, P. C.

Mantachie, Miss.

Dear Brother Meek: We came here as a result of our appointment to this field at New Albany in December, 1915. We have been the recipients of many of the good things of life since our arrival here, and we feel that we have a very appreciative people to serve.

We had a meeting of the stewards during the first quarter in which all the churches of the charge were represented and the salaries of the pastor and presiding elder were fixed.

Our 1st quarterly meeting was held on Feb. 10 with Rev. T. H. Dorsey, the presiding elder, in the chair. Brother Dorsey preached two able sermons, which were strikingly helpful, and gave delight and satisfaction to all present. He showed rare executive ability during the business hour. All the churches on the charge were well represented. A large crowd was present and had dinner on the ground. It was indeed an old-time Methodist quarterly meeting. There were good reports from the five churches on the charge. The business items were brought up and discussed in a very satisfactory manner. The people were dismissed with a good spirit pervading the entire circuit. We are expecting a great year.—A. J. Henry, P. C.

Lake Arthur Charge.

Dear Dr. Meek: Please let me first give a hearty amen to Brother Davies' article of some weeks ago on "Paddle Your Own Pirogue." We get some "long-range" advice that is good and some that sounds "funny" indeed. For instance, suggestions for a sermon on early Christmas shopping to a country circuit rider, and some coming from far-away offices is not much better. It is easy to sit up and tell a man how to do a thing, but the important matter is to get out and do it.

I found the Lake Arthur charge in a good condition—due to the careful, wise work of my predecessor, Rev. H. N. Brown. Since my arrival the people have done everything possible to make us comfortable and to cause me to love them. If that was their aim they have succeeded. The congregations are good (I am new) and the Sunday schools are simply fine. Bell City and Hayes have been put on this work, and this has greatly strengthened the charge. They did not like the idea of being cut down from two Sundays a month to one, but I told them the probability was that they would get more real preaching with this arrangement on one Sunday than they had been getting with two, and they are waiting for me to "prove up." The stewards take a keen interest in the Church and I find them pleasant to labor with. We are very hopeful for a good year.—J. D. Nesom, P. C.

THE REVIVAL AT WHITWORTH COLLEGE.

Dear Doctor Meek: During the first week of February it was my pleasure to be at Whitworth College in a seven days' revival meetings. Every day spent there was a great blessing to me. To be present at the meetings held by the young women of this great school and to enjoy the atmosphere of genial Christian love and unity which permeates college life at Whitworth is to appreciate more fully the importance, as well as beauty and strength, of Christian womanhood. If every schoolgirl in Mississippi could get only a part of the thorough courses offered there and its high conceptions of Christian life, our State would have no need to fear the spirit, purposes, and results of the private and public organizations of its women. It does me good as a Methodist to know that our Church has such a school as Whitworth College. If we could only realize that we have in it the possibility of one of the greatest colleges in the South, we would doubtless be more interested in it and more loyal to it.

It is useless to say that Dr. Cooper deserves the honor for its success. If we could only do as much toward its promotion as he has done, what a blessing we would enjoy!

The revival at the college was a success and was made such through the faith and work of the College Y. W. C. A., the earnestness of the student body at large, the hearty co-operation of each member of the Faculty, and the vocal and instrumental music arranged and led by Miss Shannon, Instructor in Voice.

May God prosper this great Institution, which means so much to the womanhood and the future homes of our Church and State!

W. N. THOMAS.

Summit, Miss.

President Wilson's Message on Advertising,
Contained in the following letter to the President of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World
ASSOCIATED ADVERTISING CLUBS OF THE WORLD
TRUTH
THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON
October 11, 1915.
My dear Mr. Houston:
Advertising is a factor of constantly increasing power in modern business, and it very vitally affects the public in all its phases, particularly since the medium for the dissemination of advertising have increased so remarkably in recent years. For business men, therefore, it is of the utmost importance that the highest standards should be applied to advertising as to business itself.
The country is to be congratulated on the work of the Associated Advertising Clubs to establish and enforce a code of ethics based upon cardid truth that shall govern advertising methods, and the effect of its work should be of the greatest benefit to the country. It augurs permanence and stability in industrial and distributive methods, because it means good business judgment, and more than that, it indicates a fine conception of public obligation on the part of men in business, a conception which is one of the inspiring things in our outlook upon the future of national development.
Cordially and sincerely yours,
Woodrow Wilson

Renew Your Health
At Nature's Fountain

Without the Expense and Loss of Time Necessary for a Visit to the Spring

THE CRISIS

There comes a time in the life of practically every man and woman when their digestive or eliminative organs, or both, fail to respond to drugs prepared by human skill. In fact drugs seem to do them about as much harm as good for their systems rebel against all drugs. These are the cases which physicians call "stubborn" and "chronic" for the reason that they persist in spite of drug treatment. I do not refer to incurable diseases such as cancer and consumption, but to that larger class of functional disorders which we meet every day, where the organs of digestion and elimination are impaired.

For this class of cases our best physicians and our big city specialists send their wealthy patients to the mineral springs where, in the great majority of cases they are permanently restored or decidedly benefited. But what about the poor man who has not the money or the busy man or woman who cannot spare the time to spend several weeks or possibly months at a health resort? Shall circumstances deny them the restoration to health which Nature has provided? Read my answer in the coupon at the bottom of this page.

I have the utmost confidence in the Shivar Mineral Spring Water for to it I owe my Restoration to Health and probably my Life. It has made me tens of thousands of friends in all parts of America and even in foreign countries, whose faces I have never seen. Yet I count them my friends for the Shivar Spring Water has bound them to me by lasting gratitude.

I ask you to read their letters, a few samples of which I publish below for your benefit, and if you find among them any encouragement as to your own health do not hesitate to accept my offer which has no limits or conditions except these shown on the coupon. If you could read the letters that come to me daily, numbering about ten thousand a year, and the vast majority of them similar to those printed below, you would not wonder that I make this offer displaying my absolute confidence in the restorative powers of Shivar Mineral Water.

INDIGESTION

Savannah, Georgia.

I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an acuve working man, aud, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well, and have worked praetically every day since. It acts as a general reoovator of tbe system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use tbis water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy.

La Grange, Ga., Nov. 25, 1914.

I feel it my duty to suffering humanity to make pnblic announcement of the benefits I have derived from Shivar Spring Water. I have been a sufferer for the past twenty-five years from indigestion and dyspepsia. After one week's trial of Shivar Water I commenced to improve, and after drinking it for four weeks I gained fifteen pounds. I feel better and stronger than I have in twenty-five years. I strongly reeommend this Water to any one with stomach trouble of any character, and truly believe it will cure ulcer of the stomach. I am writing this voluntarily and trust it will fail in the hands of many who are so unfortunate as to he afflicted with indigestion and nervous dyspepsia.

C. V. TRUITT,
President Unity Cotton Mills.

Johnston, S. C.

I wish to add my testimony to the wonderful curative powers of the Shivar Mineral Water. For a number of years my wife has heen a sufferer from indigestion and nervons debility, and her condition had reached such a stage as to haffle the skill of our most eminent physicians. Her extreme nervousness and heart troubles at times were alarming and she had become almost a nervous wreck. The latter part of last May she began using the Shivar Water, which she has continued to this date with most satisfactory results.

DYSPEPSIA

Blaney, S. C.

I have suffered for many years from gastric troubles, stomaeh puffed and food sour. I have tried many remedies and a good many waters. Some have heiped, hut none have given me such relief as your Spring Water. I use it and recommend it to my patients.

W. D. GRIGGSBY, M. D.

Baltimore, Md., April 30, 1914.

For many years I suffered with stomach trouble as a direct result of astbma. I consulted the very best specialist in tbis country, and spent quite a large sum of money in my endeavor to get relief. However, I had about come to the conclusion that my ease was hopeless, hut by accident I happened to get hold ofone of your booklets, and decided to try Shivar Spring Water. After drinking the water for about three weeks I was entirely relieved, and since that time have suffered hut little inconvenience from my trouble. I cheerfully recommend the nse of your Water to any one that may be suffering from stomach trouble.

RHEUMATISM

Leeds, S. C.

I have tested yonr Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubies, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in eacb case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will produce a permanent cure. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter.

C. A. CROSBY, M. D.

MRS. H. C. EDWARDS.

Florence, S. C., Dec. 1, 1911.

I suffered with indigestion and kidney trouble, and a year ago was stricken with acute articular rheumatism; was helpless for months, and since using your Spring Water I am walking without any crutch and improving daily. Indigestion much relieved. I wish I could write Shivar Spring Water in the sky so that the world could become acquainted with it.

BILIOUSNESS

Greenville, S. C., Feh. 26, 1914.

For over two years, following a nervous breakdown, I have suffered with a liver so torpid that ordinary remedies were absolutely powerless. Under such circumstances, I came to Shivar Spring, and began drinking the Water. Upon advice however, the first night I took a laxative; the second night a milder one. Since then I have taken none at all. Tbe effect of the water has been remarkahle—its action on my liver most marked, and my health and spirits greatly improved. I am satisfied that tbe laxative, followed hy the Water, was the proper treatment in my case. My condition is now perfect.

S. A. DERIEUX.

Buena Vista, Va., Oct. 2, 1914.

It is a great pleasure to tell you tbat your Water has been a great benefit. I may say a great blessing, to me. My wife says it has helped me more than anything else I ever tried. I have been, for thirty years, a sufferer from stomach trouble.

GALLSTONES

Greenville, S. C.

Shivar Spring Water cured my motber of gallstones, or, I might say, it snatched her from the hospital door, as tbe doctors had said nothing short of an operation would do her any good. After drinking the Water she was able to get out of bed, and is today stout and healthy. I hope these few lines will he of help to some one suffering as my mother did.

W. J. STRAWN.

Williamston, N. C. Oct. 3, 1914

My doctor said I would have to be operated on for gallstones, but since I have been driuking your water I haven't had to have a doctor.

W. H. EDWARDS.

Columbia, S. C.

My wife was a chronic sufferer from gallstones. She was stricken critically ill, and nothing but morpbine seemed to relieve her pain by rendering her unconscious. My physician, who is a good one, seemed to do very little good. (Rev. A. J. Foster, pastor of Shandon Baptist Church of Columhia, S. C., advised me to take her immediately to Shivar Spring. On consulting my physician he agreed that it would he best to do so without delay. In about three days after arriving at the Spring she was apparently relieved aud had regained her appetite. She has suffered no ill effect of tho trouble since. Please publish this for the benefit of sufferers

OUR CHURCH AND THE AMUSEMENT QUESTION.

II.

Resuming the discussion left off last week; we will now take up the question as to whether the present status existing in our Church respecting harmful amusements is adequate and satisfactory.

Deficient for Instruction.

First, we raise the issue as to whether it is adequate for the instruction and warning of the membership of our Church. We hold that our Book of Discipline ought to set forth the rules of the Southern Methodist Church and the true significance of them with such clearness and definiteness that no one could mistake their meaning. Is this the case as matters now stand? If these rules are to be understood as they have been in the past, we maintain that it is not. Take the question of attending the theater, and place a copy of the Discipline in the hands of a young Methodist, and what can he find therein on the subject? He may scan the 1914 Volume from the first page to the last and he will not find the word "theater-going" anywhere in it. Every specific reference to it has been expunged. The nearest mention of this spiritually hurtful practice that he can find is the allusion to the "indecencies of the stage," which might possibly be construed as being aimed at only the worst class of plays (we have known it to be so interpreted by ministers) and the general rule which forbids "the taking of such diversions as cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus." And this rule, since no official interpretation of it as it relates to patronizing the theater now remains in the Discipline, is by many held to be subject in this particular to construction by each individual conscience. In other words, it is contended that every person may determine for himself whether or not going to the theater is violative of this rule of the Church, accordingly as he may adjudge it to be a diversion that may, or may not, be "used in the name of the Lord Jesus."

And all that we have said with reference to attendance upon the theater applies with equal force to "card-playing." There is not now in our Discipline a single word of warning against this subtle and dangerous form of amusement which has blighted thousands of lives and which has long been recognized as one of the most ensnaring evil agencies with which the Church has to contend.

As respects dancing, the situation is slightly better. There does yet remain in the Discipline an Episcopal decision which declares that "to teach modern dancing and to practice promiscuous dancing" is contrary to the spirit of the New Testament, and that such a case comes under the rule of the Discipline forbidding "improper tempers, words, and actions." (Paragraph 645.) But, as will be observed, this decision is not comprehensive in its scope: it is restricted to the instructor in modern dancing, and to the practice of PROMISCUOUS dancing. Here obviously is abundant opportunity for the special pleader who has indulged in the ordinary round dances to take shelter under technicalities. And let it be noted that all that we now have in the Book of Discipline bearing specifically on the subject of dancing dates back to 1858. This judicial expression from one of the old panels of Bishops, being detached from the chapter dealing specifically with the questionable amusements, survived the 1906 expunging process, and is the only relic that we have left of the time when our Church deemed it to be her duty to speak out officially against these pernicious diversions, and frequently did so.

Such is ALL the light bearing on these unwholesome amusements that a young Methodist could get from reading the Book of Discipline, which is supposed to give him a clear conception of the doctrines, rules, and usages of his Church. But could he not go to his pastor and secure more information? Many young people are not inclined to do that, and some will even take issue with their pastor when the Discipline seems to be on their side, or uncertain in its teaching. We have known instances of this. And alas! in this day of liberalism in all directions there are pastors and pastors. There are now Methodist preachers who advocate theater-going and occasionally we hear of one who himself attends professional performances. And we have even heard of theological schools that claimed to be Methodist institutions that rather encouraged the young ministers to take in an occasional so-called high-class drama. What sort of counsel would young Methodists likely get from such shepherds?

But could not these young Methodists examine the Manual of the Discipline for further light and read the annals of Methodism to learn of what has been termed the HISTORIC POSITION of their Church? Merely to state this suggestion is to render it ridiculous. Scarcely one preacher in a dozen has a Manual of the Discipline, to say nothing of his members. And we venture the assertion that there is not a Methodist history of any kind in one out of every twenty Methodist families.

If the rule which forbids "the taking of such diversions as cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus," is intended to prohibit dancing, card-playing, and theater-going, and such other amusements as are generally admitted by Christian people to be morally harmful, why should not the Church expressly so state? Why deal with the matter in a circuitous and indefinite manner, thus confusing the question, and when our young people, without having been explicitly taught and warned, fall into these indulgences, find fault with them and talk about administering discipline to them? As we see it, there can be no possible justification for such a course. And is not the pastor who faithfully seeks to stem the incoming tides of worldliness which are threatening to overwhelm thousands of our congregations entitled to be re-enforced by a clear and emphatic utterance by the Church to the effect that there is peril in these amusements and that they should be avoided? It certainly seems so to us. And since no such deliverance is to be found in our present Discipline, we hold that it is lamentably inadequate in the instruction and admonition that it furnishes concerning these widely prevalent and growing evils.

Inadequate for Judicial Process.

But how about the adequacy of our Discipline as matters now stand if a judicial proceeding should be made necessary by persons who openly, persistently, and defiantly engage in these practices, in spite of all the kindly remonstrances that can be made? We would emphasize the kindly remonstrances here mentioned, because we do not believe that recourse should ever be had to a legal process until the policy of using reason, moral suasion, and prayer has been fully exhausted. But suppose the offense continues and the offender refuses to mend his ways, and his position in the Church is such that it is felt that he must be dealt with by arraigning him legally, what is there now in the Discipline upon which to base a complaint that would stand? So far as the theater and card-playing are concerned, there is nothing whatever except the general rule forbidding "the taking of diversions that cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus." There is not a single episcopal decision in the Discipline, as it now stands, to back up that rule. If we go to the Manual of the Discipline, what we find there is practically the same deliverance that was expunged and discredited by the precipitate action of the General Conference of 1906. To be sure, episcopal addresses and the resolutions of General Conferences made several quadrenniums ago might be invoked, but the late action referred to, by implication, if not explicitly, also disparaged and in effect repealed them.

But has not the general rule in question always been held, when put to the test, to prohibit indulgence in these amusements, and have not members been expelled from the Church on this ground? Certainly, this was true in the early days of Methodism; but that was when no conference or church authority hesitated to put plainly a prohibitory construction upon that rule. No pronouncement to that effect had ever been declared to be out of date and set aside. Moreover, none of these early decisions have been preserved in our legal records and are where they could be specifically appealed to as authoritative. And even if it were known that the present College of Bishops would finally uphold this construction, why force the person seeking unselfishly to maintain the honor and welfare of the Church to make a fight under such great difficulties, even putting upon him the heavy burden of having to establish new precedents? And, furthermore, it should be remembered that others might be called upon to make decisions in the case before it would reach the Episcopal College, or possibly the General Conference. What opinions would they render?

The truth is, standing alone on the general rule in question is a very different thing under the conditions now existing from what it was before

THE BAR-KEEPER.

By Sara Beaumont Kennedy.

Against his marble ledge he leans.
  Behind him on the polished shelves
The glasses, slender-stemmed or small,
  And shining bottles range themselves.
A courteous servitor he is
  Who reads each clear or clouded mind,
And deftly plays the unstrung chords
  Of passions selfish, cruel, blind.

He fills each fragile crystal cup
  With wine as red as rose of June,
Or in another lightly pours
  The amber of a harvest moon;
And shoves them o'er the marble ledge
  To waiting hands that snatch and hold,
Then draws them back, drained to the dregs,
  And counts the price of manhood sold.

Draws each one back, an empty glass?
  Ah, no; for in each one there lies
A something ghost-like, masterful,
  Invisible to human eyes—
The broken hopes of women's hearts
  Lurk where the wine gleamed ruby red,
And in the glass of amber fire
  Are bitter tears that children shed.

And in that day when he shall stand
  To hear the sentence God shall pass
He'll see the accusing specters come
  From what he deemed but empty glass—
The orphan's cry, the mother's woe,
  The blood that demon passions spilled,
These are the witnesses of death
  With which his crystal cups are filled.

RICHES AND POVERTY.

Patrick Henry left in his will the following important passage: "I have now disposed of all my property to my family: there is one thing more I wish I could give them, and that is the Christian religion. If they had that and I had not given them one shilling they would be rich; and if they had not that and I had given them all the world they would be poor."

WORLDLINESS.

Worldliness is a disease of the blood, yea, of the blood. With some, the disease comes to the surface in theater-going, dancing, card-playing and other occupations that are under the ban. But none of these are more fatal than the unscrupulous love of money, unscrupulous ambition, unscrupulous self-love, unscrupulous hunger for praise, place and pleasure in any form that costs in character.

Worldly ambition, worldly standards, worldly occupations, are all manifestations of a tainted heart that needs the healing work of the Savior.—Central Christian Advocate.

WILLIAM A. SUNDAY'S STRENGTH.

The Record of Christian Work asks this question: "Do you know where 'Billy' Sunday gets his strength to mold people?" And it answers the question by telling that when he was first converted an old man put his hands upon Sunday's shoulders, and said: "William, there are three simple rules I can give you, and if you hold on to them, no one will ever write 'backslider' after your name. Take fifteen minutes each day to listen to God talking to you through His Word. Take fifteen minutes each day to talk to God. Take fifteen minutes each day to talk to others about God." It is said that, from that day to this, Mr. Sunday has kept these rules. "But," you say, "there is only one 'Billy' Sunday." The magazine asks: "Ought you to say it till every ounce of your physical and mental strength has become spiritualized, as has Mr. Sunday's?"—Central Christian Advocate.

AN UNCHANGING GOSPEL FOR AN UNCHANGING HUMAN NATURE.

By Bishop E. E. Hoss.

I was conversing once with a very intelligent Japanese gentleman about the mental attitude of his countrymen towards other peoples, and especially towards Americans, and ventured to express some quite definite opinions on the subject, when he checked me by saying in a tone that was placidly courteous, but none the less positive: "No doubt, sir, you are perfectly sincere in holding the view that you have just uttered, but the view itself is entirely erroneous." Now, if he had gone no further, I might have accepted his categorical contradiction in silence, for I have learned too well from long experience that my knowledge is often imperfect and my thinking too far from being sequential, to be surprised when any one fetches me up with a round truth. Nothing is healthier. Some of my friends need it for the good of their souls, as I do for mine.

But when the Japanese gentleman was not content with giving me a personal jolt, and added another statement of the most sweeping character, to the effect that "no man out of the Occident can ever rightly understand either men or things Oriental," I felt compelled to register an emphatic vocal dissent. To be sure, the man of the East and the man of the West is widely different from each other in many respects—so different that neither can accurately comprehend the other without full and searching scrutiny. The process takes time, and patience, and willingness to linger before reaching and announcing a conclusion. But granted due deliberation, and proper diligence, and an honest, truth-seeking mind, there is no intrinsic reason why a Japanese should not penetrate to the bottom of an American's thought, and none why an American should not grasp the full complexity of a Japanese's motives.

For when the whole matter has been sifted through and through, is there really anything of fundamental quality in the one man that is not also in the other? Is there, for example, any passion or prejudice in the heart of a Chinaman that is not also found in the heart of a Britisher? Languages of varying environment, working upon considerable differences of original mental endowment, have no doubt modified the outward expression in both cases of even the most radical human traits. But modification is not extirpation, and it is not creation. Human nature under all conditions is essentially one. Probe into it deep enough and you will find that it is the same thing in Asia as in Europe or America.

It is this fact that gives the missionary his rational ground, and his only rational ground, for preaching the same gospel of all men; for if they all have the same essential nature, then they are all alike sure to give heed to the same truth. It cannot be denied that a Japanese is something more than an American in a kimono, and that a Chinaman is something more than a Britisher in a queue. I cannot believe, as a brilliant woman physician once said to me in Brazil, that "the only difference between the races is the difference in the pigmentation of their skins." Racial differences are deep and wide. They must be recognized, as a preparation for mutual respect and sympathy. But far below all these differences, deep as they run, there are elemental resemblances that make them all men. It is to these points of resemblance or likeness that the gospel of Christ addresses itself, and it is from them that it is to win its final and triumphant response. The missionary that does not know these facts and does not frame his methods of approach in accordance with them is doomed to failure.

Not only is human nature the same thing in all countries, but it is the same in all ages. There never has been any new variety of it, and there never will be. Such a thing does not lie within the range of possible discovery or invention. Science, which is still walking with a doubtful and hesitant footstep through the visible universe, will doubtless come upon many even greater surprises than she has yet announced; but she will never be able to report a variant type or form of human nature. I have little sympathy, therefore, for the alleged progressives who are clamoring for "a gospel that is suited to the men of our age." Why not honestly try the old gospel? It has never failed to be effective in the past. It was able to conquer the empire of Rome. It overcame the wild Celtic and Teutonic and Slavonic tribes of northern and western Europe. Time and again, when desponding believers had almost lost faith in its power, it has unlocked fresh treasures of moral and spiritual energy, as it did in the time of the Reformation and again in the time of the Wesleyan revival. Let us try it again.

Are there any new sins to be confronted in the twentieth century? That moral degenerate, the late Oscar Wilde, who was also a man of genius, once announced that he would give a large reward to anybody that would teach him a new sin; but nobody ever came forward and tried to claim the reward. There are no new sins, though each age is likely to be marked by the special prevalence of some of the old sins, masquerading, it may be, in a new guise. Catalogue them, if you will; Murder, impurity, dishonesty, lying, hatred, drunkenness—they are the same ancient devil's brood. We may say of their father, the devil, as President Wilson, speaking without his accustomed restraint and moderation, once said of an opposing political party, that he has not had a new thought for 40 years. Why not make it a thousand years? For all his adroitness and all its ceaseless activity, he is still stale and repetitious. He cannot plead even the redeeming quality of novelty for his foul machinations against God and man.

And there are likewise no new virtues to be proclaimed and urged upon the attention and the acceptance of the world. There can be none. Manliness, purity, honesty, truthfulness, kindness, the fear of God and the love of man—these and the like of them, commonplace as they are, remain the imperishable foundation stones and blazing crown jewels of character. It is just these on which the gospel of Christ, the Christ that was crucified, dead, buried and raised up in the glory of an immortal life, insists forever. Now, as through all the centuries past, it blows a clarion blast in the ears of men, bidding them repent, believe and be saved. This gospel is our only hope. Neither learning, nor eloquence, nor poetry, nor philosophy, nor schemes of political or social reform are of any avail to help us. To trust in them is like pitching wheat straws against Niagara. The words of St. Paul are still full of wisdom: "For the Jews require a sign and the Greeks seek after wisdom; but we preach Christ crucified, to the Jews a stumbling block and to the Greeks foolishness; but to them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God and the Wisdom of God."—Memphis Commercial Appeal.

A CIRCUIT RIDER'S CHALLENGE.

The following letter is evidently for the Methodists of the four co-operating Conferences as well as for me.

"Dear Brother Ellis: I have been, and am still, interested in our Methodist Hospital. Why should I not be? For twenty-one years I have been going in and out as pastor among the people of the Memphis Conference, and during all these years our people have been getting sick, and numbers of them have gone to the hospitals for treatment. And, as there was no Methodist Hospital, they have been compelled to accept the hospitality of the St. Joseph's, a Roman Catholic institution.

"While I have always been thankful that our Catholic friends have been so well prepared to take care of our sick, and have always admired their zeal and devotion to this work, yet I have never gone into their hospital (and many are the times I have gone there to visit my sick members) that I have not been made to feel ashamed of my Church because of what has seemed to me to be her wilful neglect of her most promising mission field. My experience has taught me that the best way to win a soul is to lend a helping hand when one is in need.

"I am a circuit preacher, and have never received as much as $1000 salary, yet I want to see our hospital open and at work. I understand that if we had $35,000 in cash it could be doing business in a very few months.

"Everybody knows that the Methodist people in the territory interested have the money. So let's find 1000 individuals and churches and Sunday schools and Leagues that will pay Thirty-five Dollars ($35.00) each, and thus raise the necessary $35,000, and have our own Methodist Hospital open and ready to receive and care for the sick and suffering by September 1.

"I brought this up with one of our Sunday school superintendents, and he said he would be one of 1000 to pay $35, and also that he would pledge his Sunday school for $35. I believe all four of our schools will do this. Let's try it.

"You may count on me and my wife for $35 to be due and payable the very day the 1000 are secured.

"Under God, I believe any Methodist itinerant preacher can spare $35 for so worthy a cause.

Yours for the Hospital,

A CIRCUIT RIDER."

The letter of "A Circuit Rider," who last year received little more than $600 salary and has already given $75 or more to the Methodist Hospital, puts it up to us. His proposition is simple and reasonable.

He has heard, as have I, of the wishing and praying for a Methodist Hospital. He believes in doing what he can to answer his prayers. And his challenge will show whether or not the "wishing" and "praying" rings true.

There are 20,000 Methodists in the four Conferences who could give the $35 easier than he. Will they let him beat them in loyalty and liberality? There is but one way to avoid it.

The churches on the circuit this good brother serves have already subscribed nearly $2000 to the cause, more than half of which had been paid, and the superintendent mentioned has already paid his subscription. If these will pay more, and they will, what excuse have others?

Any pastor could get each church to take one or more shares of $35, and his Sunday schools would do the same. Many preachers can easily find from two to ten who will each be one of the 1000. Of course they will try.

The letter writer declares: "Any Methodist itinerant preacher can spare $35 for so worthy a cause."

The letter is a challenge, and of course more than the thousand will promptly and eagerly respond. I will pledge three of the thousand myself. Who else will take one or more shares personally, or agree to raise it in his church or Sunday school or otherwise? Payments are due when notified that the $35,000 has been pledged. Write at once to H. M. Ellis, 2986 Union Avenue, Memphis, Tenn.

MRS. T. J. NEWELL.

Mrs. Sallie Amelia Newell, daughter of John T. and Jane Forte Turner, was born in Winona, Miss., on February 16, 1850; she married Rev. Thomas J. Newell, May 27, 1875; and she went to her reward from Paris, Tenn., Feb. 6, 1916. Thus ended the earthly life of one of the best women I ever knew, judging from her patience in suffering, sympathy for the distressed, and constant solicitude for all.

To Brother and Sister Newell were born eight children: Miss Virginia, of Paducah, Ky.; Mrs. J. O. Walker, of Jackson, Tenn.; Mrs. D. Boma Sweeney, of Memphis, Tenn.; Mrs. R. L. Dunlap, and Miss Hattie Lou, of Paris, Tenn.; Mr. J. P. Newell, of Post, Texas, and Messrs. Thomas and Edward Newell, of Memphis, Tenn.

This was an ideal family, broken first when Brother Newell was called away suddenly on Nov. 25, 1907, leaving Sister Newell an invalid to the loving care of her children. Now she has gone leaving them all grown and settled in life's business, worshiping the God of their parents and members of their Church. Besides her eight children and grandchildren and sons and daughters-in-law, all so devoted to her, she leaves one brother, Mr. Wat Turner, and one sister, Mrs. J. V. Bishop, both of Mississippi.

Sister Newell was converted when a young lady and joined the Methodist Church. The hope kindled in her heart then burned throughout her entire life, increasing in brightness to the end. When she married Brother Newell, a Methodist minister, she joined with him in the fullest sense in the ministerial work. She went with him to circuit and station, and when he was on the district she looked after the home.

Brother Newell was President of the Grenada College for young women for eleven years; here she was as a mother in a large boarding home, where she blessed hundreds of young women, who, in turn, are blessing many homes throughout our country. For more than twenty years she was a great sufferer; and many times her family and friends thought the end was near. In all her suffering she was thoughtful and patient. Her daughters seemed each to feel that it was a great privilege to do for her all they could. She said to her pastor, "They seem never to tire in doing for me." This sweet task of caring for her fell mainly upon her single daughters; Miss Virginia, of Paducah, Ky., and Miss Hattie Lou, of the Grove School, Paris, Tenn. Out of provision made by their father they secured for her a comfortable home among her friends in Paris, Tenn., and Miss Hattie Lou, by the aid of Mrs. R. L. Dunlap, who lived near-by, kept it bright and happy for her to the end.

She was a woman of great faith and felt deeply grateful to her Heavenly Father and to all his children for every kindness extended and service rendered. She was in the days of her health, and even after health failed, as long as she could, a great help to her husband in his work. Her counsel and sympathetic co-operation made his burdens lighter and his efforts more efficient.

Mrs. Newell was for several years the District Secretary of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Paris District. Her life, after she was shut in, was a benediction to all who came her way. The pastor always went out from her presence better fitted for his work of helping and sympathizing with others.

As the time of her departure drew near, she suffered much, but she did not forget the giver of all her blessings. With her children about her bed, she had them sing, read the Word, and pray with her, while she rejoiced in the blest keeping and leading of her Lord. She fell asleep in Jesus, and how peaceful was her face!

Assisted by her former pastor, a long-time friend of the family, Rev. C. A. Waterfield, the funeral was held at the First Methodist Church, and her body was laid by the side of her husband to await the resurrection call of her Lord. Evidences of love were shown not only by the large concourse of people and sympathizing friends, but also by the many flowers sent from the charges that were served by Brother Newell. The floral offerings in great profusion banked her grave and also the grave of Brother Newell. We all join with this family in their sorrow, but not as those who have no hope, for we expect to meet her again.

Her pastor, W. A. FREEMAN.

THE WORK AT COLUMBIA AND ELSE.

Dear Dr. Meek: Columbia, Miss., is still on the map, and although no one has thought to send you news, we are, in church work, moving along finely and smoothly. We have a preacher who is earnest and who knows how to handle imperfect things, even some of the human family. Dr. Huntley is not only an intellectual, spiritual, powerful exponent of God's Word, but he is also a fine musician (vocal and instrumental). Last Sunday morning, Mrs. N. R. Drummond, who is one of our best vocalists and who possesses the power to make one's heart thrill with her melodious voice, sang "Lead, Kindly Light," a duet, with Dr. Huntley. It was a revelation to many; our preacher knows how to phrase a song and his voice blended harmoniously with Mrs. Drummond's. Come and hear them, Mr. Editor; you will not regret the trip, and when you do come, be sure to attend our Sunday school and hear the exposition of the lesson by our Superintendent, Mr. W. E. Lampton. You will enjoy whatever he has to say; he does not speak very long, but he always emphasizes his sayings, sledge-hammer fashion.

But the above was not what I intended to write you at all. But I believe in giving flowers to the living ones who are entitled to them; hence these preliminaries.

A few Sundays ago, our Sunday school lesson was in Philippians 2:1-11. The teacher asked an explanation of the first verses of the lesson, and some one in our Men's Bible Class made a good answer, but added to it, "as far as possible."

This quotation or expression is not Biblical, neither is it spiritual, but I suppose it is fashionable and up-to-date. We are religious "as far as possible." If that be the case with some of us, I wonder if we apply the "as far as possible" thoroughly.

For instance, do we add the quotation to the Ten Commandments, thus: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," "as far as possible." "Thou shalt not steal," "as far as possible," and so on for each one of the ten.

And yet we do not read: "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shall be saved" "as far as possible." No, salvation is a full one and there is no possibility to miss it if we fulfill the condition, which is to "believe," but not "as far as possible."

Concluding this lengthy communication, I wish to add, Mr. Editor, my sincere commendation to the ones you have no doubt already received of your truthful, excellent and timely editorial on the effort to "resurrect" the Vanderbilt muddle, which I hope is dead for evermore. Sincerely,

Feb. 28, 1916. A METHODIST.

OUR CHURCH AND AMUSEMENTS.

there had been any specific legislation relative to these harmful diversions, and a revocation of it, and when there was no division of sentiment as to its significance and no hesitancy upon the part of the Church authorities in emphatically defining its meaning. The action of the Birmingham General Conference in eliminating from the Discipline all antecedent legislation that dealt directly with these indulgencies, together with the nebulous episcopal address which was later inserted therein—an address which was a distinct retreat from the position taken by our former Bishops in their strong and definite utterances—has undoubtedly greatly weakened the present legal status of our Church toward these vicious social practices, and there is no use in trying to deny it. Why, there is now not a little confusion as to who is to determine what diversions cannot be used in the name of the Lord—whether it is to be done by the Church as a body, or by each individual Christian. Until lately the latter contention was an unheard of thing in Methodism, being a sweet morsel that was rolled under the tongues of the members of only the more worldly denominations. In the light of the foregoing discussion, we give it as our firm conviction that our Book of Discipline as it is now constituted is not adequate for judicial process in order to keep the Church of Christ pure and uncontaminated, if unhappily it should become needful to take legal steps to that end.

A Case in Point.

The Editor has had some experience in this matter since the Book of Discipline was put in its present shape, which (though we do not like to intrude ourself personally into this discussion) we will relate as a means of illustrating in a practical way what we have said concerning the existing situation in our Church. A Methodist minister in the Advocate's territory began in communications to a great secular daily to take issue with the generally understood attitude of Christian people toward the theater, and to proclaim that a discriminatory attendance upon professional plays was not only harmless but helpful and profitable. Some of our ministers and lay members were disturbed by these utterances, which were clipped and mailed to us, with the suggestion that we should discuss them. Hoping, however, that some minister in the brother's immediate section would remonstrate with him, and, if necessary, speak out in defense of the Church, we took no notice of the occurrence. Some weeks later we happened to reproduce in the Advocate a statement concerning the immoral influence of the theater from the pen of Dr. A. C. Dixon, of London, England, who was occupying the pulpit made famous by the lamented Dr. Charles H. Spurgeon. Very much to our surprise, the brother in question sent us an attempted reply to Dr. Dixon, in which he told of his family, then away, having recently attended a theatrical performance and of the fine moral teaching of the play, and expressed the wish that all the sermons delivered from our pulpits could teach lessons equally wholesome. We wrote the brother as kindly as we knew how, declining to publish his article, and expressing the hope that for the good of the Church and for the sake of his influence as a Christian minister he would desist from writing for the public prints such communications as this and those which he had already had printed. He did not seem to appreciate at all our fraternal remonstrance, though his reply was not unkind in its tone. Later, at the instance of some devout women residing at the seat of a State institution of learning, we wrote a brief editorial in which, in an entirely decorous manner, we ventured to discuss the evils of college theatricals, which had been flourishing in the community referred to upon a large and an unprecedented scale, drawing as spectators thousands of people, many of whom came from hundreds of miles away. This caused the brother to come at us again in a proffered paper which raised the whole issue of attendance upon theaters by church members. Tired of retreating, after consultation with some of our friends who concurred in the view that the time had come for us to stand our ground, we published the brother's article and replied to it, defending as best we could what we conceived to be the position of our Church, as it had been taught to us from our boyhood by a Christian Methodist mother. The debate waxed warm, the brother taking the position that there was not a single thing in the Discipline which forbade attendance upon the theater. He also declared that the present episcopal address reprobates only "the indecencies of the stage" and that every respectable man is opposed to "indecency" everywhere.

A few months later the Annual Conference was about to assemble and the question was squarely up as to whether a Methodist pastor could publicly advocate theater-going and parade the fact that his family had attended a professional performance, without official cognizance being taken of the matter. This issue was in reality no more ours than it was that of any other member of the Conference. But, knowing that we were expected to some extent to lead in anything that might be done, we addressed the brother a courteous note, that he might not be taken unawares, frankly telling him that we did know whether the issue would be raised at the Conference, and that if no one else saw fit to bring it forward, we might feel that it was our duty to do so.

When the Conference met, the feeling was tense and there was much concern as to what the outcome would be. And at the time that the situation was most acute, one of the most prominent of our connectional officers was passing around among the brethren stating that there was nothing at all in the Discipline which condemns patronizing the theater, and there were leading high-steeple preachers on hand who were active in proclaiming the same view. Finding that the issue between us and the brother was regarded by some as largely a personal one, and hoping that what we had said in the public discussion would, in some measure at least, serve to protect the interests of the Church, we finally decided that, so far as we were concerned, we would not press the issue upon the attention of the Conference; so the matter passed over.

Such is a frank statement of what took place in one instance since our Discipline was made vague and uncertain in its attitude toward what some are pleased to term the "doubtful amusements." If the chapter eliminated at Birmingham had still been in the book, it is not likely that there ever would have been any such occurrence as this. Very probably, in that event, the brother himself would never have written for print his articles in advocacy of the theater, and certainly no connectional officer or high-steeple preacher could have apologized for him in the manner in which it was done at the time mentioned.

In this, as in all other things, one can lay no surer predicate for contention and trouble than to leave any law or requirement of importance so that it is ambiguous and susceptible of different constructions. Why, then, should our Church be left in such a plight respecting some of the most undermining and vexatious social evils with which she is called to deal?

"The Historic Position" Figment.

But it may be asked, Have we not gone back to "the historic position of Methodism?" We have already shown how, by having enacted specific legislation concerning amusements and having repealed it, we have been left in a much weaker position than we were in prior to 1890—especially so, when the modified tone of the address of our present College of Bishops dealing with this subject, as compared with those of their predecessors, is taken into consideration. In other words, our present situation is not that which we formerly held, but one which has been greatly weakened.

But did not John Wesley merely write the rule which forbids "the taking of such diversions as cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus" and stop with that, without any further specifications? To be sure, he did; but there was no division of sentiment among the little self-denying band that had gathered about the founder of Methodism as to what was prohibited by that rule when it was written. To people who were as strict as they were in their manner of living, it had a clear, definite, and unmistakable meaning. There could scarcely be, however, a more complete misrepresentation of John Wesley than to try to put him in the attitude of desiring not to mention specifically the things which the members of his Societies were enjoined to avoid. On the contrary, he might with far more propriety be termed the GREAT CATALOGUER of what he conceived to be evil and questionable practices. Read the General Rules in the Book of Discipline, which he wrote, and see if this is not true. We will not stop to quote them: they include "buying and selling on the Sabbath day;" "drinking spirituous liquors;" "buying and selling goods that have not paid the duty;" "usury;" "using many words in buying and selling;" "wearing gold or costly apparel;" "borrowing or buying things without a probability of returning or paying for them," etc.

If there was ever any purpose in Wesley's mind to leave any form of conduct or amusement that was regarded as doubtful to be settled by the conscience of each individual Methodist, we have not seen any disclosure of it anywhere in his writings. On the other hand, his bands and class meetings provided for a close oversight of those belonging to his flocks, and for both nurturing their spiritual life and holding them to a strict account for a failure to observe the rules of the Societies. So true was this that Mr. Southey, one of Wesley's historians, refers to this form of supervision as a kind of "spiritual police." Whatever else it may be, this modern talk among our people about leaving the so-called "doubtful amusements" to "the individual judgment and conscience," instead of to the consensus of opinion of the Church, crystallized into a definite expression, is not WESLEYAN. Nor do we believe that it is in harmony with the practices of the primitive Christian Church, though we will not now take up that question, since it is not the forum into which this issue has at the present time been carried by its advocates.

We cannot but wonder if all of the gentlemen who are so insistent that the Southern Methodist Church shall hold to the rule concerning "diversions" exactly as Wesley wrote it—a rule which happens to be less definite than the position later taken by the Church—would be equally as insistent upon standing with him where he does minutely specify what should or should not be done. We wonder if they were permitted to vote for or against the retention of the rules relating to "the using of many words in buying or selling," "the putting on of gold and costly apparel," "usury," "borrowing," etc., how they would cast their ballots. Would they resolutely persist in standing with Mr. Wesley both when the rules that he made are somewhat general and when they are very specific? Or would they invoke his great name when his position happens to suit them, and just as quickly repudiate it when his attitude happens not to do so?

A Respectful Inquiry.

There is still another question that we should like to raise here. Within recent years the following paragraph has been written in our Book of Discipline:

"Let all our preachers and members abstain from the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage, from signing petitions for such sale, from becoming bondsmen for any person as a condition for obtaining license, from acting as a dispenser or voluntarily accepting an appointment or election as such under the laws of any State in which there is a dispensary law authorizing the sale of intoxicating liquors by the State, county, or municipality, and from renting property to be used for such sale. If any member shall violate any of the provisions of this paragraph, he shall be deemed guilty of immorality," etc.

If this is not minute "cataloguing," pray tell us what it is. Why, then, have not those who are opposed to "cataloguing" evils specifically been heard crying out against this departure from the policy for which they are such sticklers? Why have they not lifted their voices in favor of going back to Mr. Wesley's "historic position" concerning "drunkenness, or the drinking of spirituous liquors unless in cases of necessity?" Are they opposed to the foregoing paragraph? If not, let them tell us why they are for "cataloguing" in this case, and against it when it comes to the "diversions" that cannot be "used in the name of the Lord Jesus."

We are not yet through with this question, but we shall have to let the additional remarks that we desire to make concerning it appear in a later number of the Advocate. As we have before stated, we consider this issue one of vast and far-reaching importance—one which most profoundly involves the future welfare of Southern Methodism, and hence also to a considerable extent the spiritual welfare of all the people of the South and of the entire country. As we view the situation, if there was ever a time when our beloved Church needed to be outspoken and uncompromising in her attitude toward dancing, card-playing, theater-going, and kindred evils, it is in this luxurious and voluptuous age, when they are raging to an unprecedented degree and are steadily becoming an increasing menace to the moral foundations of our social order..

FLOODS OR BACK WATER IN THE DELTA.

Dear Doctor Meek: About six weeks ago they began to talk of high water. I did not fully realize the meaning; but imitated others and soon had everything on a platform, raft, or above "the high water." For weeks those below us have been living in exceedingly high houses, or rafts, or have moved to mounds or to the hills. Rolling Fork levied the courthouse block, but the town did not go under. We have left out of the overflow only about a half or three-quarters of a mile, however. From my door, I took a boat and went 15 miles down the Sunflower River over barn gates, fields, fences. I saw floating houses, barns, fencing, posts—in fact, everything that water could move. We came across negroes living in gin houses, on barges, and in the tops of cabins. Chickens and dogs were seen on the tops of cabins and on floats. Hogs were penned in the house, or in the attic. The negroes go in boats and cut limbs of trees for fire-wood. The managers of the plantations usually furnish food to live on. There is no way of estimating the loss of property and the suffering of people, especially of the very poor.

I took a boat intending to go to Vicksburg, but did not go further than Valley Park, 22 miles distant. On another trip, later, I did go to Vicksburg, which is 44 miles from Rolling Fork, and, in all my travel, my desire was to find out if relief was anywhere needed, and what might be done for the future. The water varied in depth from a few inches near the highest places to 12 or 15 feet in the woods and fields. This is the highest back water in the history of the country, according to the oldest citizens. The cause is that the levees held the water and forced it down the channel to so high a gauge, 20 miles above Vicksburg, near the mouth of the Yazoo River, that it backed up over the country above to the level of the channel. The flooded area is about 40 miles square.

Some things that impressed me on my trip were, as I have stated, seeing negroes living in the tops of churches, gins, or schoolhouses, dogs, hogs, cows, or chickens sometimes on rafts tied to trees, or floating, the owners being gone.

The first three weeks rabbits could be seen floating on logs; after that time one could see them no more—they had famished. Occasionally we could see a doctor cross our trail on his journey to see the sick, who were housed as above described. Dead negroes were in some instances wrapped in poultry wire and dropped into the creek. We were informed that one that died was found by observing the buzzards, the body having been wrapped, boxed and tied to a tree, to be buried when the water goes down.

Every living thing is waiting for the water to go down. The farming interests, business, and general vocational life are waiting for its recession. Nearly all the schools of this and the adjoining county are closed, and water is coursing through one-half of the buildings. Not more than one tenth of the two counties remained above the water. I saw water running over the pulpit board of a church; others are submerged. These are mostly negro churches, as the whites do not try to have churches in such communities, as a rule. I feel sure that this immersed church must be a Baptist church, for there was "much water in it."

We hope that we shall be free of water by the first of April. Around Rolling Fork most of the land will be out in ten or twelve days. This is a fine field for "home mission" work, as this condition of affairs has a tendency to make people lose their hold on God and the religious life. Some impressions that I formed during the overflow will never leave me: as far as eyes could see, water, water, everywhere, very cold, with suffering negroes and stock trying to live—not a few of them, however, suffering death.

When the water is off the planters will make a mad rush to follow the receding water with a crop that will pay for the enforced idleness of hands and stock for these sixty days. But there will be losses that can never be retrieved.

Our prayer is that the Federal authorities will take hold of the levees and construct them in a way to give this fine section of country permanent relief. We lived for nearly a month expecting to hear the announcement at any hour, day or night, "The levees are broken," which would mean that one should send on the alarm, rush everything on a raft or platform, tie one's doorsteps to a tree, bring the hogs into the top of the barn, and hurry the family to the attic.

PROGRAM OF SERVICE FOR WESLEY ADULT BIBLE CLASSES.

At the meeting of the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations in Richmond, Va., in January, a number of very important matters were considered and acted on. One was that of a program of service for Adult Bible Classes. The leaders of our work believe that the surest way to learn is to do, that expression is the best evidence that an impression has been made, and that truth worked out means a knowledge of the truth possessed.

Our Bible classes are formed and maintained to study the Word of God, and we study the Word of God that we may not only know the will of God but that we may do the will of God. And the General Sunday School Board of our Church, following the conclusions of the Council meeting referred to, has promulgated the following "Program of Service" for our Wesley Adult Bible Classes, and recommends that all sueh classes at onec adopt policies which will put the entire program into operation:

I—In the Class, to
1. Increase class membership.
2. Maintain and operate a standard organization.
3. Win all membhers to the Christian life.

II—In the Local Church, to
1. Secure Church attendance.
2. Provide trained workers for all departments of Church work.
3. Assume some definite responsibility for boys and girls.

III—In the Homc, to
1. Promote systematic Bible Study.
2. Seek to establish family worship.
3. Encourage good general reading and the study of parental responsibilities.

IV—In the Community, to
1. Assume some definite social service task.
2. Co-operate with other social service agencies.
3. Promote missionary effort.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney,
Field Secretary, Sardis, Miss.

Mr. A. L. Dietrich, Divisional Field Secretary, and I have completed Tour No. 1, as published in the Advocate a month ago. We visited 23 county seats and held institutes in every place on our schedule except Fulton. There were 67 preachers, 100 superintendents, and a number of other interested persons present at these meetings. We issued 293 certificates to people who attended the morning and afternoon sessions. The different schools procured 343 of the latest, best books for their officers and teachers; also several hundred minor helps; besides these we distributed about four thousand leaflets on better organization.

No one can estimate the vision these workers received; we only know that good seed have heen sown, and we trust God to see that these seed shall hring forth a bountiful harvest in the days that are to come.

The preachers and superintendents in the places where the institutes were held did all that faithful men could do to advertise the meetings and did other things that made it possible for us to do the work the Church has commissioned us to do. The Church at large is their debtor.

In nearly every town the church buildings are too small to accommodate the people that attend the services at the Sunday school hour. Still there are thousands yet to be reached with the gospel of our Savior. Who ever thought we would be embarrassed for lack of room to accommodate the crowds that eagerly join in this modern movement to evangelize all the people? If more of our teachers are Spirit-filled and tactful it will not be long before we have as many at the preaching service as we have at the Bible study hour. Let all our leaders go deeper into the study of God's Word and tarry longer before Him in intereessory prayer, and many of our problems will become His opportunity to lead us into a larger place.

KEEPING BUSY.

The following are some items from the January report of Rev. J. L. Neill, Sunday School Field Secretary, to the Sunday School and Mission Boards of the Mississippi Conferenee, under the direction of which he is working:

"Two new Teacher-training Classes have been reported organized during the month, others have said they were going to organize, but have made no definite report to that effect.

"The following schools have reported China Mission Specials: Galloway Memorial, Jackson, $130; Capitol St., Jackson, $100; First Church, Gulfport, $100; First Chureh, Laurel, $100; Fifth St., Meridian, ——; Fernwood, $400, and Sumrall, $100. Galloway Memorial has already reported more than $100 raised, and I feel sure that they will go beyond their pledge. Central, Meridian, pledges at least $100 also. Beside these some thirty or forty have written me that they were going to take specials, but have given no certain amount. You will note from the above that already we have more pledged than was paid on Specials for the entire year of 1915.

"A Home Department has been organized at Capitol Street and I have sent in an application for one Wesley Intermediate Bible Class Charter. Dr. Bulla writes me that we have but 13 in our Conference. This includes Adult, Senior, and Intermediate classes. I have decided that we eould organize at least fifty more this year, and so will work to that end.

"During the month I have visited and spoken to the following Sunday schools: Decatur; Main Street and Broad Street, Hattiesburg; Millsaps Memorial, Jackson; Rankin Street, Jackson, and Flaggs Chapel. I have conducted chapel exercises at Millsaps College, Newton County, A. H. S., and the Laurel High School, also spoke to the students at the last two plaees. Besides this, I have visited and talked to some of the workers at Crystal Springs, Hazlehurst, Brookhaven, and the Methodist Orphanage."

HATTIESBURG DISTRICT NOTES.

Mr. J. R. Banes, a prominent business man at Lucedale, and one of the livest wires in our Church there, is at the Hattiesburg Infirmary. He had a delicate operation performed on him a week ago, and is now on the way to complete recovery. Brother Banes is an active member of the Sunday School Board of our Conference, and is one of the most earnest Sunday school workers in this section.

The mission work in Hattiesburg is intensely under way, under the tactful leadership of Capt. J. W. McAfee. A live protracted meeting is now in progress, Rev. W. A. Terry, the greatly loved pastor of Broad St. Church did the preaching last week. The preaching was well done and much good was accomplished. Rev. T. W. Adams is doing the preaching this week and Rev. C. W. Crisier will do the preaching next week. The house at every service is full of earnest hearers. We look for grcat results during these three weeks' services.

Earnest efforts are being put forth to build a house of worship at Petal, just across Leaf River from Hattiesburg. Brother W. A. Terry, the pastor, is doing all in his power to bring this enterprise to a successful issue. He is backed in this laudable undertaking by Brother Duncan McGilvray and some other laymen at Petal. The prospects are good for success. Any layman who may read these lines and is able to give a helping hand could not invest money in a better way. The need is imperative.

Rev. C. W. Crisler and the leaders in Main Street Church are grappling heroically with their Church debt, and success is assured. To wipe out this debt will be a notable achievement. All honor is due these noble men. Added to this, they are now putting in a handsome pipe organ. This is a worthy and notable ending of the quadrennium for Brother Crisler.

Hattiesburg has developed a good deal of interest in a prospective "leap year" marriage. Many costly presents are offered on condition the lady makes the proposal of marriage. She is to make an affidavit to the fact that she "popped the question!" The pastor of the Main Street Baptist Church proposed to marry them free of charge and to present the couple with a new $5 bill. The pastor of Court Street Church made a proposition to go a nickel better. We are uncertain who will do the "marrifying." The Baptist preacher has left Hattiesburg for a few days and left the Methodist preacher to hold the fort.

Since writing the above note in reference to the Main Street Church debt Brother Crisler and his leaders have completed the work of raising the money, $15,000, and canceled the mortgage. Good! Splendidly good!

RAPIDES CIRCUIT, LA. CONF.

Dear Brother Meek: The Rapides Circuit, whieh we have now been serving one year, happens to be the only rural charge of the M. E. Church, South, in the large Parish of Rapides. This will give the readers of the Advocate an idea of the weakness of our country work in Louisiana. It also forces us to infer one of two things: either the inaccessibility of the country folk, or the negligenee of our Church. Reason forbids that the former should be the case—heaven forbid the latter! As above stated, we have just completed our first year with the people of this charge, and can truthfully say that God has been with us, giving us some good revivals and one new organization. There has been a goodly number to join the Church, many of whom were children. The rich, I regret to say, we too often neglect. We, with St. Paul, simply "charge the rich" and assume that it is not worth while to attempt their salvation. Yet many of them would welcome the humble attentions of the unostentatious gospel preacher and would gladly become acquainted with Jesus. Why is it that we are so prone to neglect to save this class of people?

Brother May has just rounded up his first quarter, having ended his first round with us at Fellowship Church. His first date with us was Feb. 18, at Indian Mission, where, using an interpreter, he preached to an appreciative congregation of Choctaw Indians, and at the close of the service baptized two Indians. These people for the purpose of holding prayer meetings had antedated our coming by several days. There is, therefore, no need to say that the quarterly conference was in every way an inspiring occasion. After the preaching service, Brother Obe Blue-Eyes was ordained as preacher and leader of the Indian Mission. Brother Obe is seventy-two years old and walks to and from his appointments, and one of these is nineteen miles distant. From F. C., Brother May went to Brother Roberts at Forest Hill, where, after preaching in the evening to a large and attentive audience, Brother Roberts' quarterly conference was held. Thence, we drove eighteen miles into the country for the first quarterly conference of our charge. On the day I was with Brother May he held three quarterly conferences, preached four times, dedicated one church, licensed an Indian preacher, baptized two Indians and one baby, and traveled fifty miles in a buggy. He said it came near "getting him."—A. A. Phillips, P. C.

MY PAPA.

By John G. Cronbach.

My papa is a great big man,
He does not curse or swear;
He always has a better plan
For those who do not care.

My papa does not smoke or chew,
And neither does he drink;
He knows the Bible through and through
And makes the wicked shrink.

My papa's always in his place,
And knows the sinners' seats;
He always has a smiling face
For everyone he meets.

My papa does not boss or rule,
But gives a helping hand;
He lives up to the Golden Rule,
That brings him through the land.

The people love him; so do I—
Even as a teacher!
If I must the reason tell—why,
'Cause he is a preacher.

LITTLE LOTUS FLOWER.

Spat! Phil looked up as the great white blossom fell at his feet, just in time to be struck in the face by another. "Hello, little white boy, don't you want to come into my garden?" called a sweet, childish voice in English. The prettiest Chinese girl he had ever seen was smiling down at him from the other side of the wall.

Now in China, nice little girls, especially mandarins' little girls, are not really expected to throw flowers at little American boys or invite them into their fathers' gardens. But this mandarin was very advanced in his ways, and little Lotus Flower was brought up more like an American girl than a Chinese princess, so Phil was not doing anything very foolish when he picked up both blossoms and said, "Yes, princess, I should."

"Then climb over the wall. Don't mind those flowers; they are dirty. I will give you more."

The wall was not very high, and Phil easily scrambled over into the garden. The princess clapped her hands.

"You are the first white boy I have ever been so close to, and I think you are very nice. I am Lotus Flower, as I guess you know, and my father is a mandarin. He could have your head cut off if he wanted to, but he won't. He is nice and does just as I say. I am ten years old. Now what is your name and how old are you?"

Phil laughed. "My name is Philip Sidney Ward, but everybody calls me Phil, and I am eleven."

"Then I shall call you Phil, too. And who is your father, Phil?"

"Well, he mends people's heads instead of cutting them off. They call him a medical missionary."

The little princess frowned. "I don't like missionaries, Phil, and I am not sure that I shall let you stay in my garden. But perhaps I will. You seem to be nice. Here comes my father; I will ask him."

The tall, dignified mandarin had come out of the pavilion to see whom his little girl was talking with.

"Father, this is Phil. He is a nice boy, but his father is a missionary. Shall I let him stay in my garden?"

The mandarin smiled and then looked grave.

"If you are sure he is a nice boy, I think he may stay. But the missionaries are better in their own land. China does not need them. Why do they come here, little boy?"

"To help the people of China," replied Phil, promptly.

"But we do not need help. The Chinese are better and stronger and wiser than any other nation, and the missionaries only make trouble for us. But you are too young to understand these things. Show him the peacocks, Lotus Flower, and the lilies and the duck pond." And the mandarin walked back into the pavilion, and became so engrossed in great affairs of state that he straightway forgot all about the children.

That was the beginning of a great friendship between Phil and Lotus Flower, and they spent many happy afternoons together. The old mandarin would sometimes sit and watch them play when he had a moment's rest from the duties which took up all his time. He seemed to have taken a strong liking to Phil, although he always opposed the work of Phil's father and the other missionaries and did all he could to prevent them extending it. His opposition, which was rather surprising as he was known to be progressive in many ways, was a great handicap to the work.

One day Phil came into the garden and Lotus Flower was not there. Instead, the old mandarin was sitting all alone by the door of his pavilion, and there were marks of tears on his face.

"Lotus Flower cannot play with you to-day, Phil," he said. "She is very sick, and the doctors all say she must die."

"Oh, mandarin," cried Phil, "won't you let me bring my father to see her? Perhaps he can cure her."

The mandarin hesitated. "I have always told my people to have nothing to do with the missionaries or the white doctors. But I love my little girl, and our doctors say that they can do no more. Yes, Phil, he may come, and, oh, bring him quick!"

How Phil rushed to the missionary compound! Dr. Ward was at home and lost no time in hastening to the bedside of the little patient.

"Appendicitis!" he exclaimed at once. "We must operate right off!"

He expected a storm of opposition, but the mandarin only bowed.

"Our doctors have given up and the case is in your hands. Do what seems best to you."

Little Lotus Flower did not die, and three weeks later she was strong enough to play a little while in the garden. Then one day her father's state palanquin appeared at the compound.

"I have brought my little girl to see your little girl," the mandarin explained. "And while they are playing you and I will talk about your work. You know more about medicine than our doctors; perhaps you know more about other things than we do. I am willing to learn."

"Now our work will prosper," said Dr. Ward, after the mandarin had gone. "And, Phil, I think the credit belongs to you and little Lotus Flower."—Southern Churchman.

A LITTLE ERRAND GIRL.

Hester loved to do errands for her mother and have her call her a faithful servant when she did them well. One day she had been talking with her mother about God, when she quickly raised her head, with a bright look in her eyes, and said: "Why, mother, then God is sending us on errands all the time. I am His little errand girl, too."

"Yes, dear. He has given us errands to do and plenty of time to do them and a Book written full to show us how. Every day we can tell Him how we try to do them and ask Him to help us, so when He calls us we run to meet Him and give Him our account."

"I like that," the child said, nestling back in her comfortable seat, "I'll like to be God's little errand girl."—Child's Gem.

ROOM TO SMILE.

The Primary Class met in a wee little room, and one day there were so many, many children that they had to sit very close together to get in at all. One little girl was afraid that her white dress would get mussed up, so she began to scold about how crowded it was. The little girl next to her was having a happy time, and she was so glad to have a great many children there that she did not mind the crowding, so she looked up and said sweetly: "We have room to smile, anyway."—Christian Intelligencer.

WEDDING BELLS.

Dear Dr. Meek: Accompanied by that accomplished gentleman, Rev. H. S. Spragins, the popular presiding elder of the Greenville District, I journeyed to Boyle on Tuesday afternoon for the purpose of attending the nuptials of Miss Ethel Golding and Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, which were celebrated the following morning, just before they took their northward flight on their wedding trip.

Miss Golding had won the hearts of all during her brief stay in Boyle, and loving hands had decorated the church with excellent taste in her honor. The day was brilliant, nature seeming bent upon bestowing its golden blessings on the happy hour. Friends were gathered from far and near to witness the happiness of these captives of Dan Cupid, and the entire community seemed to be present, the public school even having recessed for that purpose.

With his manly bearing and her radiant beauty, the bride and groom made a most striking pair as they stood before Rev. E. M. Shaw, who impressively performed the ceremony, assisted by Rev. H. S. Spragins. And a noteworthy feature of the service itself was that the entire ceremony as it appears in the Discipline was employed. This was done at the express wish of the contracting parties. No shabby abbreviation was tolerated. Thank God for a woman who wants to "obey" her husband and who is willing for him to wear the family trousers! And this was no weak woman. Far from it. Fair of face, comely of form, richly endowed by nature and accomplished by education, with a character enriched by the grace of heaven, she would grace any station.

The North Mississippi Conference has thus received a recruit of whom it may well be proud and the gifted pastor of Starkville a helpmeet in deed and in truth. J. D. BARBEE.

Editorial

"Though thy name be spread abroad,
Like winged seed, from shore to shore,
What thou art before thy God,
That thou art and nothing more."

* * *

It will take something more than religious "goody-goodyism" to save the world.

* * *

When a fire breaks out in the pulpit its forth-flashings are pretty sure to set hearts to burning in the pews.

Anyhow, the Address on Worldliness that we now have in the Discipline is not wholly without specifications: the Roman "gladiatorial shows" are mentioned.

* * *

The mightiest builders of God's kingdom on earth have usually been great toilers and great sufferers. Lives of inactivity and ease are never rich in achievements.

* * *

Perhaps the reason why so many people had rather engage in other kinds of Chureh work than in soul-winning is that the latter is the most difficult of all to do, and requires more spirituality and consecration upon the part of the worker himself.

* * *

There are some whose plan for saving the world is apparently a sort of Christian Science process—just imagining and proclaiming that there is nothing the matter with it. To them, all talk about human depravity and the need of the "new birth" is mere nonsense. We have not heard so much of this kind of preachment since the dreadful scourge of war has been raging over more than half the globe.

* * *

As a means of prometing "efficiency" a genuine revival of religion must be given the first place. People can never to any great extent be enlisted in Christian work when they are spiritually cold and indifferent by simply explaining to them how things ought to be done and exhorting them to get busy. Their hearts need first to be set on fire by having the Holy Ghost shed abroad in them. Herein is to be found the explanation of the failure of much well-meant religious effort in this day.

THE MOST IMPORTANT HIGHWAY.

We are hearing a great deal in our Southland at this time about various kinds of "highways," which is all well enough; but we are not hearing nearly so mueh as we should like about the "highway" so impressively described by the Prophet Isaiah: "And a highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called the way of holiness; the unelean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for the redeemed. * * * No lion shall be there, nor shall any ravenous beast go up thereon—they shall not be found there, but the redeemed shall walk there." This is the way of safety—the way to peace and happiness and an everlasting home in the skies. To enter and keep in this glorious way is man's highest duty and sublimest privilege. And there is room enough in it for all.

A WONDERFUL GROWTH.

We have lately seen utterances to the effect that the Salvation Army is not now as virile and prosperous as it once was. The following statement, for which we are indebted to the "Church News Association" of New York, certainly does not seem to bear out any such view:

"The Salvation Army shows, by its report just made public, that under Commander Evangeline Booth it has made greater progress in America in the last ten years than during the entire time previous to that period that it has been at work here. Its property accumulated in the United States alone is now put at $7,000,000. There are exceeding 9000 army corps and outposts, and its local officers, including 17,000 bandsmen, number more than 75,000. Especially noteworthy is its work for fallen women, the number of such that the Army comes into contact with is nearly 9000. The newspaper organ of the Army, published in all countries where the Army has work, is issued in twenty-seven languages. The number of countries wherein the Army has work is fifty-nine."

SHOULD BE CULTIVATED.

If the Christian's faith is largely the measure of both his attainments in grace and his achievements in working for the Master, surely it is wise to cultivate and strengthen it in every possible way. Any kind of reading or teaching that leaves one's faith weakened, had better be shunned. Error is often too deep and subtle for the greatest human intellects to discover its defects as quickly as the moral nature feels its influence. The teachings of Darwin, for instance, doubtless clouded the religious lives of not a few persons whose minds were in the grip of the reasoning of the renowned scientist, which, for a time impressed nearly the whole intellectual world; but to-day his theories are generally admitted to be very much on the wane. The moral instincts of a man are often a better guide than the feeble and uncertain finite reason—especially is this true if his soul has been quickened into spiritual life.

SOUTHERN METHODISM LEADS.

Occasionally we hear the remark that Southern Methodism is being far outstripped by the Methodism north of Mason and Dixon's line. According to the figures of Dr. H. K. Carroll, who certainly is not biased in favor of our Church, this is not true. Dr. Carroll's recently published Church statistics show that within the past twenty-five years the Methodist Episcopal Church has had a gain of 63 per cent, while the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has had an increase of 71 per cent. There is not anywhere on the globe a branch of Wesleyanism that is sounder in the faith or which is giving a better account of itself in the field of service than that which exists in these Southern States of America.

HIGHER CRITICISM IN CHINA.

The following is the concluding paragraph of an extended editorial on "Higher Criticism and Mission Work," which appeared in the February number of the China Christian Advocate, a publication issued under the joint supervision of our Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church:

"A situation is coming on in China which may well fill us with much concern. The teachings of higher criticism are manifesting their influence in the life and work of many of the missionaries. Many of the younger missionaries, especially, coming from the homeland, are teaching doctrines that the older conservative missionaries utterly abhor, and it may be that a serious conflict will arise in the future between these two lines of thought among the missionaries. It behooves all of us, therefore, on the one hand to be very careful about promulgating things that have not been thoroughly well established, and thus disturbing the simple faith of the Chinese Christians, while on the other hand, we do not hesitate to let our Chinese brethren know of the well established results of modern criticism. For if we try to deceive our Chinese brethren and keep them from learning about the results of modern criticism, they will be sure to find out these things from other sources and we will lose their confidence and our testimony to them will be weakened."

We have for some years regarded Higher Criticism as perhaps the gravest peril that menaces true Christianity in the homeland, and we have known for some time that it has also been getting in its work in some of the foreign fields; but this is the first recognition of danger from it abroad that we remember to have seen from an authoritative Methodist source. Let it be noted that it is stated in the extract above that it is the younger missionaries who are causing the trouble in the Orient. By every token, the orthodox evangelical Churches need to keep a strict watch on what is being taught in their theological schools.

OUR HONOR ROLL.

This roll is to be made of the charges in which all of the stewards are subscribers to the Advocate. At present it stands as follows:

1. Ripley and Blue Mountain, Miss., Rev. R. P. Neblett, pastor.

2. Court Street, Hattiesburg, Miss., Rev. T. W. Adams, pastor.

3. Kossuth Circuit, North Miss., Rev. D. R. McDougal, pastor.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. T. H. Dorsey, presiding elder of the Corinth District, reports the outlook in his field to be encouraging. It is safe to predict that the prospect will grow yet brighter with Brother Dorsey to set the pace.

Rev. C. M. Crossley, of Forest, Miss., heartened the Publisher on March 3 with a letter bringing the Advocate 5 new and 9 renewal subscriptions. The work of the Master continues to prosper in his energetic hands.

We regret to learn that Judge R. R. Reid, of Amite City, La., has recently been ill, but we are pleased to know that he is again able to be up and about. Judge Reid is widely known both as a lawyer and as a Methodist layman.

From Toccopola, Miss., comes a fine club of subscriptions, forwarded by Rev. T. J. Hopper on March 3. We take off our hat to Brother Hopper, and we pray that the Advocate may be a means of re-enforcing his labors for the Master in his field.

Our esteemed friend, Rev. R. M. Evans, of Calhoun City, Miss., continues to extend the circulation of the Advocate in his field, for which good service he has our thanks. Referring to his charge, he says: "We are having a good opening everywhere."

From Holcomb, Miss., Rev. C. T. Floyd reports as follows: "We are getting along nicely with our work. Among other things, I am doing all I can to get our members to take and read the Advocate." Brother Floyd's letter brought us a club of 9 subscriptions.

Rev. R. H. Harper, pastor of the Parker Memorial Church, this city, preached a strong and feeling sermon last Sunday at 11 o'clock a. m. from the text, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" The congregation was a large and attentive one.

Rev. O. J. Chandler, until a few days ago our pastor at Alexandria, La., is now recuperating at Asheville, N. C. Rev. W. H. Coleman, Sunday School Field Secretary of the Louisiana Conference, according to report, has been placed in charge of the Alexandria church.

Rev. B. F. M. Bullard, of Duck Hill, Miss., says: "The work is moving on well and everything points to a good year. The people at Duck Hill, where the parsonage is located, certainly know how to treat a pastor. Good things to eat are sent to the parsonage nearly every day."

Rev. W. W. Holmes, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, was a visitor at Jackson, Miss., last Sunday week. He occupied the pulpit of the Galloway Memorial Church, and preached with great acceptability. Brother Holmes is an ex-Mississipplan and an alumnus of Millsaps College.

We acknowledge the reception of a club of 13 subscriptions from Rev. W. B. Jones of Lumberton, Miss., for which we express to him our hearty thanks. All the interests of the Church are safe in the hands of Brother Jones, whether he serves a district or a pastorate. Blessings on him and his work!

The Wesleyan Christian Advocate of March 10 stated that Mrs. Galloway, widow of the lamented Bishop Charles B. Galloway, was in Atlanta last week as the guest of her son-in-law and daughter, Dr. and Mrs. A. M. Muckenfuss. Dr. Muckenfuss is the Professor of Chemistry in the Medical School of Emory University.

From a business letter from Rev. J. D. Wroten, who has the good fortune to be the preacher-in-charge at Benoit, Miss., we take the following: "Everything is encouraging in these parts, and we extend best wishes to the Advocate." Brother Wroten, however, did not stop with good wishes: his letter brought us 2 new and 3 renewal subscriptions.

Rev. Walter M. Campbell, our genial and industrious pastor at Shelby, Miss., has our thanks for a club of 7 subscriptions to the Advocate—4 of them being new and 3 of them renewals. It does not need to be said that the work is going forward well in that delightful charge when it is known that Brother Campbell is the leader of our forces there.

Mrs. J. W. Conger, of Vaiden, Miss., who was made President of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference at the recent meeting at Clarksdale, is a young worker of unusual capacity and consecration. Especially is she gifted as a speaker. We predict that under her resourceful leadership the woman's work in North Mississippi will continue to go forward in a gratifying manner.

The following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not elsewhere been made, have our thanks for two or more subscriptions sent in within the past few days: Rev. W. N. Duncan, Winona, Miss, 5; Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr., Madison, Miss., 7; Rev. W. L. Storment, Coffeeville, Miss., 7; Rev. F. B. Ormond, McComb, Miss., 6; Rev. M. F. Adams, Flora, Miss., 5; Rev. R. T. Nolen, Williamsburg, Miss., 4; Rev. D. H. Crowson, Paris, Miss., 6.

In a business letter to our office, bringing us a club of 5 subscriptions, Rev. J. T. McVey, of Lorman, Miss., says: "The people of this charge received us kindly and have shown us many courtesies since we came among them. Some of the leading preachers of our Conference were reared near this place (Watkins and B. F. Jones). Many of their kindred live here now. The membership of this charge is composed of very choice people."

Rev. T. H. Halfacre is delighted with his new charge at Artesia, Miss. He states that he has found the workers there to be alive and active, and that his worthy predecessor, Rev. E. G. Mohler, left the field in an admirable condition. The salary for the pastor has been advanced to $1200. The visit of Brother Woollard, the capable presiding elder, on the third Sunday in February was much enjoyed, his sermons on that occasion being of a very high order.

Rev. Olin Ray, of the North Mississippi Conference, who is attending the Candler School of Theology at Atlanta, Ga., writes: "The work is going on well at Emory University. Two of our men received degrees last night (March 4). Dr. S. A. Steel had been announced to preach the baccalaureate sermon, but was unable to meet his engagement; so the discourse was delivered by Bishop Candler. Several new men have matriculated for the new term, now beginning."

Rev. E. M. Shaw, of Boyle, Miss., has brought us under obligations to him for 16 subscriptions to the Advocate—15 of them being new. Brother Shaw writes optimistically of the work in his charge. He says: "We are adding some Sunday school rooms to Shipman's chapel. Our Sunday schools and prayer meetings are very good, and the attendance upon the preaching services is quite gratifying." It is not unusual to hear of the work of the Church making good progress where Brother Shaw holds sway.

Rev. H. W. May, the faithful presiding elder of the Alexandria District, reports as follows: "The first round of my district ends well. We have had 115 accessions to the Church. The Sunday school attendance has been increased. A new parsonage has been bought at Merryville, and a church has been built at Reeves. The indications generally point to the best year in the history of the district. Sunday school institutes will be held in our territory as follows: Colfax, March 15; Alexandria, March 16; Oakdale, March 17."

Rev. J. D. Simpson has tendered his resignation as President of Birmingham College, to take effect in June.

Our church at Hazlehurst, Miss., is undergoing repairs and improvements at a cost of several hundred dollars. Rev. B. F. Lewis is the active and faithful pastor of this flock.

A new church, to cost about $15,000, is in contemplation at Belzoni, Miss., where Rev. T. M. Brownlee is the popular pastor. A considerable portion of this amount has already been secured.

Rev. A. S. Lutz, presiding elder of the Monroe District, was scheduled to dedicate the new Methodist Church at Wisner, La., where Rev. J. R. Roy is pastor, last Sunday. This structure was erected at a cost of approximately $2300.

Rev. Chas. D. McGehee, our gifted young pastor on the Ackerman (Miss.) charge, has enterprised a new church movement at Weir, one of his appointments. Subscriptions aggregating over $3000 were taken for this purpose at the close of the morning service on Sunday, March 5.

Rev. T. A. Ferguson, of Camden, Miss., sends us 3 subscriptions to the Advocate and adds the following note: "Matters are progressing well in this charge. All the indications are encouraging. We have been without a church at this point for seven years, but we now propose to construct one. We are serving a fine people."

We desire to state that we have all the articles on the subject of "Preparedness" that we care to publish. Brother Barbee states that he will have a further word in reply to Brother Ramsey, and with that utterance the debate between these two brethren will stand closed, so far as the Advocate is concerned.

Bishop Candler's visit to Jackson Friday of this week in the interest of Emory University, our new connectional school east of the Mississippi River, promises to be a memorable occasion. When Bishop Candler talks on the subject of "Christian Education," one would be well rewarded, should he go hundreds of miles to hear him.

Rev. W. R. Hendrix, D.D., pastor of St. Mark's Church, Atlanta, Ga., is now assisting in a revival at First Church, Crowley, La. Dr. Hendrix has held successful meetings in New Orleans, Shreveport, and other Louisiana cities before, and we shall expect to hear good results from the revival campaign at Crowley, where Rev. A. I. Townsley is the hustling pastor.

The Leland (Miss.) Enterprise of March 11 contains an extended notice of the revival meeting which is to begin there next Sunday. The preaching will be done by Evangelist G. A. Klein, of Nashville, Tenn., and Prof. and Mrs. G. M. Boyd and the Wisdom Sisters will have charge of the singing. Rev. E. H. Cunningham, the pastor, is sparing no effort to get things in readiness for this evangelistic campaign.

Rev. H. S. Spragins, presiding elder of the Greenville District, writes us as follows: "Bishop Atkins will spend Sunday, April 9, with the people of the Tunica charge. He will dedicate both our church at Tunica and our church at Evansville—one in the morning, and the other in the evening. Brother McCorkle, the pastor of this delightful work, has been making full proof of his ministry. Besides having liquidated a debt of about $600 on our house of worship at Tunica, he has been looking well after all the other interests of the Church."

Rev. P. O. Lowrey is working with his usual vigor on the Donaldsonville, La., charge. On the evening of Feb. 25 a meeting was held at the Donaldsonville courthouse in the interest of the "Men and Religion Movement," at which an excellent program was carried out. All of the speakers on that interesting occasion, strange to say, were "laymen." Most so-called laymen's meetings are so largely made up of and run by the preachers that we have sometimes thought as a matter of common honesty they ought to drop that designation. Brother Lowrey is, furthermore, doing some good writing against the dance and like evils in the local papers of his community.

We are in receipt of a kindly note from Dr. Richard Wilkinson, who has lately connected himself with the Protestant Episcopal Church, and who, it is stated, will have charge of a church at Lexington, Ky., in which he says he leaves the Conference collections all in hand and the expenses of the improvements made on the auditorium of our Washington Street Church at Petersburg, Va., last year provided for. As we stated last week, we have no disposition to cast stones at Dr. Wilkinson for connecting himself with another denomination. When a preacher finds himself out of harmony with the doctrines and polity of his Church, it is far better for him to unite with another ecclesiastical organization than to hang on to the one that he is in and sow the seeds of disloyalty in the charges that he serves. The former course is far the more high-minded and honorable.

MERIDIAN DISTRICT NOTES.

Dr. A. F. Watkins, addressed a large audience at the Princess Theater in Meridian on Sunday afternoon, March 5.

Brother J. B. Watts, a steward of Central Methodist Church, died at his home in Meridian on Thursday, March 8. The burial service was conducted the following day by his pastor, Rev. H. B. Watkins, assisted by Rev. J. T. Leggett, presiding elder.

Mrs. Annie DuBose Gray, sister of Dr. H. M. DuBose, and mother of Dr. W. P. Gray, a faithful steward of our Church at Wayneshoro, was operated on at the Rush Infirmary, in Meridian, on Tuesday, March 7. While her condition was precarious, the operation seems to have been successful and restoration to health is confidently expected by her surgeon, Dr. J. H. Rush.

Hon. Roland Heidelberg was recently elected Circuit Judge of the Tenth Judicial District over five formidable opponents. Judge Heidelberg is a most promising young man. He is a graduate of Millsaps College, is only thirty years old, is a steward of the Methodist Church at Shubuta, and a man who promises to reflect credit on these institutions. His father, Hon. D. W. Heidelberg, is a member of the Conference Joint Board of Finance.

Rev. O. S. Lewis is organizing the forces of the Church at Shubuta for the best year in its history thus far. Rev. D. E. Kelly is to assist him in a revival meeting, which will begin the first of June. The Sunday school is growing. Prof. D. P. Brooks is the wide awake teacher of the "Wesley Workers' Class," in which there are enrolled 43 splendid young men.

Rev. H. A. Gatlin, pastor of Fifth Street, Meridian, will close his tenure of four years this fall. This bids fair to be the best of the four. His church has been remodeled at a cost of nearly $400, which makes it a "New Fifth Street." The Sunday school, under the capable leadership of Mr. J. B. Holland, continues to be one of the best in the entire Church. NUNTIUS.

THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE AND MISSIONS.

Supposing that the Annual Conference Minutes are approximately accurate, this is what the Methodists of Louisiana did for the cause of missions last year. Baton Rouge District paid 24 per cent of its assessment for Home Missions and 25 per cent for Foreign Missions; Monroe District paid 22 per cent and 38 per cent; Alexandria District paid 33 per cent and 39 per cent; Lafayette District paid 36 per cent and 47 per cent; Ruston District paid 44 per cent and 41 per cent; Shreveport District paid 57 per cent and 66 per cent; and New Orleans leads with 72 per cent for Home Missions and 70 per cent for Foreign Missions. The Conference as a whole paid 43 per cent of its Home Mission and 47 per cent of its Foreign Mission assessment. Does this indicate the measure of our ability, our willingness, or our activities? Is it because we could not, would not, or just did not? I am not the judge. Suppose you guess? Does any possible guess suit you? What shall we do about it?

Here are some things that we can do, and I am persuaded that the doing of them would bring results:

1. A wide and thorough dissemination of the splendid literature furnished by the Board of Missions. Folders and leaflets may be put into the hands of all our people free of cost by simply writing to Dr. E. H. Rawlings, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

2. A series of missionary institutes, lectures, mass meetings.

3. The presiding elder can stir up the preacher in charge and the preacher in charge can inspire and encourage the lay leader. These three working together can bring up the assessments in full.

4. The Conference Secretary can work more, pray more, and easily do better.

Mrs. FLOYD HUBBARD died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. L. Pratt, at Pope, Miss., on Feb. 15, 1916, in her seventy-first year. Just at dawn the angel came and carried home the spirit of our mother. No truer, nobler, sweeter Christian mother ever lived. Could we have shaken off the bonds of the flesh, we are sure that we might have heard the words: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." The funeral services were conducted by the Rev. Mr. Collins and the Rev. Mr. Baker. Her body was laid to rest in the Chapel Hill Cemetery. HER DAUGHTER.

Mrs. ALPALONIA McINNIS BLUME was born on Oct. 19, 1856, and died on Feb. 24, 1916. Sister Blume was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1877, being received into it by Rev. Philip Allen. Since her conversion she had been a faithful Christian, always setting her children a good example in the home. Her life was quiet. Left a widow a number of years ago, she had the whole responsibility of battling to rear seven girls. So trustful was she of the Savior, that she might have said, "My faith looks up to thee." Sister Blume suffered with cancer for over six months and those who waited on her said that she never uttered one word of complaint during the whole time. This was characteristic of the simple, childlike faith that was always apparent in her life. She felt that Jesus doeth all things well. She leaves six daughters, two brothers, two sisters, and a host of friends to mourn her departure. Her remains were laid to rest in the Old Castor Cemetery to await the resurrection. May the blessings of God rest upon her loved ones, and may they prepare to meet her in heaven!

J. F. DRING.

WILLIAM AUGUSTUS CHEEK, youngest son of R. T. and Mary E. Cheek, was born in Madison County, Miss., on Sept. 15, 1874, and died at his home in Pelican, La., on Jan. 17, 1916, being four months and two days past forty-one years of age. He received his literary education at Millsaps College, Jackson, Miss., and later graduated from the Medical Department of Tulane University, New Orleans.

In the spring of 1905 he located in Pelican, La., where he practiced his profession until March, 1909, when he went to New York for a post-graduate course at the New York Polyclinic Medical School and Hospital. While there he contracted tuberculosis and was never in active practice any more.

Dr. Cheek united with the M. E. Church, South, in the summer of 1907. When the writer became presiding elder of the Shreveport District, he found Dr. Cheek superintending the Methodist Sunday school in Pelican, but he was so weakened by the dread disease that he soon had to retire from active service. I shall not forget the day he offered his resignation. Though weak in body, yet he attended the quarterly conference and in an almost inaudible voice made a talk that thrilled our souls, and uttered a prayer that bore us near the throne.

From that day until the Doctor passed away the writer never failed to call on him when in Pelican, and always found him full of love for the great work he had been forced to lay down, but with a beautiful spirit of faith and resignation placidly waiting the final call.

On Dec. 28, 1909, the Doctor was united in holy wedlock to Miss Lillie Maize Powell. To this union God gave a little son, Alston, who is now 4 years old. Both wife and son survive. That the riches of our Savior's grace may abide with the bereaved wife, and that the Holy Spirit may so lead the little son that he shall come into the same type of noble Christian manhood that was demonstrated in his father's life, is the prayer of his friend,

WM. H. COLEMAN.

On February 8, at Bethesda Hospital, Cincinatti, Ohio, our beloved friend, Mrs. WM. DITTMAN, went to her home in heaven, where shadows never come and where all is love and light. With mingled emotions of sorrow and sympathy the Ladies' Aid and Foreign Missionary Societies offer in love this tribute to her memory.

She was a woman of strong character and high purpose, and hers was a life of wonderful usefulness. During a long illness, no murmur was ever heard; no mention of death was uttered. But, "Oh, how sweet to go to sleep and wake in heaven!" And truly

"There is no death! the stars go down
To rise upon some fairer shore,
And bright in heaven's jeweled crown
They shine forevermore.

And ever near us, though unseen,
The dear immortal spirits tread;
For all the boundless universe
Is life—there are no dead."

The going away of this friend and co-worker is peculiarly sad to the members of our societies and we know our loss is great; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we extend to the bereaved family our deepest sympathy, reminding them that He who so tenderly led their loved one all the way will be with them even in this dark hour.

2. That a copy of these resolutions be placed in the records of our societies, that a copy be sent to the sorrowing loved ones, and that a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed: Mrs. Linnie P. Wilburn, Mrs. W. M. Langley, Mrs. C. V. Maxwell, Committee.

Meat Cause of Kidney Trouble

Take Salts to flush Kidneys if Back hurts or Bladder bothers.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.—Adv.

Stop! Calomel is Quick-Silver

It's Mercury! Attacks the bones, salivates and makes you sick.

There's no reason why a person should take sickening, salivating calomel when 50 cents buys a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone—a perfect substitute for calomel.

It is a pleasant, vegetable liquid which will start your liver just as surely as calomel, but it doesn't make you sick and can not salivate.

Children and grown folks can take Dodson's Liver Tone, because it is perfectly harmless.

Calomel is a dangerous drug. It is mercury and attacks your bones. Take a dose of nasty calomel to-day and you will feel weak, sick and nauseated to-morrow. Don't lose a day's work. Take a spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone instead and you will wake up feeling great. No more biliousness, constipation, sluggishness, headache, coated tongue or sour stomach. Your druggist says if you don't find Dodson's Liver Tone acts better than horrible calomel your money is waiting for you.—Adv.

WHEN WRITING OUR ADVERSISERS PLEASE MENTION THIS PUBLICATION

LOUISIANA AVENUE, NEW ORLEANS.

Dear Dr. Meek: It has been a long time since a report from the Louisiana Avenue Church of New Orleans has appeared in the Advocate. May I place the works of this congregation before your readers in a few paragraphs?

On December 17, 1915, I preached my opening sermon to this congregation, and a few days later met for the first time my new official board. I found that I had a group of men and women who were willing to allow the pastor to lead. His leadership was not treated with disdain, but he found that his people were ready to work under his direction. When a man feels that his congregation is depending upon him, it inspires him to move along lines that make for the greatest results.

In the fourteen months since that first sermon, there have been some results. A handsome eight-room parsonage with nearly $200 worth of new furniture is at the service of the pastor and his successors. A Sunday school with 75 per cent increase in enrollment and 100 per cent increase in average attendance bears testimony to the faithfulness of Mr. E. H. Prescott and Mr. Maurice Petty, the superintendents, aided by 18 competent teachers and other faithful officers. The every-member canvass for church and missionary support resulted in 100 per cent increase in pledges, and the present cash income is satisfactory to the highest degree. The Sunday morning congregations are large, and there has been no falling off in the night attendance. The women of the congregation are active in the Missionary Society, and an Aid Society that is subsiderary to the Missionary Society is doing fine work.

The growth of this congregation in membership (we have taken 92 into the Church), and in the Sunday school, and in finances is not due to any sensational tactics. For the most part, the songs have been the old-fashioned kind. We have put on no contests. Once, and once only, we gave our night congregation the benefit of some most beautiful sacred records played on a diamond disc phonograph. An afternoon daily paper made a striking story of the affair and the free advertising gave us a congregation at night just 20 larger than our morning congregation, but the people were well pleased with the feature.

I would like to add one thing more about the Louisiana Avenue Church. We have a following of young people here equal to any church we have ever attended. Our teachers, officers, and leaders are, for the most part, beardless boys and pink-cheeked girls. We have some members whose years count up, but we have not an old spirit that is now active in our church. Mrs. Martha Jay has been a regular attendant here for 46 years, and W. B. Thomson dates back to the early 70s, but both of them are still young, and their watchword is "Forward."

A. J. GEARHEARD, Pastor.

MEETING OF BOARD OF MISSIONS.

The Board of Missions will hold its annual session in Nashville, beginning Tuesday, May 2, at 9:30 a. m. This date is in accordance with the action of the Commission of Representatives of Boards held last year, and the place of meeting was fixed by the Executive Committee in recent session. A full meeting is greatly desirable and it is hoped that the business of the Board may be concluded as promptly as its extent and importance will allow.

According to the action of the Committee, members will be designated to be present and represent the Board on the occasion of the dedication of the new Church Extension building in Louisville. These, as well as the Bishops and others who may be members of the Board of Church Extension, should be able to reach Louisville in ample time for the business of that Board. Very respectfully,

W. W. PINSON.

A NERVOUS BREAKDOWN,

no matter how trivial it appears, may be the beginning of the end of you. The heart and nerves are so closely connected that nothing can affect the nerves without affecting the heart. A shattered nervous system means a weak heart. If you are troubled with palpitation, short breathing, weak and irregular pulse, sleeplessness, swollen ankles, pains on either side of the chest, or the many other symptoms of a nervous breakdown, take "Renovine," the best of nerve tonic, and build up your nervous system. TRIED VARIOUS KIDNEY REMEDIES BUT ONLY ONE PROVED RELIABLE.

It is with great pleasure that I write these lines of praise for your wonderful kidney and bladder remedy. I had kidney trouble so bad I became very much alarmed. I had tried various kidney remedies I heard of but without relief. I was about discouraged of ever being helped, when, one day I picked up a book containing testimonials of people who had been helped and cured of their kidney trouble by the use of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, so I decided to try it and I know I owe my present good health to the wonderful curative power of Swamp-Root. I sincerely hope my words will be the means of restoring many other sufferers of kidney and bladder troubles to good health. Very truly yours,

B. J. FENSTERMAKER,
1491 Roycroft Ave., Lakewood, Ohio.

Personally appeared before me this 18th day of October, 1915, B. J. Fenstermaker, who subscribed the above statement and made oath that the same is true in substance and in fact.

Send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample size bottle. It will convince anyone. You will also receive a booklet of valuable information, telling about the kidneys and bladder. When writing, be sure and mention the New Orleans Christian Advocate. THE GREATEST REMEDY.

We say that "RENWAR" is the greatest remedy because we have so many letters from those who have used it testifying to this statement. In cases of Rheumatism and other blood disorders it has worked wonders where ordinary drugs have failed. We do not ask you to take our word for this. ENRICH THE BLOOD

Hood's Sarsaparilla, a Spring Tonic-Medicine, is Necessary.

Everybody is troubled at this season with loss of vitality, failure of appetite, that tired feeling, or with bilious turns, dull headaches, indigestion and other stomach troubles, or with pimples and other eruptions on the face and body. The reason is that the blood is impure and impoverished.

Hood's Sarsaparilla relieves all these ailments. It is the old reliable medicine that has stood the test of forty years,—that makes pure, rich, red blood—that strengthens every organ and builds up the whole system. It is the all-the-year-round blood-purifier and health-giver. It embodies the careful training, experience, and skill of Mr. Hood, a pharmacist for fifty years, in its quality and power to cure.

Ask your druggist for it today.

I used to think of the missionary going and taking the Spirit with him where he went. Now I think of the Spirit as being already there and inviting the missionary to come and join him in his work.—Griffith John.

The miracle is not a breaking through of the laws of nature on the part of God, but an activity on the part of God without the interposition of these laws of nature.—Rothe.

TAKES OFF DANDRUFF, HAIR STOPS FALLING

Save your Hair! Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine right now—Also stops itching scalp.

Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—now—any time—will surely save your hair.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store. You surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine. Save your hair! Try it!

EXPERIENCE IS THE BEST TEACHER OF ALL.

"The proof of the pudding is in the eating." One is far more apt to believe a man who tells what he has done, than a man who tells what he could do. So it is with medicine. The real proof of the merits of Dr. Miles' Restorative Remedies lies in the fact that they have been used beneficially for over a quarter of a century and thousands have actually testified to benefits they have received.

We know that Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills will relieve all aches and pains because thousands have found this to be proven by actual experience.

The Rev. W. D. Barger, of Hagerstown, Md., has stated:

"Voluntarily and unsolicited I wish to bear witness to the high character of Dr. Miles' Restorative Remedies. To me personally they have been a great blessing, especially the Nervine, the Anti-Pain Pills and the Liver Pills. In case of headache or pain of any kind they act like a charm. I have given many of them to the suffering and the results have always proven gratifying."

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills have no unpleasant after-effect. They are not constipating. They do not contain any of the dangerous habit-forming drugs. We do not claim that they remove the cause of the pain, but we do claim that they bring quick relief in a harmless manner.

They are sold by all druggists at 25c a box, containing 25 doses. If not satisfactory your money will be cheerfully refunded.

LETTERS FROM RHEUMATICS.

Possibly you have imagined that you could never get your own consent to write a testimonial letter, but if you have ever experienced the excruciating pains of Rheumatism you can at least appreciate the feelings of those who have been relieved of this terrible disease by drinking the Mineral Water from the justly celebrated Shivar Spring at Shelton, S. C. This water overcomes many diseases, including Indigestion, Gout, Uric Acid Poisoning, and Liver and Kidney diseases, but no patrons of the Spring are more enthusiastic in their praise of the water than those who have been relieved of their Rheumatism. Hundreds of letters like the following have been received by the Management:

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder troubles and in Nervous and Sick headaches and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe if used continuously for a reasonable time will produce a permanent cure. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver and Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant of Savannah writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living when I began using Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time I was cured."

Mr. Rhodes of Virginia writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were cured of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam of South Carolina writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water was entirely cured of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter of Virginia writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints on her hands, caused by Rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

If you suffer from Rheumatism or any chronic disease, accept the guarantee offered below by signing your name. Clip and mail to the NORTH MISSISSIPPI WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

The fourth annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference was held in Clarksdale, Feb. 23-27, closing up quite the best year's work in its history. Our hearts were saddened by the fact that illness prevented the presence of our Conference President, Mrs. Vic Thompson Hoyle, who has labored so efficiently for quite a while from a sick bed for the advancement of the work; but every effort was made by her co-labarers, Mrs. Conger and Miss Dunstan, to carry out the plans formed by her.

Our executive session was held during the morning of the 23d, in which was discussed the things necessary to bring before the conference body for the advancement of the work. A school of methods was conducted in the afternoon by Miss Dunstan, who solved for the delegates many knotty problems. Institutes were held during the week on Mission Study and Publicity, Young People's Work, and Social Service (each institute being conducted by the conference officer who has charge of that particular branch of the work), which were most beneficial.

The report of the Conference Secretary showed an increase of 86 new auxiliaries since the last annual meeting, the result of concerted action on the part of the conference officers and district secretaries, which closed in January, 1916. Mrs. J. H. Haughton, of the Aberdeen District, came out first, with Miss Willingham, of the Durant District, a close second—each had twenty new organizations to her credit, but Mrs. Haughton made her number before the time limit expired, and Miss Willingham effected some of hers after that time. No more faithful band of workers could be found than the eight district secretaries of the North Mississippi Conference. I must mention especially the silver-haired Secretary of the Winona District. Although she has passed the three-score mark, her work was as quick and carried on with as much vim as that of her younger associates, and in point of collections from new organizations hers was the banner district, and truly was hers a work of love, since she met her own expenses in the work. So we feel that to Mrs. A. M. Pond, of the Winona District, we owe a debt of gratitude.

The Treasurer's report showed that an increase of $1700 was sent to the General Treasurer over any other year. There are more mission study classes than ever before, and the children and young people's work has made good progress.

Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb, of Nashville, Tenn., was in attendance at all the meetings and helped with her wise counsel. Mrs. Lipscomb stated on the Conference floor that in point of advancement North Mississippi now stands second in the forty conferences of Southern Methodism, North Georgia standing first in every point. Mrs. Lipscomb also gave us much inspiration in her address on Wednesday evening on "What We Are Doing," and again on Sunday evening on "The Present Opportunity." Miss Ellasue Wagoner, a returned missionary from Songdo, Korea, was especially helpful in her devotional exercises. She made us feel there is a blessing in denying oneself and giving ourselves for the service of others, while her address on Korea held her hearers spellbound from start to finish.

Miss Daniel, conference deaconess, in telling of her work in the Co-operative Home at Corinth, showed us a new field for service for all of us. This home is making its influence felt and untold good is resulting for the working girls of that city. The presence of our two conference mothers, Mesdames Thames and Evans, gave us much joy.

Rev. T. W. Lewis preached a magnificent sermon on Sunday and Rev. R. O. Brown administered the Holy Sacrament. There were eight of our own ministers in attendance during some time of the session, and the presence of the Baptist minister, Rev. Martin Ball, and the constant attendance of his charming wife, herself a prominent worker in the woman's work of her Church, was very much appreciated.

Clarksdale's hospitality cannot be excelled, and it was a joy to be with these good people, who will long be remembered by us for the many kindnesses shown us while in their homes. There were two clouds to darken our joy: the illness of our President, and second Vice President, and many earnest prayers were sent up in their behalf.

The deepest sorrow was caused by the continued illness of our President, for which cause it was thought wiser to give her complete rest for the year, which necessitated the election of a new president and a new first vice president. Owing to pressure of home cares, there were two other officers who asked to be retired from the list, which required a new superintendent of mission study and publicity, and a new secretary for the Columbus District. The list of officers for the ensuing year are: President, Mrs. J. W. Conger, Vaiden; First Vice President, Mrs. T. B. Baker, Aberdeen; Second Vice President, Mrs. T. W. Woodward, Starkville; Corresponding Secretary, Miss Louise Dunstan, Winona; Treasurer, Mrs. W. W. Wilburn, Lexington; Superintendent of Publicity and Mission Study, Mrs. S. F. Riley, Corinth; Superintendent of Social Service, Mrs. G. M. Shaw, Robinsonville; Superintendent of Supplies, Mrs. Susie Thomas, Starkville; Recording Secretary, Miss Lillie Hartwell, Water Valley.

District Secretaries: Aberdeen District, Mrs. J. H. Haughton, Prairie; Corinth District, Miss Corinne Rogers, New Albany; Columbus District, ——; Durant District, Miss Elie Willingham, Eupora; Greenville District, Mrs. E. T. Clark, Cleveland; Sardis District, Mrs. D. D. High, Hernando; Winona District, Mrs. A. M. Pond, Moorhead; Holly Springs District, Miss Lizzie Horn, Grenada.

MRS WALTER CAMPBELL.

WESLEY HOUSE PLEDGES.

At the recent annual meeting, held in Vicksburg, the finance committee recommended that $300 be raised during the year for the two Wesley Houses in the Conference, $200 of which is to go to Biloxi Wesley House, and $100 to the Meridian House. These recommendations were enthusiastically passed. Now, let us see that they are as enthusiastically carried out. Last year $100 was asked for each Wesley House and Meridian did not receive one cent of the amount promised, and but $73.45 was paid to Biloxi. My sisters, this should not have occurred. Are not our hearts large enough for both of these works? Would you give all to one of your children and nothing to the other? No mother would be guilty of such an injustice. Both of these Wesley Houses are ours; so let us be as liberal with one as with the other. It was agreed that this $300 fund should be known as the "Wesley House Special," and when sent to the Conference Treasurer to be pro rated between the two places, Biloxi receiving two-thirds and Meridian one-third.

As Meridian received nothing at all last year, it was felt that the only just compensation would be to ask for a large offering this first quarter and reverse the pro rata for this one time, letting Meridian have the two-thirds. Give, as we have said before, until it hurts, for then only is it real giving. This special is over and above the pledge; so do not get the two mixed. Remember, the Master is watching you to see if you are going to be true to him in this matter; so whether the gift is large or small, if it is the best you can do, send it. Let every woman in the conference make some offering for this special before the close of the quarter. The time is short, so do not delay.

WHY WOMEN WRITE LETTERS

To Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co.

Women who are well often ask "Are the letters which the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. are continually publishing, genuine?" "Are they truthful?" "Why do women write such letters?"

In answer we say that never have we published a fictitious letter or name. Never, knowingly, have we published an untruthful letter, or one without the full and written consent of the woman who wrote it.

The reason that thousands of women from all parts of the country write such grateful letters to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. is that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has brought health and happiness into their lives, once burdened with pain and suffering.

It has relieved women from some of the worst forms of female ills, from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, irregularities, nervousness, weakness, stomach troubles and from the blues.

It is impossible for any woman who is well and who has never suffered to realize how these poor, suffering women feel when restored to health; their keen desire to help other women who are suffering as they did.

Lime Combats Tuberculosis

"It is difficult to escape the conviction that lime starvation and lime assimilation are the real issues behind the masks of vulnerability and resistance in tuberculosis," wrote the late Ira Van Geison, M. D., in the N. Y., Medical Record, May 11, 1912.

Ordinarily, lime is not easily assimilated, but Eckman's Alterative contains it in such form and combination as to insure assimilation by the average person. This explains its success in many cases of tuberculosis which apparently have yielded to it.

Containing no opiates, narcotics or habit-forming drugs, it is safe to try. Price $1 and $2 per bottle. Sold by leading druggists or sent direct from the Laboratory. We would like to send you a booklet containing information of value and references.

From the Field

Kilmichael, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: We have just closed a good meeting at Stuart. Brother J. H. Bell, one of our North Mississippi Conference evangelists, was with us and did us good service. Our people fell very much in love with him, and the interest of the meeting increased to the last service, which was about the best of all. The people came to Church, though the ground was covered with snow. While we did not realize what we had hoped for in the way of an increase in membership, the meeting was a success in deepening the spiritual life of the membership of the Church and in stirring them to a more active service for the Master. Brother Bell is a good man to hold a meeting. He preaches well and to the point, and works well with the pastor. No preacher need fear to employ him to hold his meeting for him, for he is a safe man who is calculated to do much good, and he should be kept busy, for the Church needs him.—J. J. Garner, Pastor.

Clarksdale, Miss.

Dear Advocate: I have been at my post in Clarksdale since Dec. 15, and have made no report to our paper; so here goes. Clarksdale has been so kind to the new pastor that I hardly know how to tell it. Suffice it to say, they have treated us as Clarksdale always treat her preachers—with generosity and kindness. We have a big-hearted, generous people, and many who love the Church and are loyal to it. Our greatest need is a new church building, with adequate facilities for doing the work that is needing to be done. I believe the sentiment in favor of constructing such an edifice is growing, and you need not be surprised to hear that we have begun to build a $35,000 or $40,000 church this year. I am pleased with the outlook. The plans were drawn over a year ago, under Brother Lagrone's administration, but the war came on, and the project was laid aside for the time being. Clarksdale is a progressive town, and we need the church, and must have it.

We were greatly blessed in having the "Fourth Annual Conference of the Woman's Misionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference" with us recently. The presence of these godly women was a delight and an inspiration to our Church and community. The influence of the Conference will be felt for a long time.

The Advocate is enjoyed and heartily endorsed by our people. We are in a campaign now for those fifteen new subscribers and the thirty-five renewals. You will hear from us in regard to this soon.—R. O. Brown, P. C.

Gunnison, Miss.

Dear Mr. Editor: I think a word from Gunnison might be of interest to your readers. When we came here in December we received a cordial welcome. Many good things were put in the parsonage as tokens of kindness. And they have kept coming all along. And as the best expression of our appreciation of this kind treatment, I have been hustling. I have visited all our resident members and many who are not members. And the result is, the congregations are good and growing. I have met all appointments. The interest is increasing. Brother Spragins was with us and held the first quarterly conference on Feb. 26-27. The special collections for Grenada College and the Methodist Hospital at Memphis were very gratifying. Good progress has also been made in securing the collections for the benevolent claims. The two churches represented raised the pastor's salary $100. And we hope and expect the other church to increase the raise. We have two good Sunday schools, one union prayer meeting, and one Woman's Missionary Society, composed of a band of royal, loyal, consecrated Christian women who have the interests of the Church on their hearts. They also delight in giving encouragement and help to the preacher. We can not expect a great ingathering of members, for most of the people here belong to the Church; but, with these favoring conditions, we are hoping and working and praying for a great spiritual upbuilding and a general advancement all along the line in the life and work of the Church.—R. W. Evans, P. C.

Moorhead, Miss.

Dear Doctor Meek: At the last meeting of the North Mississippi Conference, Moorhead was raised from a circuit to a station, with a membership of 51. Rev. Robt. H. Ruff was returned as our pastor, and under his able leadership the church work has gone forward with an enthusiasm never known here before. Our regular church attendance is almost double what it had ever been. Our prayer meeting averages an attendance in excess of our church membership, and our Sunday school, with an enrollment of 156, has had an attendance of 157 for the past two Sundays, and averages about 150. The Sunday school has also taken up the support of a native worker in China and one day in each month is observed as "China Day." Two Epworth Leagues have been organized with a membership aggregating 100. We have conducted an every-member canvass for our church finances, which we have placed upon a monthly basis. A religious census has also been taken, using the "card index" system to tabulate the church status of every white person in town. Some substantial improvements in buildings and equipment have also been made, including a number of new pews, church hymnals, a sign, and repairs on the parsonage.

We have just closed a ten days' revival, with Rev. W. B. Hogg of Laurel doing the preaching, and Rev. Jas. S. Duke as singer. The meeting proved a success in every particular, and it seemed to grip the town as no other meeting has ever done. All the denominations joined in the services and the results are most gratifying. Our membership was about doubled, and 17 members went to the Baptist Church. Brother Hogg is a preacher of unusual gifts and power, and we consider ourselves most fortunate to have had him with us.—U. S. Wasson.

Ladies! Darken Your Gray Hair

Use Grandma's Sage Tea and Sulphur Recipe and Nobody will Know.

The use of Sage and Sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's time. She used it to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy and abundant. Whenever her hair fell out or took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is mussy and out-of-date. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," you will get this famous old recipe which can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair and is splendid for dandruff, dry, feverish, itchy scalp and falling hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, it becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and abundant.—Adv.

SEASHORE DISTRICT NOTES.

By Elmer C. Gunn.

Our new Presiding Elder, Rev. Jno. R. Jones, is this week finishing his first round, and reports that indications point toward a good year for the district. The contract for rebuilding the district parsonage was let two weeks ago and work will begin on it in the near future. Several hundred dollars must yet be raised before this work can all be done, and the third Sunday in March has been suggested as "District Parsonage Day." Notification has been sent out to all the pastors and it is hoped that practically all the money needed will be provided for that day. Brother Jones has been living in a rented house since Conference.

An educational campaign for the district will begin Sunday, March 5, at Logtown. Brother Neill will visit every charge in the district during the month of March, and with him will be one of the district preachers at every point. It is expected that these institutional services will do much good toward creating a greater interest, not only in the Sunday school work, but in all the benevolences as well.

Here and there in the district there are special evidences that the Holy Ghost is working. At Wiggins, Brother Sells has just closed a great meeting, Brother P. H. Howse doing the preaching. Main Street, Biloxi, has been wonderfully revived, we are told, by a month's revival work. Brothers Kelly and Kirby assisted the pastor, Dr. Tolle. There were 90 additions to the Church.

Brother Jones reports that all the new men are taking hold with a will. At Gulfport, Dr. LaPrade has made a fine beginning. Just now Gulfport is the great opportunity of the Gulf Coast.

At Bay St. Louis, Brother Meigs is fighting like the British on Gallipoli. Unlike the British, however, he has no intention of retreating.

Brother Alsworth has been hindered somewhat by sickness, but is getting started O. K. now.

Brother Claude Jones is at the "hub" of the district. It remains to be seen whether or not he will have spokes and felloes enough to construct a wheel.

Brother Gus Harmon has captured the citadel of Poplarville.

From Columbia we hear good news of Dr. Huntley. Indeed, he admits himself that he is getting along famously.

Brother Alford has received a new member since Conference, and she comes to him as absolutely new in every sense of the word. The smile on the countenance of Saucier's pastor is pleasant to behold.

We have our problems in the Seashore District, but we also have our faith. As to the size of our presiding elder, we cannot claim that he has much in the way of stature. We know that his task is big, his heart is big and his faith is big, and we are willing to follow where he leads, believing that we are following him as he is following Christ.

KOSSUTH CHARGE.

Dear Dr. Meek: Our efficient and much beloved presiding elder, Rev. T. H. Dorsey, came on Friday, March 3, and held in his usual admirable manner the first quarterly conference, on the Kossuth charge, for 1916. We are glad to say that nearly all of the officials were present, with their work well in hand. We have an excellent board of stewards. They are consecrated men who love the Church and who stand by their pastor. God bless every one of them! Our presiding elder kindly consented to remain over and preach for us both in the morning and in the evening, which he did to the satisfaction of all our people. His coming was a benediction to the people of the Kossuth charge. We feel that the outlook is good for a great year at Kossuth. Pray for us.—D. R. McDougal, P. C.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

(Adopted by the Quarterly Conference of the Fernwood Charge upon the death of Mr. J. S. Scutt.)

Whereas, in the providence of God, Brother J. S. SCUTT has been called to his final reward; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That in the death of Brother J. S. Scutt, our Church has lost a faithful and consistent member, an efficient and active official, and the community a worthy citizen.

2. That this quarterly conference deeply sympathizes with the bereaved family and that we will always remember with pleasure the fact that they have lived in our midst.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be spread on our minutes, a copy sent to the bereaved family, and a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed: W. H. Saunders, P. H. Enochs, T. E. Enochs, W. C. Blount, Z. Z. Linton.

CONCERNING THE CONFERENCE MINUTES.

Dear Dr. Meek: Brother John F. Foster's explanation of the cause of delay in the publication of the Louisiana Conference Minutes is both timely and illuminating. That the Conference Minutes are almost a necessity is generally believed, and their value is almost in proportion to the promptness with which the members of the Conference get them. This being true, I am sure that those responsible for the delay will be careful in the future to avoid its recurrence.

The late Bishop Tigert was once Secretary of the Louisville Annual Conference and ex-officio Editor of the Minutes. At the close of each particular session the minutes for the session were read and approved, and at adjournment, before the next session, copy for that session was forwarded to the printer, and within ten days after adjournment of the final session, the printed minutes were out.

OUR RICH HERITAGE.

In the words, "I the heir of all the ages, in the foremost files of times," Mr. Tennyson may remind us of our rich heritage, and of our debt to the past. The most kingly figure is not always that of the conqueror, who crushes the banded kings and divides the land among the tribes. Our fancies, at times, gather around the solitary figure of a grand old man, who appears high up among the hoary mists and glorified vapors of the mountain tops. He is looking upon the goodly expanse of the land of promise—its verdant hills, and its fruitful valleys—which he shall never enter, but to the margin of which he has unfailingly led the children of God. Such was Moses. And such was Francis Asbury, the pioneer Methodist Bishop. He led the Methodists of America to the border of a rich land of promise, and they have entered into the fruits of his labors. And, after the passing of a hundred years, it is well that we remember our debt of gratitude to that sturdy soldier of the cross in a new world, and to those who wrought with him.

The readers of this Advocate will doubtless remember that in the issue of February 17 there was a letter "To the Methodists of America—Spiritual Children of Francis Asbury," concerning the celebration of the centenary year of the Pioneer Bishop's death. It was written by representatives of various branches of American Methodism, composing the Executive Committee of the Francis Asbury Memorial Association. These representatives ask that this year, 1916, the Asbury memorial year, be fittingly observed by every Methodist Annual Conference, and by every local church in America.

The Committee names several ways by which the year may be profitably observed by Conferences and churches. But the suggestions which should concern us most at this time are as follows: "On the Sunday nearest the date of the anniversary of his death, March 26, or Sunday, April 2, 1916, a sermon from every Methodist pulpit, designed to call to the minds of the prosperous Methodists of to-day how great was the investment of endeavor and devotion, privation and sacrifice made by the preachers and members of the first half-century of American Methodism."

"A wide circulation of literature relating to the men and events of that period, that the appreciation and gratitude of Methodists of the Twentieth Century may be evoked for the fathers of the Eighteenth Century."

The time recommended is at hand, and it would be well for us to follow the plan outlined by the Committee, and acquaint our people with the early days of our Methodism in America, and with the mighty spirits who wrought so well in that formative period, and left to us a rich spiritual heritage. The Israelites never forgot the righteous men of other days. So have other races been wont to appeal to a glorious past, and to the great men and great deeds of their history. And we Methodists should draw inspiration from the life of Mr. Asbury, and from the lives of the faithful men who labored with him in those early days. Our people have too little knowledge of the history of their Church, and of the great men who helped to build it. And sermons, addresses and literature concerning the first half-century of American Methodism should supply a great want, stir our people with gratitude and zeal, and set before them sturdy examples of Christian character and consecrated labor.

Francis Asbury was born in Staffordshire, England, August 20, 1745. He came of humble folk, but "here and there a cotter's babe is royal born by right divine." Francis was born to godly parents, and they reared him in the fear of God. He was converted at fifteen, and immediately he began to preach to his companions. At seventeen he became a local preacher, and at twenty-one an itinerant in the regular work.

Responding to Mr. Wesley's call for volunteers, he came to America in 1771. When the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized at the Christmas Conference held in Baltimore, in December, 1784, Francis Asbury was elected a Bishop. For thirty-one years, he gave full proof of his ministry, as a chief pastor, and as an organizer of the rising Church. He may be truly called the pioneer Methodist Bishop in America. During his abundant labors in a new country, he preached 16,500 sermons, sat in 224 Annual Conferences, and ordained 4000 preachers. A biographer says of him, "He visited Massachusetts twenty-three times after 1891;.....the State of New York fifty-six times, New Jersey sixty-two times, Pennsylvania seventy-eight times, Delaware thirty-three times, Maryland eighty times, North Carolina sixty-three times, South Carolina forty-six times, Virginia eighty-four times, Tennessee and Georgia each twenty times, and other States or territories with corresponding frequency. When he came to America the Methodists numbered ten preachers and 600 members; when he died, after forty-five years of work, they had 695 preachers and 211,235 members. It is estimated that during his lifetime he traveled 270,000 miles, or more than ten times the circumference of the globe, and mostly on horseback." During the course of his eventful career as an itinerant, he braved many of the hardships of a new world, often had miserable accommodations and poor food, crossed swollen streams, and at times passed through sections infested by hostile Indians. Thus it will be seen that he was the very genius of Methodism, because he was such a pre-eminent itinerant.

It is said that Mr. Asbury never learned the art of resting. Much of the time he suffered from disease and pain, but he was faithful, and burning with zeal, through all the years.

Soul-saving was his master passion, and a few days before his death he insisted on preaching.

Mr. Asbury died at the house of an old friend, George Arnold, of Spotsylvania, Va., on the Lord's Day, March 31, 1816. "He was buried in the family burying-ground of his friend, George Arnold, only a short distance from the cottage in which he expired. A month or so later the body was removed to Baltimore, and placed under the pulpit of the Eulaw Street Church. "In 1854 the remains were again disinterred and buried in Mount Olivet Cemetery, Baltimore, where are the graves of Robert Strawbridge and Jesse Lee, as also those of not a few others of Methodism's unforgotten dead."

Such are a few, meager facts in the life of that pioneer Methodist Bishop, Francis Asbury, who left such an abiding impress upon those people who bear the name which he helped to lift from obloquy. And in his life, and in the lives of those who labored with him in those early years, we find a rich heritage from which we may bring forth treasures new and old, which will purchase for us instruction and inspiration for our needs and problems to-day, and bright examples of faithfulness to a high calling and fidelity to the Lord.

It is well that all the statues cut in marble, or cast in bronze, are not of heroes of the battlefield, and that more and more the men who wrought nobly in the days of peace are honored in our places of renown. A bronze statue of the great itinerant, Francis Asbury, should be a work of love from his spiritual children, the Methodists of America. And placed in the Capital City of the Nation, it will fittingly remind men in the years to come that this humble preacher of the gospel was also a mighty power in the formative years of our Republic.

R. H. H.

A CHARACTERISTIC OF APOSTASY.

It is characteristic of an apostatizing Church not to admit its drift away from God. The Jewish Church, for instance, was never more emphatic in its affirmations that it was faithful to Jehovah than it was at the time that Jesus came and found that it had almost entirely lost the spirit of the true religion. And when the Master spoke from the skies, through St. John, to the Church at Laodicea, his message contained the following language: "Thou sayest I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." Nothing pertaining to a backslidden state tends more to perpetuate and increase it than the self-deception by which it is so often accompanied.

It is given to many a mother to prepare the way of the Lord. Few men of great usefulness can be enumerated who were not blessed with pious, noble-minded mothers. Such were Monica, the mother of Augustine, and Susannah Wesley. The prayers they taught can never be forgotten. Their character constitutes testimony that is not to be gainsaid. The grandest opportunities of the kingdom of heaven are before the Christian mother.—The Presbyterian.

SHARE YOUR BLESSINGS.

"Dig channels for the streams of love,
Where they may broadly run;
And love has overflowing streams
To fill them every one.
But if at any time thou cease
Such channels to provide,
The very founts of love to thee
Will soon be parched and dried.
For thou must share if thou wouldst keep
That good thing from above;
Ceasing to share you cease to have;
Such is the law of love."

UNWARRANTED EXCUSES.

The Church is to-day afflicted with the spirit of self-excusing: it cannot give, because of the depression of the times; it cannot go upon its mighty errand, because of its dainty delicateness; it cannot engage in active beneficence, because its charity should begin at home; it cannot enter into ardent controversy, because it prefers the comfort of inaction. Churches should not tell lies to themselves.—Joseph Parker.

"RESPECT OF PERSONS."

There is danger that in our estimate of others we shall have what James calls "respect of persons," rather than a right estimate of character and worth. It is easier to judge by the ring and the clothing, to take the outside surface for the reality, the mask for the man, than it is to look to essential qualities and eternal destiny. James warns us against the sin of having the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons.—Unidentified.

THE BIBLE IN THE HOME.

Ralph Wheeler Keeler.

There is a growing tendency among thoughtful people to read the Bible in connection with one of the meals when the entire family is together. This, too, in homes where each individual is accustomed to read some passage prayerfully each day in the quiet of his own room. Somehow, those who enjoy this family hearing of the Word go forth to their appointed task for the day brighter and more encouraged for the problems which they are bound to meet. For throughout the hours of toil they know that the other members of the home circle have the same thought in mind and are being cheered by the same glorious message. The day goes far more easy, as a result. Is your home giving this strength to its members?

"PREPAREDNESS."

In settling differences, concerning the personal and property rights that arise between men, there are three appeals that can be made: (1) an appeal to right; (2) an appeal to expediency; (3) an appeal to force. Justice and judgment demand that no appeal be made to force until appeals both to right and to expediency have been made. Only when these have failed, may force be in order.

Looked at from the view-point of the principles which govern men in their observance of personal and property rights, as against the rights of others, there are four distinct classes of the human family, with the rest of mankind occupying gradient intervening space between the extremes.

The first class is that body of men and women who believe that "might is right" and that "the end justifies the means." This class cares no more for the rights of others than it desires the disabilities of old age. Those of this class who are citizens of the United States desire that our nation shall degenerate into an international bully, with power to plunder the other nations of earth for its selfish aggrandizement. Of course, other nations—some to a greater and, perhaps, some to a less degree—are cursed with this same brute-like breed of men.

The second class is that body of men and women who have no disposition to trample upon the rights of others, yet who will fight for their own rights upon the slightest provocation; and who, too, first flourish the Big Stick before the eyes of the supposed offender, without stopping to inquire whether or not the difference can be adjusted by an appeal to right.

The third class comprise those who not only scrupulously observe the rights of others, but who will go to the greatest extremity for peace, even though their own rights have been ruthlessly trampled upon. This class first makes the strongest possible appeal to the offending party's sense of right. If this appeal fails to get results, appeal is then made to expediency by pointing out to the offending party the inevitable consequence that must follow his refusal to make adequate reparation. If this appeal fails, then it is "shut up," or "fight." Wise men, and wise nations, however, always look to the comparative strength of the two forces that are about to be matched against each other, before appealing to force, while "fools pass on and are punished." If the party offended finds by comparison that his force is inferior to the force of the offending party, he will first look to the business of increasing his force to the point of favorable comparison with that of the offending party before inviting a combat through hasty words or deeds.

The fourth class (which are all too few in number) are those who, like our blessed Savior, recognize that earthly and material possessions are not worth quarreling and fighting over. These recognize the fact that peace can be had only upon the basis of self-abnegation. These will appeal to another's sense of right in behalf of their own possessions; but, recognizing that earthly treasures are not worth the price of human blood, they refuse to fight even when their possessions are torn from them. Yea, they will even suffer personal indignities to be heaped upon them, rather than shed human blood. And they do this, not because of the lack of courage, but because of the spirit of Jesus Christ that dominates their lives. Were it not for the Spirit of God within them, they would do just like the rest of mankind—they would fight like demons. For humanity's sake, and for that of truth and righteousness, this class will gladly die.

To one who is somewhat familiar with the past history of mankind, and who knows something of current history, it is not a difficult matter to find representatives of the first class in all the nations of earth. However, since our appeal is to Americans, and since the representatives of that first class are yet in the minority in our nation, I think it is not necessary to name an outstanding representative of that first class in the United States. As to the other three classes, however, it is the opinion of this writer that Mr. Roosevelt represents the second class, Mr. Wilson the third, and Mr. Bryan the fourth. It stands to reason that all the representatives of the first class will favor Mr. Roosevelt for the presidency of the United States, since he is the nearest representative to their class that they can likely get for President. On the other hand, it must appear to all thinking individuals of the fourth class that Mr. Wilson is the nearest representative to their ideals that they can possibly get for President.

Without thereby making a bid for the prophet's robe, I think I am safe in saying that we are going to have great preparedness for war in our nation, despite the desire of thousands, and perhaps millions, to the contrary. Side by side with the development of the military spirit that is growing apace in the United States, the justice-loving worldly man and the Christian must studiously and painstakingly work toward developing the humanitarian and the Christly spirit, or else our nation will slowly, but surely, degenerate into a people governed by the principles of that brute-like first class above described; then plunge into the maelstrom of militarism that is now stabbing to death the sons of Europe, and which has stopped the world in her upward march to universal peace.

As this writer sees the situation, the issues that are now facing the world for solution are far too grave, and are freighted with too many threatening dangers to the well-being of mankind for the Church of God to do aught else than spend her energies in the one business of spreading the principles of Christianity throughout the world and persuading men, everywhere, and in every walk of life, to trust Jesus for salvation. Too many forces are now at work looking toward the development of the spirit of militarism in our nation for the Church to join hands in such propaganda. God is looking to see which way the pendulum is going to swing in the United States, whether toward Divine humanitarianism or whether toward militarism. Shall we, as churchmen, use our opportunity, our God-given opportunity, to become a big brother to the entire world, or shall we assist our nation in developing into an international bully? If our nation is to become "the light of the world," toward which end I verily believe God is working among us, then the Church must seek closer relationship with God, through faith in Jesus Christ, by the power of the Holy Spirit. To thus seek a closer walk with God is the profession, and should be the business, of every churchman.

I am making this earnest appeal to the Church because of a four-fold fact that is apparent to the writer, after a careful survey of world history, during the past 2000 years, as seen in the light of Scripture:

1. God gave to the Hebrew nation the opportunity, through revelation and through Christ, of helping Him to redeem and save the world, but the Hebrews nationalized revelation, lost their vision of world-wide service for God and humanity, and nailed the Son of God to a Roman cross.

2. Through the early Church fathers God gave to Rome the opportunity to assist Him in the salvation and redemption of mankind, but Rome politically ecclesiasticized Christianity and, crucifying the church upon the cross of the fallacious doctrine of the infallibility of the Pope, sought world control by perverting the religious nature of man.

3. Through Luther God gave to Germany the opportunity to help Him evangelize the world, but Germany rationalized Christianity and crucified faith upon the cross of the Prussianized motto that "might is right" and that "the end justifies the means;" then attempted world dominion through scientific and military efficiency.

4. Through Wesley God gave to England the opportunity to assist Him in the redemption of mankind, but England commercialized Christianity and sought world control by appealing to man's natural desire for ease, comfort and plenty.

Many devout Christians believe that this is God's proffered day of opportunity for the United States. It seems strikingly apparent that God is calling our nation to the big business of helping Him to save a lost world. But ours is no easy calling. In this great country of ours we have to contend against the united power of all four of those enemies of God and right that, singly, consecutively, conquered the Jew, the Roman, the German and the English. Satan, through the selfishness of man, is using nationalism, political ecclesiasticism, rationalism, and commercialism to get a combined hold upon the United States so that God will not be able to use our nation to accomplish the things he would do for a lost and suffering world.

To successfully meet this powerful four-fold combination of evil forces of the wicked one, and turn the tide in favor of righteousness and Christianity, is going to require every ounce of the physical, the intellectual, and the spiritual energy of all Christians in self-sacrificing service upon the altar of God. Intercessory prayer, together with adequate and painstaking service, under the leadership of the Holy Spirit, is perhaps more demanded of the Church to-day than ever before in all her history. Both the individual member of the Church, and the Church as a whole, because of the discerning mind of mankind, is less able to-day to practice deception apd palm off professionalism for Christianity than ever before in the history of the Church. What a man actually is, over against what he professes to be, counts for greater value to-day than ever before in human experience. With these significant facts before us, it is imperative that the Church get into harmony with God's plan for America, in order that our nation may not fail in the accomplishment of the great and eternal work to which it is called by the omnipotent God.

Yes, I believe in preparedness, but it is in that preparedness of soul by which self is crucified and one is prepared, under the leadership of the Holy Spirit, "to work the works of God." I think the Church hardly needs to concern herself about the military preparedness of our nation, for the worldly-minded citizens of America will amply care for that proposition. But the Church needs to be tremendously concerned about that preparedness of soul that is necessary for service in God's vineyard, lest she suffer defeat and annihilation.

As this writer sees the situation, the Church has nothing to do with any preparedness, save that which concerns the spiritual life and that necessary for best serving mankind, under God's leadership. Right now the leaders of our Church are calling upon us to "Go Forward" in our missionary efforts for China. Since this has every mark of a call from God, I gladly urge the membership of our Conference to enthusiastically support this program with both their prayers and means.

AN APPEAL.

To Our Louisiana Methodists.

The Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, at Ruston, was established, has been maintained and is owned and operated by the Methodist Church of Louisiana. It is the property of the Louisiana Annual Conference. It is the only really charitable institution owned by the Church in this State, which is doing a purely charitable work for real objects of charity. Yet it is the only institution, or cause, of the Church that "has been put on its merits" and which is supported by the voluntary and unassessed donations of the people. In lieu of an assessment, the Conference pledged the Church to observe "Easter Sunday and Work Day as Orphanage Days, for the purpose of raising funds for the institution." The Church proposes no other means of support for her Orphanage than this. If it fails here, it fails utterly, and in so far as any particular church refuses, or fails, to observe Easter Sunday and take a collection for the Orphanage, it betrays a solemn obligation, and denies support to its own helpless, dependent orphan children. We do not believe there is a Sunday school or church in our Conference that will refuse to meet this pledge, to which it is in honor bound. So we are calling the attention of our people to it, and urging them to prepare for the proper observance of Easter Sunday and to make it the greatest day we have yet had.

Our need was never greater than it is now. It is quite true that we have paid our debt, but we must keep out of debt. Our insurance premiums are now due, and we must raise $750 for that purpose. Our treasury is empty, having considerably less than $100 in it. We cannot meet our current expenses, it being impossible for us to feed and care for 109 children and meet all our other demands on less than $1000 per month. Our plans for improvement, enlargement, and necessary repairs cannot be carried out. We receive but little help during the dull summer months. Our Easter collections must carry us through the summer. It will take not less than $6000 to meet our current obligations and carry us until "Work Day," next fall. Easter is our only chance to raise this amount. It will take every congregation and every Sunday school, doing the best that is possible for us, to raise it.

We urge our preachers, Sunday school superintendents, and church workers, to begin now to talk this important matter up and get ready for making Easter Sunday, the 4th Sunday in April, a great day for the orphanage. Our cause is worthy and our work is needy. It is your cause and your work, and unless you give us your hearty support, your earnest prayers and your genuine sympathy, we cannot keep up the great task we have undertaken in the name of the Church, for the glory of God, and for the benefit of homeless, destitute children.

Faithfully,
ROBT. W. VAUGHAN,
Supt. La. Methodist Orphanage.

PROGRESS FOR THE METHODIST HOSPITAL IN MEMPHIS, TENN.

The annual meeting of the Board of Commissioners of the Methodist Hospital, Memphis, Tenn., was held in First Methodist Church of that city on Feb. 29. There was a good attendance of the members, nearly all being present, and some of the interested brethren availed themselves of the welcome extended that they might hear how the work had progressed.

The session was most harmonious and encouraging. Every detail of the work was carefully looked into. The work of the Field Secretary was approved and commended.

The Executive Committee was instructed to employ an architect immediately and proceed to get necessary plans and let the contract for such addition and alterations of the present property as will afford 100 beds and all other conveniences of a first class hospital, up to date in every respect. They have already selected the architect, and it is expected that the contract can be let in a very few weeks.

Officers elected are: J. H. Sherard, President; J. R. Jones, T. W. Lewis, W. S. Lagrone, and J. K. Farris, Vice Presidents; John R. Pepper, Treasurer, and L. M. Stratton, Secretary. The Executive Committee is composed of the officers and the members of the Board residing in Memphis.

One of the pleasantest social features of the meeting was the delightful lunch served by Mrs. St. John Waddell, representative of the Memphis Conference Woman's Missionary Society on the Board.

Those members of the Board who had not seen the property were conducted through the grounds and house, and they expressed unqualified appreciation of the location, the beautiful grounds and the magnificent residence waiting to be opened. And all parties are pleased that the opening for hospital service is to come so soon.

Let the brethren remember that this means we will need all the money they can send us.

H. M. ELLIS, Field Secretary.

AN ABLE DISCOURSE.

A remarkable sermon on "Christianity, Preparedness and War," was delivered Sunday morning, Feb. 20, at the Methodist Church at Starkville, by Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, the pastor, to a large congregation.

His text was Matthew 10:34, "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth; I came not to send peace but a sword." He said in part:

"There is nothing which the Church and the nation needs more to-day than a clear statement of the relation of Christianity to war, to preparedness and the kind of peace Christ believed in and came to establish in the earth."

There is much inglorious and un-Christian peace being preached to-day and practiced in communities, in churches, in nations, and everywhere; peace purchased in the home by the sacrifice of the just authority of parents, in communities by allowing lawlessness to go rampant and unrestrained, in churches by allowing evil to go unrebuked, and among nations by allowing the principles upon which the life and liberty of the world depends to be trampled under the foot of arrogant power.

Such peace Christ came to destroy, such peace is as the old prophet declared "no peace," when he cried, "They have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying peace, peace, when there is no peace." And Christ, in the text affirmed, "Think not that I am come to send peace on the earth (such peace as you think of and are familiar with, of tame submission to injustice and wrong); I am not come to send peace but a sword." Christ came to enthrone in the hearts of men the love of righteousness, justice, liberty, as dearer than life itself, as dearer than family ties, or the love of father or mother. Under every conceivable circumstance he taught that when it comes to a choice between principle and peace, principle must be adhered to, and peace, property, and even life itself, let go.—Jackson (Miss.) THE ARTFUL DODGER.

Dear Dr. Meek: Rev. John W. Ramsey gravely informs the public that not to know him is to argue oneself unknown. Nevertheless, it remains a fact that until he butted into me so offensively I had never so much as heard of him, but he has lifted me from an obscurtiy from which I might not otherwise have escaped.

Having chosen a caption more accurately descriptlve of Brother Ramsey's method of debate, it seems fair to raise the inquiry, Why has he picked up what he says is a long-discredited weapon for use in this combat? Is it because his own armory is bankrupt? It would seem to be so. Little that I have said that he finds worthy of notice escaped this method of assault. He even objects to my parts of speech, though he nowhere points to any offense against either propriety or correct usage.

Brother Ramsey complains that I took no notice of his dogmatic assertions concerning the evils to the youth of the land flowing from military training and Germany's having destroyed the main argument in support of military preparedness. Since he insists upon it, I will tell him that I dellberately ignored what he had to say in that connection out of sheer pity for the ignorance of one who could use such an argument at this late date. If Brother Ramsey would read somethlng besides The Voice he would learn that the preparedness which is now an issue before the public does not involve any such injury to the youth of the nation as he describes, and that Germany has not even made a dent in the argument which supports the plea for military preparation against aggression. In the very same issue of the Advocate which carried Brother Ramsey's diatribe my gifted young friend, Robert Edwin Meek, disposed of this latter error in the department which he conducts with such conspicuous ability in this brief paragraph: "Senator John Sharp Williams of Mississippi says that preparedness does not mean militarism. It is a pity that Mr. Williams can not impress this truth upon the mind of every pacifist in the country." Brother Ramsey ought to inform himself before he undertakes a course of instruction to others, which even then might strain his powers somewhat.

Brother Ramsey utterly mistakes my reference to "bureaucrats." It was not to him that I applied that descriptive. I imagined that he might still possess some of the lingering remains of the principles of an old-fashioned Methodist and that he was only "groaning so to be." That was all. But from the manner in which he spurns all obligation to regard the law of the Church whenever it conflicts with his own notions, it is quite clear that the widespread anarchy in the Church has reached even to him.

Now, as to Bishop Hoss, I dare say the Bishop has a due appreciation for the regard of his brethren and of all men, but I am no less certain that he has a just estimate of such esteem as Brother Ramsey professes for him, which is of no value at all. Men's opinions, the things they stand for, are what attract and attach others to them—their mere flesh and blood are dear to the limited few who stand in intimate relations to them. When men become great the consensus of mankind designates them as authorities. It was as such I ventured to quote Bishop Hoss, but without avail so far as Brother Ramsey is concerned, for he says the Bishop, despite his greatness and his own admiration for him, is manifestly in error about China; that it is not military unpreparedness but a lack of the Christian religion that has caused her to become the prey of other nations. Let us look at that for a moment. What of Russia? She is a Christian nation, but heathen Japan overcame her in war. Germany, France, England, Russia, Italy are all Christian nations, yet even Brother Ramsey would scarcely have the nerve to assert that they are in a state of profound peace. Brother Ramsey knows, if he knows anything at all, that if China's four hundred millions had been prepared no nation would have dared to molest her.

Brother Ramsey does not like my method of dealing with Scripture. I did not think he would. And I was quite well aware before he intimated it that the Bible is the only book that does not mean what it says; that the correct way to interpret it is to discover the exact opposite of the plain meaning of its words. But I like my method better—it is more understandable. Even with his addition, I do not find that the Savior's meaning has been altered. It seems to me that it is largely a matter of emphasis as to the significance of the fuller quotation he has made—the matter of fact remains as I have stated it. But in passing I would refer Brother Ramsey to the time when Jesus drove the money-changers out of the temple. Whose peace did he give to that bunch of Jews?

Brother Ramsey assumes, without warrant, in both of his communications that I have set myself up as a defender of the administration, and he fiercely belabors the President and the party in power. His words do not touch me, but I am not unwilling for him to use me in this instance in making a spectacle of himself. But here is a defense of the administration, extracted from the Congressional Record, on a cognate issue, which I commend to his consideration:

Mr. Heflin: Mr. Speaker, at a time like this it is fortunate for the country that there are patriots in the House who can rise above partisanship and stand for America against the world. Let me mention here a few gentlemen on the other side who are measuring up to their patriotic duty to-day—the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Foss, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Graham, Mr. Gillett and Mr. Gardner of Massachusetts, and others.

Mr. speaker, this is no time for divided loyalty, no time for partisan politics. (Applause.) The American Representative here to-day with undivided loyalty is worthy the name of American citizen. The party that plays partisan politics at a time like this deserves the condemnation of the American people. (Applause on the Democratic side.) I am glad to note that there are Republicans over there big enough and brave enough to break away from the petty partisanship of their leader (Mr. Mann) and take their stand by the President of the United States in his controversy with the Kaiser of Germany. (Applause.) Gentlemen, you can not get away from the issue here. This is a diplomatic controversy between Bernstorff and Lansing, the Kaiser and the President. (Applause.) Why, Mr. Speaker, I have seen telegrams here to-day that said to members on this floor, you can serve Germany best—putting Germany first—and the people of the United States by voting for the McLemore resolution. Ah, gentlemen, this is not the time for partisan politics. This is the time when every liberty-loving and self-respecting American citizen should put his country first. (Applause.) Where does the South stand?—God bless her! In this hour when a foreign propaganda stalks through this Capitol seeking to embarrass and discredit the chosen head of our Government, where stands Tennessee, the home of Gen. Jackson, who conquered the flower of the British Army at New Orleans? What will be the answer of the Old North State, with Kings Mountain standing there as an everlasting monument to her patriotism and courage? What says the Old Dominion, the State of Washington, Jefferson, and Madison, who laid the foundations of the Republic? Where stands Kentucky, the home of Beck and Clay, and the birthplace of Lincoln and Davis, the two leaders of the conflict that resulted in cementing the sections in the bonds of an everlasting Union? (Applause.) Where in this critical hour stands the old Commonwealth of South Carolina, the home of Calhoun and Hayne? Where will Mississippi be found, the home of Prentiss, George, Lamar, and John Sharp Williams? (Applause.)

Mr. Candler of Mississippi: She will stand by the President. (Applause.)

Mr. Heflin: Yes: I know where she will stand. What says Alabama, the Home of Admiral Semmes, William L. Yancy, and John T. Morgan? On her soil, Mr. Speaker, stood the first capital of the Confederacy, and here she stands to-day in the glorious sisterhood, loyally supporting the President of the United States. (Applause.) Louisiana, Florida, and all the States in the South, will join hands with the patriotic Representatives in other sections and show to the world an undivided country standing solidly behind the great President of the United States. (Applause.)

The eloquent gentleman from Alabama had evidently not heard from Brother Ramsey! If it were necessary, I might, in imitation of Brother Ramsey, refer the public to Mr. Heflin or that other great Alabamian, Richmond Pearson Hobson, for information.

Like our old friend, Sam Weller, Brother Ramsey "drops into verse"—not his own, to be sure, but he adopts it. Mrs. Lipscomb's talent is unquestioned and it is to be hoped that she will give her muse free rein. But there are other bards, as she would be the first to admit. So I beg to commend to Brother Ramsey a few lines from a poet of not inferior merit, though in a somewhat different strain from those with which he seeks to confound me. I quote from England's poet laureate, Tennyson, and from his poem entitled "Britons, Guard Your Own:"

Peace-lovers we—sweet peace we all desire;
Peace-lovers we—but who can trust a liar?
Peace-lovers, haters
Of shameless traitors,
We hate not France, but this man's heart of stone.
Britons, guard your own.

We were the best of marksmen long ago,
We won old battles with our strength, the bow.
Now practice, yoemen,
Like those bowmen,
Till your balls fly as their shafts have flown.
Yoemen, guard your own.

I shall not attempt to measure the impropricties of debate with Brother Ramsey. His reflection upon my personal courage, though he admits his entire ignorance of me, merits the condemnation with which high-minded men will regard it. But under the circumstances I may be pardoned for the pride I feel in the knowledge that the blood of my race stains the battlefields of every war of our country.

The cool assurance with which Brother Ramsey warns me against making further reply to him is positively refreshing, but scarcely appalling. And the high-minded manner in which he assumes charge of this debate is amusing. The game is in my hands, as I understand the rule, but, like him, I am weary of a discussion that gets nowhere; so this will close it.

LET THE CHURCH BE FAIRLY DEALT WITH.

By the Editor.

We discussed at some length in a recent issue of the Advocate the situation in respect to Vander University, expressing the conviction that the indications point to a further contest concerning the relation of the Church to that institution. There are a few additional things bearing on this matter that we desire to say, and this we shall now proceed to do.

First, we wish to remark that if there is to be further contention over this question, it should be carried on in a perfectly frank and open manner. The Church is entitled to be fairly dealt with by all parties who may have any purpose to try to influence her course in the final disposition of this vexatious issue. Among Christian men, supposed to be concerned for the welfare of a great religious denomination, there is no legitimate place for politics and secret schemes and manipulation. It is yet two years before the assembling of the General Conference, and there is ample time to let the two million Methodists of the South, through the Annual Conferences and otherwise, pass upon all controverted points, that the will of the majority may govern, as it ought to do.

There are, when it is rightly analyzed, but two questions directly involved in the Vanderbilt issue:

1. Is the status of the Church in the University, as defined by the Supreme Court of Tennessee, such as she can afford to accept and maintain?

2. Is there any good ground for further litigation to strengthen the hold and power of the Church in the institution?

The Educational Commission has met both of these issues in a straightforward and manly manner, proclaiming to the world through the public prints its views and the reasons underlying them. As regards the first question mentioned above, with which it had only indirectly to do, it stood exactly where the General Conference did. The latter body, from the very outset of its deliberations concerning this matter to the close of them, showed clearly that it considered the place mapped out for the Church in Vanderbilt University by the Court an impossible one. No man ventured to stand before that assembly and advocate unequivocally the acceptance of that status, and nothing more. All understood that such a plea alone would not be able to muster to its support a corporal's guard. The continued investment of the General Board of Education with the power to confirm the trustees was for the purpose of maintaining any advantage that might thereby accrue until the claims of the Church could be placed upon a better and firmer basis by legal process, or until it was determined that it was impossible to do this. There is nothing that warrants the contention that that power was to be continued indefinitely if nothing could be done to reinstate the rights of the Church in the institution. On the contrary, it was intended to be merely a temporary arrangement, and was an incidental part of a general movement to fight further for the control of the University, if possible. The Vanderbilt trustees so construed it in a public statement, and rightly so. So much for the position of the Educational Commission as to this phase of the Vanderbilt issue.

Concerning the second question, namely, whether there is any good ground for further litigation, the Commission's position is well known. Without seeking in the least to influence them in the matter, it referred this question to two of the ablest lawyers in the South for investigation—Judge Andrew J. Cobb (an ex-Justice of the Supreme Court of Georgia and a Baptist) and Judge Armistead Brown, of Montgomery, Ala., a Methodist, who, pursuing their researches separately, reached the same conclusion, which was to the effect that in no court, nor by any possible method, could the Church hope to re-open the Vanderbilt case with any prospect of success. The written opinion of Judge Brown was carefully examined by Judge Dowdell, an ex-Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Alabama, who heartily concurred in its findings; so these three learned jurists were in perfect accord as to the status of the suit in this respect. The charge that these opinions were in any sense biased or ex-parte is utterly baseless and is a reflection upon any man who presumes to make it. As a matter of fact, they are in perfect harmony with the decision reached by every lawyer of standing who has given the matter attention and expressed himself concerning it. No capable attorney, however much a few uninformed barristers may, in the heat of debate, have sputtered about "fighting further," has been willing to undertake to outline a definite process by which the Church might again begin to litigate, with the prospect of accomplishing any result of value. As the Commissioner from the North Mississippi Conference, the Editor of the Advocate sought, before the meeting of the Commission in Memphis in February, 1915, the opinion of the Hon. Edward Mayes of Jackson, Miss., who is conceded to be one of the greatest and most resourceful lawyers in the entire country, and his advice was in full harmony with that of the eminent counsel mentioned above. So, the conclusion of the Commission that the Church has exhausted all possible legal recourse seems to be about as strongly sustained as any matter of the kind could well be.

But whether this decision is correct or not, the Commission has acted squarely and openly with the Church; what it thinks and the reasons therefor have been given out without equivocation or reservation. And now what we desire to say is, that if there be any Bishop, or connectional officer, or any person who holds that the Commission is wrong in its positions, let him come from under cover and plainly say so in such a manner that all may know where he stands and what his reasons are for the views to which he adheres.

If any one knows of a lawyer of reputation who can find a legal process by which the Church may reasonably hope to reassert and make good her lost claims, let him state who he is; and we dare say that the Educational Commission will be glad to have other lawyers to confer with him and weigh his suggestions and see what there is in them. If anybody can turn up anything along this line, now, when it can be calmly and searchingly sifted to the very bottom, is the time to do this. The period during the excitement of a General Conference is not the proper occasion upon which to spring a proposal of this character, especially when it is calculated to complicate the issue and there is ample opportunity beforehand for any and all such views to be made known and considered.

And if there are Southern Methodists who think that the litigation is ended and there is no further chance to continue it, but who yet believe that it is part of wisdom for the Church to hold on to Vanderbilt University, let them frankly so state now, backing up their contention with argument, and let the Church at large pass upon the matter and elect delegates to the General Conference who will execute its will, whatever it may be. This is the only fair and Christian way to settle such a question. For men to conceal their views from the general Methodist public, work in secret and go to the General Conference, and there undertake to confuse the issue by holding out the hope of further litigation, when there is none, with the real object in view of maintaining some kind of a connection with Vanderbilt University, based on the status established by the Tennessee Supreme Court, for the following four years, and indefinitely, if possible, might do for dirty and unscrupulous politicians, but not for men who claim to be representatives of a branch of the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Any man who is willing to resort to such methods, no matter how high may be the place that he holds, is unfit to be even a member of the Church, to say nothing of being unworthy to have a part in shaping her legislation and her course. There have been entirely too much double dealing and chicanery in the long-drawn-out Vanderbilt controversy. The ugliest part of the whole record is the manner in which some men have wriggled in and wriggled out, standing for one thing at one time and for a wholly different thing at another. It ought not to be expecting too much of Methodist ministers, not to mention Bishops and connectional officers, to ask them to be open and above board in what they may attempt to do. To be sure, this may call for some courage and manliness; but, however unpopular might be one's position, if bravely and conscientiously taken, it could not fail to command more respect from all good and true men than the practice of traveling about over the country, whispering guardedly about the Church having thrown away more rights at Vanderbilt than she ever exercised in that institution, seeking to stir all the disaffection possible, and hatching schemes in private conclaves which are cunningly kept from the public. There will be a day of reckoning for all such underhanded manipulators. The Church may be slow in getting her eyes open, but sooner or later she will see things in their true light.

Come out in the open, gentlemen, no matter for what you may stand, and let the will of the majority of the whole Church prevail. This is the only high-minded and honorable course to pursue.

A LETTER FROM THE CENTRAL WEST.

By Rev. Theodore Copeland, D.D.

Sometimes it is a good thing for a pastor to leave his charge and the field where he has been faithfully doing the Master's work, and go into a community where he is unacquainted and come in contact with new people and conditions, and study their methods of work and constitutional peculiarities. It not only furnishes him with an opportunity for physical relaxation and mental rest, but it enables him to make new acquaintances, and also see how other people do the same kind of work he is doing at home, and he often becomes familiar with new methods which he can successfully employ in his own field of labor.

I not only had the opportunity to render a service to the pastor and Church in Wagoner, but I feel that they were a blessing to me, and that I returned better equipped for my work than I was before my visit. We not only had an excellent meeting, but while there I met some of the choicest spirits in the Church, people whom I shall never forget, and whom I expect to meet, some day, in our Father's House. I not only enjoyed myself while in Wagoner, but the journey there was inspiring and pleasant. I left Hot Springs Monday morning, January 31, at 5:50, over the Iron Mountain, and, changing cars at Benton, I arrived at Little Rock at 7:30; there I changed again to the Missouri Pacific, leaving there at 8:30. The journey to Wagoner from Little Rock was full of interest and I found the country beautiful all the way. We passed through the beautiful town of Conway in which is located Hendrix College. Conway is an ideal place for a college and the town and college both seem to be in a prosperous condition. Plummerville, Atkins Russellville, Clarksville, Ozark, Mulberry and Fort Smith are all good towns, and indicate that the country is in a healthy condition. Fort Smith has a population of 20,000 people, and seems to be rapidly growing. I was delighted with the farming country, most all the way from Little Rock to Wagoner. The land is fertile, the homes of the people are comfortable, and the stock of different kinds around the barns and in the pastures indicated that the farmers that own them are not likely to end their days in the poorhouse.

As I witnessed the evidence of thrift in the farming communities, I thought what a privilege it is to own a good farm, and live on it when one has the equipment and adequate agricultural knowledge to successfully run it. There is no more independent life under the sun. Why any farmer who is in health and the maturity of his powers wants to leave a good farm and move into a common village or even a thriving town to live, I can not see. After leaving Fort Smith, it was not long before the train reached the great State of Oklahoma. This is a unique and wonderful country. It is occupied by all kinds of people, and seemingly from everywhere. There may be seen the Indian, the colored man, and the white man, and many of them own great farms and are great farmers. The impression of the country I received, while speeding along on the train, was certainly a favorable one. I liked the country and would not object to owning a farm in that fine State myself. If I could not live on it myself, it would be a good heritage to leave to the children. I am sure they would not object to it.

The train on which I was riding reached Wagoner on time and I was met at the depot by the pastor, Rev. A. N. Goforth, and was taken to the hotel where I was to be entertained during my stay in the city. After replenishing the needs of the inner man, we went to the Methodist Church, where I preached to a good-sized congregation. The spirit of God seemed to be in our midst from the very first service. We not only had the Divine promise that we would have success, but we had the presence of the Promiser himself. I remained with the pastor in the meeting two weeks and the evidences of the Divine approval were seen in every service. I enjoyed every minute of my stay with this good pastor and his affectionate people. Wagoner is one of the best towns in the State, and is included in one of the best presiding elders' districts in the Conference. This is Rev. Andrew N. Goforth's first year at this good church, and he has already captured and captivated the town. The people think highly of his preaching and love the man. The official members of this Church are men of intelligence and piety, and there is not a crank among them. They are loyal to the pastor and love the Church and are true to it. They, as an official board, assured me before I left Wagoner, that the church debt, amounting to about $3000, would be canceled right away. They are men of their word, and I am looking for that church to be free from debt in a very short time. The presiding elder, Rev. Jas. W. Rogers, was with us two or three days, to the delight of everbody. They appreciated his presence and the service which he rendered in the meeting. Brother Rogers was originally from the North Mississippi Conference; so was the pastor, Brother Goforth. The North Mississippi Conference is a good Conference to develop men for the work, if it is not able to keep them all within its bounds. I learned while there, that this presiding elder brings things to pass in his district, and that he is much appreciated as a preacher. While there, I had the pleasure of meeting his excellent wife and their two sweet children. Mrs. Rogers was originally a resident of Greenville, Miss., at the time that Brother Rogers persuaded her to join the itinerancy of the Methodist Church. With him she went out to be a wanderer on the face of the earth. Brother Rogers is in his second year on the district, and was returned at the earnest request of the pastors and the churches. I feel that I voice the sentiments of all his friends when I say I am proud of him and am pleased with the work he is doing on the district.

While in Wagoner, I heard good things about Dr. Linebaugh. He is very much in evidence in that country. May the good Lord raise up more men like him! All the people know that Brother Linebaugh lives in Oklahoma.

During the two weeks that I was in Wagoner, I was twice to see Bishop E. E. Hoss at Muskogee. He had just recently returned from the Orient, and had many interesting things to tell concerning his trip and that far-a-way country. I was gratified to find him so well and looking so fine. How he loves the Church and the work it is doing in the world's redemption! It is indeed an inspiration to hear him talk about his recent visit to the land beyond the seas. He says it will not be many years until our Lord has his way in that land now somewhat in the shadows. Bishop Hoss is a complete man and has all the qualities of a great Bishop. How the Church will miss his counsel and work when the good Lord takes him home! Indeed, I doubt if Methodism has ever produced his superior. While in those parts, I heard that Dr. Sessler Hoss, the Bishop's son, is easily the leading physician in Muskogee, which is another evidence that ministers' sons often make useful men and "serve their generation according to the will of God."

Leaving Oklahoma Tuesday, February 8, I reached Hot Springs the following day and found all well and everything all right.

I LOVE DEAR MOTHER BEST.

By J. G. Cronbach.

I love my little dollie dear,
With rosy cheeks, and sweet blue eyes;
She's always quiet, always here,
And never pouts, or kicks or cries—
But oh, she doesn't love me back!

I like to lift her up and down,
And dress her always in nice clothes;
She smiles and smiles, and does not frown,
When to her little bed she goes—
But oh, she will not love me back!

I love her better, 'cause she's clean,
And doesn't fuss like brother Joe.
She's never sick, and never seen,
To spend her pennies for the show
But oh, she cannot love me back!

So, then, I love dear mother best,
She says she loves me—this I know.
For in her arms I find sweet rest.
I love her, yes, I love her so—
For mother dear does love me back!

BILL AND JOE.

By Mrs. Junius M. Batte.

The Sabbath morning services were closing in the city of Brookneal, the people were hurrying home. No one noticed the two forlorn-looking little boys, as they stood by the church gate with eyes upturned to each passer-by, as if anxious for a word. No one heeded the anxious look, until one saintly form, Miss Nancy Gray, almost the last to leave the church, appeared. She always saw the stranger.

"Good morning boys. How are you both?" "Well, I guess," came from one of the uncouth lads. "I hope these dear boys were at church." "No'm, we ain't been to no church; we's been playing mumblepeg here on this nice grass." "Is that a good game boys?" "Yes'm, you bet," they both spoke up.

"Now boys tell me how to play it, as we walk along."

She was soon told all about it.

"I never played that game," said Miss Nancy, "but I have played other games, and read nice books. I also know a great many nice stories."

"O good lady, where did you learn them? I always wanted to know a good story," said the taller boy, as they walked beside Miss Nan.

"How would you like for me to tell you one?"

"It would be fun," said the boys.

"If you will go home with me and eat dinner, I shall tell you a very beautiful story."

They hardly knew how to accept when such an act of kindness came to them. Then to eat at a table! They hardly knew how; many months had passed since they had seen a table. They had slept in a barrel or a box out of doors, oh! for such a long time, nibbled their crackers and cheese, or eaten a box of sardines anywhere they happened to be. But they gladly went with Miss Nan.

"Now, you must tell me your names."

"My name's Bill."

"An' mine's Joe."

"Yes, Bill and Joe, but have you no other names—your mother's?"

"We ain't got no maw. She died about six months ago with the pneumonia, but all the people near where we lived on 23d row called her Mrs. Flanagan."

"Well, I shall call you Joe and Bill Flanagan."

"Yes'm, that's what Maw called us sometimes."

"Now Joe, you must tell me about your father."

"My paw, you mean? Well I ain't seen him in a long time. Maw told us, said she hated to tell us, but she wanted us to be good boys; told us never to touch other people's things for paw made a bad mistake; he took some money one time and was put in the pen and can't ever get out."

About this time they reached a neat little cottage. Who lived there? No one, but the kind minister, Mr. Gray, and his dear sister, Miss Nancy.

"Why Sister Nan, you seem to have brought company with you."

"Yes these are my little friends, Joe and Bill Flanagan."

"Come in boys; glad to see you."

They felt very timid, yet very much pleased; for never before had they been called "friend" or "company." The boys were made to feel at home. Miss Nan had them to wash their faces and hands, then comb their heads. When the little bell rang for dinner, the little lads were almost strangers to themselves. They did not remember when before they had washed their faces and combed their hair.

You readers can imagine with what enjoyment these starved boys ate their dinner. Sometimes they used a knife, sometimes a fork, and sometimes a spoon.

Miss Nan and preacher Gray enjoyed seeing them eat.

When dinner was over Miss Nan said, "Boys are you ready for the stories?"

"Yes'm."

One story after another was told. How their eyes stretched, when the lions did not eat up the good man. How excited they became when the men were walking about in the furnace.

"My! how the fellows would like these stories. Please tell another one," said Bill.

"I will tell you one more."

She then told them how Jesus the Savior was nailed to the cross. "O, Bill, don't you 'member maw told us that," as the great tears filled his eyes. When Miss Nancy saw those tears she knew their heartstrings had been touched.

"Sister Nan, if you are through, I will talk to the boys for a while."

"Boys, who are the fellows you speak of," said Mr. Gray.

"They are the boys we go with, Jim Jones, Dick Maine and Lee Wise."

"How do you make your money?"

"We don't make much. We carry bundles, black shoes, hold horses, and sometimes we carry a grip for a fine lady."

"Boys, your faces look honest; I want you to find the boys, bring them to church and all come back and spend the night with us." They promised; but, hardly expecting to see them again, Mr. Gray let them go.

Mr. Gray was almost ready to begin his sermon when a great commotion was heard at the door; he raised his eyes; there stood Joe with his face dazzling with pride, his head erect. He led his brother and three companions to the front; they were all in their ragged clothes.

"Jesus Saves," the congregation sang, then Mr. Gray announced his text, St. John, 14th chapter, second and third verses.

"In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you."

"I go to prepare a place for you. I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." The sermon was clear and plain. Each understood there was a home in heaven for him, if he accepted Christ as his Savior. Mr. Gray asked if there were any who wanted a home in that heavenly land; if so, to come and shake hands with him.

Joe's manly, ragged form went forward; there was a silence.

"Is this all?" No one else responded, the congregation was dismissed.

Mr. Gray and Miss Nancy took the boys home with them, gave them a good supper and a comfortable bed; after the night's rest, a good breakfast.

When they left, they said they had had a good time and promised to go to Sunday school. Mr. Gray assisted them to get work, and a friend of Mr. Gray gave them a room in which to sleep.

Joe was always at Sunday school and preaching services. The others would often be persuaded to go fishing or to some other place of amusement. Miss Nan, Mr. Gray and Joe kept trying until at last all of the boys came regularly to all of the church services.

That has been twenty years ago, now let me tell you about them. Joe has gone to tell the good news of a Savior's love to a heathen people. Bill preaches to a little city Mission. The others are all good business men, each constantly telling the story of the Cross, and praising Miss Nancy, who has been dead many years.

Dr. Gray, as he is now called, though somewhat tottering in his steps, always gives a word of cheer.

Boys and girls, think what a kind word or a friendly deed can do.

"A little word in kindness spoken,
A motion or a tear,
Has often healed the heart that's broken,
And made a friend sincere."

OUR HONOR ROLL.

This roll is to be made of the charges in which all of the stewards are subscribers to the Advocate. At present it stands as follows:

1. Ripley and Blue Mountain, Miss., Rev. R. P. Neblett, pastor.

2. Court Street, Hattiesburg, Miss., Rev. T. W. Adams, pastor.

3. Kossuth Circuit, North Miss., Rev. D. R. McDougal, pastor.

4. Oak Grove Circuit, Louisiana Conference, Rev. W. T. Woodward, pastor.

"AS THY DAYS, SO SHALL THY STRENGTH BE."

This promise was originally made to the children of Israel, but its scope has widened with the passing years until it now extends to the people in every part of the habitable globe who fear God and keep his commandments. Man's earthly career is reckoned as a span, but how much joy and grief are compressed within the narrow limits of that vale lying between the cradle and the grave! Our sojourn here is brief, but the varied experiences through which we pass in our earthly pilgrimage severely try our souls, and we are forced to use all the strength, might, and ingenuity of our being, re-enforced by the aid of Almighty God, to come out victorious over the world, the flesh, and the devil, and to remain unscorched by the fiery trials through which we have passed and uncontaminated by our necessary contact with the wicked people of the world in the relationships of life.

The strength that man needs most is moral or spiritual strength. A conscience void of offense toward God and man enables one to face the world alone and calmly bid defiance to all the forces of evil that are in it. That truly is strength. It will make the timid and shrinking person as bold as a lion. This, rather than mere physical strength, is what the servant of God is promised. Each day that he lives he will receive strength from on high which will be sufficient to enable him to put all things under his feet. Our days on earth are to a great extent made up of trials and tribulations, and it is a comfort to know that if we are faithful we will always have strength to bear up bravely under these things and to fight a good fight. We know that we will not be tempted above what we are able to stand, with the help of God.

THE MISSISSIPPI CAMPAIGN FOR EMORY UNIVERSITY.

At its session at New Albany, Miss., last December the North Mississippi Conference took the following action:

"Inasmuch as it is proposed to name the Law Department of Emory University the Lamar Law School, after Mississippi's great lawyer and statesman, your Board recommends that the suggestion be endorsed with appreciation by our Conference; and that jointly with the Mississippi Conference a campaign be launched to erect a building for this department bearing this name. It recommends that the Executive Committee of the Board of Education, assisted by the Conference Secretary of Education, and in conjunction with a like committee from the Mississippi Conference, be authorized to inaugurate a campaign to this end."

Dr. A. F. Watkins, President of Millsaps College, and Rev. Robert Selby, presiding elder of the Brookhaven District, both leading members of the Mississippi Conference, were present when the North Mississippi Conference Board of Education had this matter under advisement, and expressed the view that their Conference would be glad to co-operate in such a movement. In pursuance of this action, the Executive Committees of the two Conference Boards of Education met in the Galloway Memorial Church at Jackson on March 17, with a full attendance. Besides the members of these Executive Committees, there were a number of other preachers in attendance, including several of the presiding elders and Bishop W. A. Candler, the Chancellor of Emory University. A business session of the Executive Committee was held in the afternoon, in which the interested visitors were allowed to express themselves freely concerning all the questions that were raised for consideration. There was a surprising unanimity of sentiment among them that the time had come to take up the work of assisting in equipping our new connectional university at Atlanta, and that this task should be vigorously pressed, in spite of any obstacles that might seem to be in the way. The Executive Committees then held an executive session and decided that a commissioner should be put in the field for Mississippi at the earliest date practicable, and named a committee of four to assist in directing the campaign now to be inaugurated, placing thereon Rev. J. C. Park and Rev. W. W. Woollard, of the North Mississippi Conference, and Dr. I. W. Cooper and Rev. J. T. Leggett, of the Mississippi Conference.

At eight p. m., a magnificent audience assembled in the spacious auditorium of the Galloway Memorial Church to hear Bishop Candler discuss the subject of "Christian Education" and tell of the progress that has been made in the work of establishing Emory University. The meeting was presided over by Rev. Robert Selby; Rev. J. R. Countiss led in prayer, after which the Bishop was most happily presented as the speaker of the hour by Rev. T. H. Lipscomb. Bishop Candler's utterance evinced the masterful grasp for which he is so distinguished in the discussion of any theme and held from beginning to end the close attention of the large congregation. At the close of the address an opportunity was given for any persons who might desire to do so to make contributions to the work in hand, and, including amounts that had been previously subscribed, the sum of $5120 was soon realized.

Mississippians will be asked to contribute $50,000 toward the construction of the L. Q. C. Lamar School building, which is now in process of erection on the Emory Campus. A university must have a law school and Mississippi has been highly honored in having this department named for one of her most illustrious statesmen. But the fact should not be overlooked that while she is assisting the law school, other sections of the Church are equipping the Theological School and other schools that will serve the needs of Mississippi Methodism. To help any department of Emory University is necessarily to aid the whole institution. But if any one should prefer to have his gift applied in some other way, his wish will be carried out, and the University authorities will donate an equal amount to the Lamar School building; so that when Mississippians shall have contributed as much as $50,000 to the entire institution, their debt of obligation to the particular enterprise which they have been asked to take care of will have been discharged.

It is not Mississippi alone which is now being urged to lend a helping hand to the work of equipping our new University east of the Mississippi River. A similar appeal is being made to practically every State and Annual Conference in the territory which that institution is expected to serve. There will soon be in the field commissioners who will reach the whole eastern part of our Connection. While other Conferences are assisting in this urgently needed and noble undertaking, those in Mississippi must not lag behind. And we do not believe that they will. That is not the way that Mississippi Methodists do things.

WHERE THE RESPONSIBILITY RESTS.

We are carrying this week what we expect to be our last articles on the subject of "Preparedness," unless something new pertaining to that question should develop. Though we feel sure that he did not intend to convey any such impression, it seems to us that the concluding paragraphs of Rev. J. T. Lewis' article in this issue might give some persons the idea that the Advocate and its contributors have raised this question in the Church. But this is not true. That distinction belongs to the Editor of The Voice, a representative of the General Board of Missions, who in December contributed to the Church press a ringing article on the subject, which, at his request, we published, and who later brought out a special edition of his own publication dealing with it. So, whatever controversy there has been in the Advocate concerning this matter must be charged up to the Board of Missions, which controls The Voice. We feel that this statement is due to our contributors.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Writing from Alexandria, La., on March 16, Brother A. L. Dietrich says: "Brother Coleman's series of institutes has begun well."

The Louisiana State Sunday School Convention will be held at Shreveport, April 4-6, 1916. A choice program has been arranged for the occasion.

Rev. H. M. Young, of Vaiden, Miss., a Methodist minister in whom there is no guile, has our thanks for a club of 6 subscriptions from his charge. He serves a worthy flock.

Plans are under way for the construction of two new churches on the Ida (La.) charge. The pastor of that developing parish is Rev. J. C. Price.

Evangelist G. A. Klein, of Nashville, Tenn., will begin a meeting with the congregation of the First Methodist Church of Baton Rouge, La., on the first Sunday in April.

Rev. Paul H. Grice, our pastor at Mentorum, Miss., thinks that the work has opened auspiciously in his field, and that there is a prospect of substantial achievements for the Master.

After spending a good portion of the winter at San Antonio, Texas, Major R. W. Millsaps has returned to his home at Jackson, Miss. He continues to be remarkably vigorous for one of his years.

Rev. C. A. Schultz, of Daleville, Miss., orders 4 names continued on our subscription files, and adds the following note concerning his charge: "Our work is progressing well at this time, and we are counting on a fruitful year."

Having been away from home nearly ever since the last number of the Advocate appeared, we have not found it practicable to complete our discussion of the "Amusement Question" in this isue of our paper. We hope to do so, however, next week.

Hon. G. T. Fitzhugh, of Memphis, Tenn., who is a Mississippian by birth, rearing, and education, has given $2000 to Emory University. Mr. James Hand, one of the generous men of South Mississippi Methodism, has given $1000. Let the good work go on!

Rev. R. O. Brown, of Clarksdale, Miss., pleased the Publisher a few days since by forwarding us a club of 15 subscriptions, 4 of them being new. We have heard from more sources than one that Brother Brown is giving good satisfaction in his present responsible pastorate.

Rev. J. M. Wyatt, of Booneville, Miss., in a letter bearing date of March 15 and bringing us 3 subscriptions, says: "We had 5 accessions on profession of faith last Sunday. This is a fine people." Happy should be the pastor who has conversions at his regular services!

Rev. T. E. Gregory, of Caledonia, Miss., gives us 4 new names for our subscription files, and refers to his work as follows: "We are very much encouraged with the outlook in this field. Rev. W. W. Woollard was with us on Sunday, March 5. Things have to move forward where he goes."

The Cockrum (Miss.) charge is prospering under the pastoral administration of Rev. F. H. McGee. We are indebted to Brother McGee for 4 subscriptions to the Advocate, forwarded on March 16.

Rev. W. W. Bruner, of Wall Hill, Miss., is pleased with the progress of the work in his field. He is mindful of the interests of the Advocate as he goes in and out among his parishioners.

Rev. J. H. Bell, of Columbus, Miss., passed through New Orleans last week, en route home from Donaldsonville, La., and it was our pleasure to have him take lunch with us. Brother Bell has been continuously busy in meetings since January 10, and the Lord has been graciously blessing his labors.

We are pleased to state that Rev. A. H. Williams and Sister Williams, of Strongs, Miss., who have been critically ill for the past four weeks, are improving rapidly, and that it is thought that they will soon be out again. Their daughter, Mrs. B. G. DuBard, has been with them during their illness.

Rev. H. E. Carter, writing on the 18th inst., reports at Magee, Miss., one of the greatest revivals ever held there. He had with him in this good meeting Rev. D. E. Kelly. His account of this gracious awakening will appear next week, having reached us too late for this issue of the Advocate.

Rev. R. W. Tucker, pastor of the Noel Memorial Church of Shreveport, La., says: "Things are moving along pretty well with us. I have received 36 members since Conference. We are hoping to make a full report this fall." Brother Tucker's letter brought us a club of 15 subscriptions, for which we extend to him our thanks.

Brother T. P. Barr, who has long been connected in an official manner with the Galloway Memorial Church (formerly known as First Church), at Jackson, Miss., has subscribed $100 to Emory University. There are a hundred laymen in Mississippi who ought to follow his good example in this respect within the next 30 or 60 days.

Rev. A. J. Gearheard, pastor of the Louisiana Avenue Church, is seeking to commit 100 persons to active, personal work in the way of leading souls to Christ and of building up the congregation with which they are connected. We dare say that 100 such workers in any church would soon make it a tower of strength for the Master.

Our faithful pastor at Indianola, Miss., Rev. J. H. Mitchell, has our thanks for 3 additional subscriptions to the Advocate. In his business note to our office, Brother Mitchell says: "I am glad that you are expressing yourself concerning the worldly amusements. The Church needs to emphasize more her opposition to such practices."

Rev. W. W. Drake, our pastor at Minden, La., is having his usual success in that delightful charge. He is conducting this week a series of afternoon services for boys and girls under sixteen years of age. Rev. R. W. Vaughan, of the Louisiana Orphanage, is announced to spend next Sunday with Brother Drake and his congregation.

Rev. W. C. Carlisle, of Guntown, Miss., sends us 4 subscriptions to the Advocate, and adds the following note: "My work is moving on well. Our late quarterly conference was an occasion of much interest. Rev. T. H. Dorsey was with us and did some fine preaching. He is a most capable presiding elder, and we are much pleased with him."

Among those who have lately given us clubs of subscribers is Rev. R. A. Tucker, of Grenada, Miss., who on March 9 forwarded us a list of 5 renewals and 6 new names. Brother Tucker is in high favor with the people of his present charge. He expects to begin next Sunday a series of revival services, in which he will have the assistance of Dr. W. G. Henry, of Jackson, Miss.

Rev. C. A. Battle recently went to Alabama to attend the obsequies of Mrs. Heflin, the wife of Congressman Heflin of that State, who is a sister of Mrs. Battle. While away from Baton Rouge, Brother Battle also visited relatives in Georgia. In his absence his pulpit at the Capital City of the State was filled by Rev. W. W. Holmes, presiding elder of the New Orleans District.

No pastor in our territory is doing better work in behalf of the Conference organ than Rev. R. M. Evans, of Calhoun City, Miss. He gave us another batch of subscriptions on the 13th inst. Among other things, Brother Evans says: "I take up the Advocate both in private circles and from the pulpit, and find it easy to secure names. A word and an opportunity, and the people do the rest."

We acknowledge ourselves to be indebted to Miss Mina Pollard, of Batesville, Miss., for 7 new and 4 renewal subscriptions to the Advocate. We wish that our paper had so capable a representative in every pastoral charge in its territory. Miss Pollard has given us an excellent report of our work at Batesville, Miss., where Rev. E. G. Mohler is the popular pastor, which will appear next week.

Rev. W. A. Bowlin, of Cedar Bluff, Miss., says: "This charge is in a good condition. We now have a Sunday school at each of our four churches, and the interest in this important phase of our church work is increasing. Mrs. Bowlin is just recovering from a recent severe attack of erysipelas in her face." Brother Bowlin's communication brought us a club of 3 new and 2 renewal subscriptions, for which we are grateful to him.

In a business letter to our office, bringing us two subscriptions, Rev. G. P. McKeown, of Edwards, Miss., appends the following note: "The work is progressing nicely here. We have a choice and appreciative people who know how to take care of the preacher. Our Church lost one of its most faithful members when Brother D. M. Chichester passed to his reward not long ago. A good, true, noble Christian then entered into rest."

It was our pleasure while at Jackson, Miss., last Friday and Saturday to meet there our esteemed brother and friend, Rev. J. C. Park, who has noticeably improved in health since his assignment to a lighter work, at Sardis, Miss., last December. It would be difficult to find in any Conference a choicer spirit than Brother Park, and he has unusual gifts as an expositor of the Word. It would greatly delight us to see his health fully restored.

Rev. W. S. Lagrone, of Drew, Miss., writes: "The work is going forward here. Our Sunday school has advanced from 55 to 172. We have a Wesley Class of 42, which is still growing. We have a Junior and Senior Epworth League and a Boys' Club with 15 members. We have raised $750 for our parsonage, and will pay our domestic mission assessment within the next two weeks." Brother Lagrone's good letter brought us 8 subscriptions, 5 of them being new.

Under date of March 14, Rev. W. L. Duren, of Columbus, Miss., writes as follows: "Brother A. P. Leech has been ill nearly all the winter, but he seems to be getting better now, though his improvement is slow." We are very sorry to know that Brother Leech has been sick, and we pray that he may henceforth steadily improve. The North Mississippi Conference has never had in it a more stainless and faithful soldier of the Cross than this honored veteran.

Rev. H. G. Roberts, of Coldwater, Miss., writes: "I know that you will be sorry to learn that the family residence of Mrs. M. E. Veazey was burned yesterday afternoon. Besides the financial loss, many highly prized treasures and relics were destroyed. Mrs. Pace, another of our members living in the home, was also a heavy loser." We indeed regret to be apprised of this misfortune, and we sympathize with those who have been made to suffer loss as a consequence of it.

Rev. R. T. Nolen writes as follows: "I know that you will sympathize with us in the loss by fire of our church at Oakvale, Miss., on March 13. Especially will this be sad news to all former pastors of the Williamsburg charge. We desire to rebuild the house of worship thus destroyed as soon as possible, and we are greatly in need of financial assistance. Any one that will help us may send his remittance to R. M. Calhoun, or (Rev.) R. T. Nolen, Collins, Miss., Route A.

Rev. H. G. Roberts, of Coldwater, Miss., writes: "We are going to remodel, enlarge, and encase our church building in a brick veneering. This work will cost $6000, and we expect to have it completed by the meeting of the district conference. We are having large congregations at our preaching services: 250 persons were counted at church on our last preaching day." Brother Roberts' letter brought us a club of 9 subscriptions to the Advocate—a service to the Conference organ which we highly appreciate.

We take the following from the Coushatta (La.) Citizen: "Mrs. Mollie Lindsey, an aged, widely known, and beloved lady of this parish, died very suddenly on Monday, March 6, at the home of her son, Mr. W. A. Lindsey, and was buried in the Holly Springs Cemetery." Mrs. Lindsey was the mother of Mrs. Bamburg, the wife of Rev. R. H. Bamburg, of the Louisiana Conference. We extend sympathy to the bereaved, and pray that the Heavenly Father may comfort and sustain them.

Rev. W. T. Woodward, of Oak Grove, La., continues to sow down his field with good reading matter. A letter dated March 17 brought us a number of additional subscriptions to the Advocate and an order for several more Bibles. Brother Woodward says: "This makes 27 new and renewal subscriptions that I have sent in. I have also forwarded you orders for 10 Bibles. All of my stewards now take the Conference organ. I am now getting lumber on the ground at Forest, La., for the construction of my fourteenth church since I have been in the ministry." This is, indeed, a splendid record.

Rev. B. P. Jaco, writing on March 14, stated that he had been in Byhalia a day or two before and had visited Brothers McKeown and Davis, both of whom have been ill for some time. He found the former able to sit up, after having been in bed for more than a month, and he thought it likely that he would be able to get out some in the near future. Brother Davis underwent an operation some time ago, but other troubles have set up which are confining him to his room for the present. Let the brethren remember these two choice ministers in their prayers. It pains us to know that either of them is annoyed by physical maladies.

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions sent in within the past few days: Rev. H. J. Maddox, Coalville, Miss., 2; Rev. A. S. Brisco, Lamar, Miss., 2; Rev. W. H. Lane, Foxworth, Miss., 2; Rev. S. L. Pope, New Albany, Miss., 2; Rev. W. C. Beasley, Hickory Flat, Miss., 3; Rev. J. J. Garner, Kilmichael, Miss., 3; Mrs. B. J. Allen, Tunica, Miss., 2; Dr. I. L. Peebles, Wesson, Miss., 1; Rev. Guy Ray, Mooreville, Miss., 3; Rev. J. A. Biffle, Endora, Miss., 6; Rev. W. S. Selman, Mt. Pleasant, Miss., 6; Rev. W. J. Dawson, Bolton, Miss., 6; Rev. J. B. King, Bay Springs, Miss., 5; Rev. R. W. Evans, Gunnison, Miss., 7.

Sister J. W. Price writes us as follows from Lambert, Miss.: "Dr. Price has been very ill for several days with la grippe. It seemed to settle in his throat, and for more than a week he could not swallow any solid food at all, and it was difficult for him even to drink a few spoonfuls of milk, as his tongue apparently was partially paralyzed. Mrs. Wright, our daughter, came up from Greenwood some days ago and the physicians thought it best for him to accompany her home. He did so, standing the trip very well, and he is there at this time, March 15. His present condition is considered somewhat improved." We regret to learn of the serious illness of this noble veteran of the itinerancy, and we trust that he will soon completely recover. Let the brethren remember him at the throne of grace.

We acknowledge the reception of the following marriage announcement: "Mr. Philip Hag Kilpatrick announces the marriage of his sister, Elizabeth, to Dr. Samuel Hershel C. Burgin on Saturday, March 11, 1916, at Memphis, Tenn. At home at 2711 Fairmount Avenue, Dallas, Texas." The officiating minister on this interesting occasion was Bishop James Atkins. The bride is widely known for her noble Christian character and large usefulness, and Dr. Burgin is one of the foremost Methodist ministers in Texas. The happy couple tarried in New Orleans several days while en route to Dallas and delighted the Editor by a visit to his sanctum last Monday. That their lives may be enriched by being linked together in holy wedlock and made to flow forth in still larger blessings to humanity, is both our earnest wish and prayer.

Some of the city papers have lately announced that there will be a great rally of the Methodist young people of New Orleans at the First M. E. Church, South, on April 11, and that "Rev. J. M. Culbreth, Assistant Epworth League Secretary, will come and bring the Vanderbilt quartet with him" to assist in the singing. These announcements were unfortunately worded, and were, in consequence, calculated to mislead the general Methodist public. The quartet referred to is not one that now exists at Vanderbilt University, but is made up of singers who attended that institution a number of years ago. Its proper name now is the "Florence Conwell Quartet." It is composed of the following persons: Rev. Henry Stanford, pastor at Rogers, Texas; Prof. B. E. Mitchell, Millsaps College, Jackson, Miss.; Rev. J. M. Culbreth, Nashville, Tenn., and Rev. W. E. Thomas, of New Orleans. It is really the Sociological Congress, which is to convene here in April, that is bringing this quartet to the Crescent City. Its members sang for that organization during its annual session at Houston, Texas, last year, and have been invited to do so again this year.

ORA LEE MILLARD (nee Manning) was born in Hardin County, Tenn., on Jan. 22, 1884, and died at her home near Blue Ball, Scott County, Ark., on Feb. 17, 1916. Sister Millard professed religion and joined the M. E. Church, South, in early life, and was a consistent member until death. She was a devoted wife, an affectionate mother, and was always good and true. She was ever ready to help the sick and needy. She had her trials, still she was anxious to live for her children's sake; but when God said, "It is enough, come up higher," she was ready to obey the summons. The passing years may hide the name carved on her tomb, but her gracious influence upon the lives of others will outwear time. She leaves a husband, four small children (one little girl having preceded her to the grave), her mother, four brothers, two sisters, and a host of friends and relatives to mourn their loss. But our loss is her eternal gain. May God bless her husband and little children and may they all prepare to meet her in heaven!

(Mrs.) E. L. MANNING.

JOHN C. HUFFMAN was born on July 5, 1876, and joined the Methodist Church at Topisaw, Miss., about 12 years later; and until his death, which occurred on Sept. 12, 1915, was a most useful and loyal member, being Sunday school superintendent and a steward when he died. I feel sure that no pastor ever had a more loyal official, all things considered. He was not strong physically—had not been for the latter fifteen years of his life; yet you could always count on John Huffman being at quarterly meeting unless providentially hindered, and he always had his report. He did not fear death, but said he had been ready for a long time. In his going he leaves a wife and five children; but they know where to find him. Though it has been several months since his departure, it seems but a few days. He is sadly missed. His place will be hard to fill, especially on the Topisaw official board and the Topisaw camp-meeting committee. May God bless his bereaved wife and children and enable them to meet him some day. I expect to see him again. His friend and former pastor, J. A. WELLS.

Oak Ridge, Miss.

Brother J. F. SISTRUNK departed this life on Oct. 1, 1915, being sixty-six years, seven months, and nine days old. Brother Sistrunk moved from Mississippi to Louisiana about 35 years ago and settled in Sabine Parish. He was one of the first settlers of the Mitchell community. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when a young man, but on moving he placed his certificate of membership in his trunk, where it remained until a few months before his death. It was the happy privilege of the writer to visit his home as pastor and talk and pray with him. It was during our revival meeting in the summer that he was made happy in the Lord and again united with the Church. While he remained out of the Church so long, he loved and respected it. He, together with two or three more men, built the first Methodist preaching-house in the Mitchell community. Brother Sistrunk had been a great sufferer for a long while before his death, but was not thought to be in a dangerous condition until a few hours before he passed away. He leaves a wife, seven sons, and one daughter to mourn his death. May God bless and comfort them in their sorrow.

F. R. POWER.

On Feb. 10, 1916, Brother LOUIS WILLIAMS passed to his heavenly reward. Brother Williams was born in Scott County, Mississippi, on July 30, 1855, and was 61 years of age on July 30, 1915. In the year 1877 he was married to Miss Dora Sigrist, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. John H. Evans, of Collins, Miss. In the year 1878 he professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Piney Grove in a revival conducted by the Rev. R. A. Sibley, Sr. Brother Williams was a member of the M. E. Church, at Clarksburg, Miss., at the time of his death, and in which he served as a steward for several years. He was a Christian, a constant attendant upon the services of God, and a faithful steward. On the afternoon before his death he expressed himself to the writer as feeling well. On the following afternoon, the writer was impressed with this thought of David, "Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is; that I may know how frail I am." "And too, Lord, what wait I for? My hope is in thee."

Brother Williams leaves to mourn his decease a wife, two daughters, two sisters, two brothers—one of whom is Rev. J. E. Williams of Gloster, and a host of friends and relatives. May God's richest blessings rest upon and abide with those that are left behind! His friend and pastor,

JAMES WM. EVANS.

THE BILOXI MEETING.

By a Layman.

Some people have the idea that old-time shouting revivals have gone out of style, and especially in the town and city churches. A visit to the recent outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon Main Street Church, Biloxi, would have dissipated this idea from any mind.

With unmistakable guidance by the Spirit of God, Dr. H. F. Tolle, the pastor, called Brother Dan E. Kelly and his singer, Brother Kirby, to come and hold a meeting. They came, they saw, they conquered for the Lord. It was thought at the beginning that the meeting would last about two weeks; but such was its progress that it was practically impossible to bring it to a close until it had extended over four weeks, including five Sundays. Even then, many were anxious to continue another week.

The powerful sermons of Brother Kelly, filled with and directed by the Spirit, coupled with his irresistible personality, began the work from the first day, and, after the first service, the large auditorium was packed at each meeting. There was not a night service but every aisle was filled with two rows of chairs, every nook and corner contained chairs and every square foot in the gallery was full. At many of the evening meetings, the little red chairs were brought up from the Sunday school room and filled with children inside the altar and around the preacher in the pulpit.

Old-time Methodists, who were raised on camp-meetings said that they had not seen such a meeting in a quarter of a century. Such singing as we heard under the leadership of Brother Kirby, assisted by a faithful choir and a most faithful and competent organist in the person of Rev. H. W. Van Hook, one seldom listens to. Everybody sang, and sang with spirit.

One of the most valuable features of the meeting was the presence of many of the tourists, coming as they did from twenty or more States of the Union and all full of religion. They came in large numbers to the services and were active in the vital features of the meetings. Among these were several ministers from the Methodist Church who are wintering at Biloxi and who were in the thick of the fight. Their presence proved a benediction and an inspiration.

The testimony meetings were a revelation to most of us. There was no waiting and urging, but people rose to their feet in quick succession to tell about their love for the Savior. And the testimonies were not confined to the veteran saints of Christ's army. Schoolboys and girls, little children, new converts—everybody took part in these wonderful testimony meetings. As many as fifty or sixty people testified at one service and sometimes almost made it impossible for the preacher to give his message.

One hundred and fourteen people applied for church membership, ninety going to the Methodist Church and twenty-four to other denominations. Many of these were new converts, some being people who had held their letters out until they had almost forgotten any former connection with the Church. This number, however, does not nearly measure the results of the meeting, for the local church was strangely warmed and almost the entire membership received a great outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

It was inspiring and refreshing to see the members of the various denominations taking an active part in the services, all coming together under Brother Kelly's preaching, and, so far as their attitude toward the meeting was concerned, obliterating all denominational differences.

At the time of this writing, two prayer meetings have been held since the meeting. At one of these, there were 150 people present; and to the second, 175 came. At these two meetings, testimonies were given by a third of those present.

The happiest man in Biloxi is Dr. Tolle. His face is radiant, and well it may be, for his church has received a fresh baptism and is on fire with religion. Dr. Tolle enjoys the love of his entire membership and his access to the hearts of his people has made it possible for him to utilize the results of the series of meetings in bringing about still greater conquests for the Master. He is working to that end and permits no agency to go unused, and no opportunity to go unimproved.

Have Dark Hair And Look Young

Nobody can Tell when you Darken Gray, Faded Hair With Sage Tea.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, all ready to use, for about 50 cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and beautiful. This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

RESOLUTIONS OF APPRECIATION.

Whereas the Lord saw fit in his wisdom to call from our midst Brother HARDY DEAR; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we the members of the quarterly conference of the Harrisville charge, of the Southern Methodist Church, have lost a faithful and efficient member, but that we realize that our loss is his eternal gain, and hence submit without murmuring to Him who doeth all things well.

2. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our quarterly conference, a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and also a copy to Mrs. Anna Dear, his dear companion.

Signed: M. W. Porter, F. T. Beele, W. S. Harper, Committee.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

On January 27, 1916, the spirit of Col. J. M. JOHNSON returned to its Maker. Col. Johnson was one of the most beloved and respected men in this community. He was a member of the Acona Missionary Society and always urged us to be faithful to our duty. How we will miss him and his contribution! We could not wish him back, but some day in the near future, when we too are called to face our God, we hope to have a happy reunion with him. Could we but lift the veil and look upon the saints in the great and beautiful unknown—how bright their glories are—and see that God has called Brother Johnson to join that shining band, we would be more reconciled to his separation from us. Appreciating his worthy life and services, be it resolved by our Society:

1. That we bow in submission to our Heavenly Father, whom we believe to be too good to do wrong.

2. That we extend to the sorrowing relatives our sincere sympathy.

3. That copies of these resolutions be furnished the Lexington Advertiser and the New Orleans Christian Advocate, with a request for publication.

Signed: Mrs. J. L. McRae, Mrs. L. L. Hobbs.

THE CREOLES OF LOUISIANA,

the descendants of the original Spanish and French settlers, prided themselves upon their hair—and rightly they should—for it was they who first knew the secret of beautiful hair, the one great successful remedy for hair diseases and the greatest of all hair foods: La Creole Hair Dressing. The recipe was kept a profound secret by the race until about fifty years ago, but now you can reap the benefits of their early discoveries by using "La Creole" hair dressing, the very best dressing for keeping the hair fluffy, light and beautiful.

This wonderful preparation of the Creole race not only cleanses the scalp from all disease and filth, but also renews the life of the hair; makes it light and fluffy; restores to the hair its natural color and original lustre and supplies the hair with oil, food which it requires. No house should be without it. Ask your dealer for it. Price $1.00. Manufactured by VAN VLEET-MANSFIELD DRUG CO., Memphis, Tenn.

DOCTOR SAVES A BLACKSMITH.

Some time ago I was taken with Kidney trouble which caused me to give up my work as blacksmith. I lost my appetite and could not sleep, from the dreadful pains that would come over me, from my kidneys. I was treated by a physician for about three months. He could not help me, so finally he prescribed Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. I started taking same and before I had finished taking the first bottle I began to eat and sleep better than I had in a long time. I continued to take same until I was entirely cured and took on considerable weight.

I am now back working at my trade again and never felt better in my life. I appreciate what Swamp-Root has done for me and will recommend it to anyone who suffers with their kidneys. When physicians fail to give relief and then prescribe Swamp-Root they sure know of its merits. I am,

Very truly yours,
